This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 11 o'clock a. m. in the room of the Committee on the Judiciary, in the Capitol, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present, Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

The subcommittee had under consideration the following resolution, which was considered and agreed to in the Senate of the United States on September 19, 1918, in pursuance of which it was appointed:

[Senate Resolution 307.]

Whereas Honorable A. Mitchell Palmer, Custodian of Alien Property, on or about September fourteenth made the following statement:

"The facts will soon appear which will conclusively show that twelve or fifteen German brewers of America, in association with the United States Brewers' Association, furnished the money, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, to buy a great newspaper in one of the chief cities of the Nation; and its publisher, without disclosing whose money had bought that organ of public opinion, in the very Capital of the Nation, in the shadow of the Capitol itself, has been fighting the battle of the liquor traffic.

"When the traffic, doomed though it is, undertakes and seeks by these secret methods to control party nominations, party machinery, whole political parties, and thereby control the government of State and Nation, it is time the people know the truth.

"The organized liquor traffic of the country is a vicious interest because it has been unpatriotic, because it has been pro-German in its sympathies and its conduct. Around these great brewery organizations owned by rich men, almost all of them are of German birth and sympathy, at least before we entered the war, has grown up the societies, all the organizations of this country intended to keep young Germans immigrants from becoming real American citizens.

"It is around the sangerfests and sangerbunds and organizations of that kind, generally financed by the rich brewers, that the young Germans who come to America are taught to remember, first, the fatherland, and second, America";

And

Whereas it has been publicly and repeatedly charged against the United States Brewers' Association and allied brewing companies and interests that there is in the Department of Justice and in the office of a certain United States district attorney evidence showing:

That, the said United States Brewers' Association, brewing companies, and allied interests have in recent years made contributions to political campaigns on a scale without precedent in the political history of the country and in violation of the laws of the land;

That, in order to control legislation in State and Nation they have exacted pledges from candidates to office, including Congressmen and United States Senators, before election, such pledges being on file;

That, in order to influence public opinion to their ends they have heavily subsidized the public press and stipulated when contracting for advertising space with the newspapers that a certain amount be editorial space, the literary material for the space being provided from the brewers' central office in New York;

That, in order to suppress expressions of opinion hostile to their trade and political interests, they have set in operation an extensive system of boycotting of American manufacturers, merchants, railroads, and other interests;

That, for the furthering of their political enterprises, they have erected a political organization to carry out their purposes;

That they were allied to powerful suborganizations, among them the German-American Alliance, whose charter was revoked by the unanimous vote of Congress; the National Association of Commerce and Labor; and the Manufacturers and Dealers' Associations, and that they have their ramifications in other organizations apparently neutral in character;

That they have on file political surveys of States, counties, and districts tabulating the men and forces for and against them, and that they have paid large sums of money to citizens of the United States to advocate their cause and interests, including some in the Government employ;

That they have defrauded the Federal Government by applying to their political corruption funds money which should have gone to the Federal Treasury in taxes;

That they are attempting to build up in the country through the control of such organizations as the United States societies and by the manipulation of the foreign language press, a political influence which can be turned to one or the other party, thus controlling electoral results;

That they, or some of their organizations, have pleaded nolo contendre to charges filed against them and have paid fines aggregating large sums of money: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to call upon the Honorable A. Mitchell Palmer, Alien Property Custodian, and the Department of Justice and its United States district attorneys to produce the evidence and documents relating to the charges herein mentioned, and to subpoena any witnesses or documents relating thereto that it may find necessary, and to make a report of the results of such investigation and what is shown thereby to the Senate of the United States as promptly as possible.

In connection with the resolution, extracts from the Congressional Record of Thursday, September 19, 1918, page 11351, are here inserted in the record as follows:

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 307), heretofore printed in this record, was here read, immediately following which there appears in the Congressional Record, the following:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. I was engaged with another matter and I did not hear the whole of the resolution read. It seems to me that a resolution of such importance ought to go to a committee and let the committee consider it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will permit me, it recites various charges and facts that I think all Senators are acquainted with, and directs the Judiciary Committee or a subcommittee thereof to call upon Mr. Palmer and the Department of Justice for the facts and documents in their possession tending to sustain the charges. I take it that it will simply involve an investigation of documentary evidence, because I understand from information outside that whatever proof there is is of a deocumentary character. I have not even put in a provision which would involve any expense, because I understand Mr. Palmer can furnish the documents, and I think he can furnish them very promptly. These documents are available. So I do not think it will be a very complicated affair at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. The resolution does not provide for the appointment of a special committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Judiciary Committee will make the investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

As throwing light upon the origin of the above resolution, by direction of the subcommittee there is here printed in the record the following correspondence:

UNITED STATES SENATE.
COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
September 18, 1918.

Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to an address delivered by you at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 14th instant. In the course of your address, as published, the following appears:

"Let me say to you as an illustration of the lengths to which these interests will go, the facts will soon appear which will conclusively show that 12 or 15 German brewers of America, in association with the United States Brewers' Association, furnished the money, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, to buy a great newspaper in one of the chief cities of the nation; and its publisher, without disclosing whose money had bought that organ of public opinion, in the very capital of the nation, in the shadow of the Capitol itself, has been fighting the battle of the liquor traffic. That money was placed there under methods and by contrivances cleverly designed to keep secret forever who it was that put the money into that great newspaper and the purposes for which it was there.

"Now, I say to you that when this traffic, doomed though it is, undertakes and seeks by these secret methods to control party nominations, party machinery, whole political parties and thereby control the Government of State and nation, it is time that the people knew the truth, and it is time that we as Americans, as Pennsylvanians and as Democrats stand for the truth, no matter who gets hurt in the process.

"And I say another thing which is appropriate to be said at this time in this great hour of the country's emergency. I say another thing: That the organized liquor traffic of the country is a vicious interest because it has been unpatriotic; because it has been pro-German in its sympathies and its conduct. Why, you and I know perfectly well that it is around these great brewery organizations owned by rich men, almost all of them of German birth and sympathy, at least before we entered the war, that have grown up all the societies, all the organizations of this country intended to keep young German immigrants from becoming real American citizens. It is around the Saengerfests and the Saengerbunds and organizations of this kind, generally financed by the rich brewers, that the young Germans who come to America are taught to remember, first, the Fatherland and, second, America. You remember the exposure of the German Alliance, brought out first by Mr. Humes in Pittsburgh, and afterward in Congress, when the Senate of the United States revoked its charter because of its disloyal conduct. It was a German whisky alliance and everybody knows it. I know that these great interests have actually been willing to finance great newspapers for the purpose of spreading German propaganda and sentiments in this country."

You may recall that in January, 1918, a bill was introduced in the Senate to repeal the charter of the National German American Alliance. This bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and soon after its reference, a subcommittee, of which I was a member was appointed for the purpose of making such investigations as were deemed proper with a view to reporting upon the bill.

Hearings were had by the Committee and six or seven hundred pages of testimony were taken. During the hearings conducted by the Sub-Committee there was evidence tending to show that certain of the brewery and liquor interests of the United States were in close association with the National German American Alliance; that a corporation under the name of the National Association of Commerce and Labor, was formed by the brewery interests for the purpose of combating prohibition. Mr. Percy Andreae, who appeared before the sub-committee testified that during a period of three years, this organization collected approximately $600,000, and that a portion of it was paid to the National German American Alliance to be employed by it in opposing prohibitory movements in various states. The evidence before the committee showed that the National German American Alliance was very active in the State of Pennsylvania, and that there was a very close connection between its activities in that state and the liquor interests.

Some of the testimony submitted to the Committee tends to support some of the statements made by you and above referred to. In view of the testimony submitted to the Committee, your statement that twelve or fifteen German brewers of America, in association with the United States Brewers' Association, furnished several hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of securing a newspaper, is of more than passing interest. While the hearing upon the part of the sub-committee has been concluded and a report made to the full committee, I feel that any facts that you might care to give respecting the matters mentioned in the portion of your address above set forth would be of interest to the members of the sub-committee, if not to the country.

Accordingly, I am writing you, and will be glad to receive any information which you may care to give, or any statement which you may be willing to submit, concerning the matters to which reference is made.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM H. KING.

SEPTEMBER 19, 1918.

Hon. WM. H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the eighteenth instant, quoting a part of my speech at Harrisburg last Saturday, and suggesting that you will be glad to receive any information which I may care to give or any statement which I may be willing to submit concerning the matters to which reference was made in my address.

In order that you may understand the occasion and the reasons for my making the statement to which you refer, I quote somewhat more fully from a stenographic report of my remarks before the Democratic State Central Committee at Harrisburg on the fourteenth instant. In concluding the speech, devoted chiefly to the Pennsylvania political situation, I said:

Extracts from speech of A. Mitchell Palmer at meeting of Democratic State Committee, Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 14, 1918.]

What have we been fighting in Pennsylvania? What have we as the Democratic party tried to show? How have we justified our continued existence in this State? Why, the thing that we have been fighting is, and we have attempted to show, time after time, to the people of our State that the Republican party had made itself the willing tool of vicious interests, secretly seeking to control the Government through the agency of their political machine and deceiving the people into the belief that the Republican effort was a patriotic effort to govern instead of a selfish effort to accomplish the selfish and greedy ends of these special interests. We have shown how Senator Penrose, the leader of the Republican party, is the mere conduit through which these great interests have operated all these years, for the real powers behind the Penrose machine in Pennsylvania have been the triumvirate of interests represented by individuals well known in Pennsylvania who have joined together to support him and instruct him as to how the State should be operated, not in the public interests but in their interests. The powers behind Senator Penrose have been the protected tariff interests, the railroad interests and the organized liquor traffic. Those three have stood behind him and have had Pennsylvania in their grip these many years and the only earthly excuse that I have for being in State politics is to tell the people that that is true and fight against it to my dying day.

Now, thank God, the power of two of those interests has been broken and the power of the third will soon be destroyed. In these days of war, when the Government requires an unusual money support, systems of taxation have been invoked which have relegated to the discard the protective tariff proposition and the power of these great protected interests in Pennsylvania must speedily fade away before the new principles of government which will never protect them again in the future. And the exigencies of war and the necessity of rallying to the support of the Government every element of the population have also, thank God, freed us from the thraldom of the railroad interests of Pennsylvania. Ask Altoona how the men feel about it now! They are free for the first time since they have worked in the railroad shops and in offices and upon the trains. Now, my friends, shall we, when the Government at Washington has broken off the shackles of our people and freed us from this domination of the protected tariff interests and the railroad interests in Pennsylvania, shall we allow our party to be sold out and become the willing tool of the last remnant of the third, the dying liquor traffic?

That is the big question. Why, gentlemen, we know what it means. Mr. Berry talks about the liquor question upon its constitutional side and upon its moral side forcefully and well; but what concerns me now, particularly, is the political side of this liquor question in Pennsylvania and the Nation. I say that it has been a menace to our free institutions from a political standpoint. I have many friends who are in the liquor business, and I am not talking about individuals. I know many men engaged in the business, retail, wholesale, and otherwise, of high character, undoubted patriotism, and true Americanism, who are as good Democrats as we are. It is not about them that I speak but about the big men who control the destinies of the business as a whole in America; it is them that I indict. The steps to which they have gone to secretly control government by the secret ownership and control of political organization has been almost beyond belief. The extent to which they have gone to befoul public opinion, almost its very sources, in the newspapers of the country secretly has been almost beyond comprehension by the American citizens. Let me refresh your memory. I will not go back to 1910 any more. That is a page written upon the history of Pennsyvlania that all men now can read aright. Mr. Bonniwell takes me to task because I refused to follow Berry in that campaign and supported Grim. I admit it; and I have privately and publicly apologized to Mr. Berry and the Democracy many times since. You know that story; and again in 1914 you know the story, how Mr. McCormick and I went up and down this State trying to make our people awake to the real condition by asserting that the powers behind Senator Penrose were these great interests I have named, secretly trying to rob the people of their rights, because, gentlemen, if the liquor traffic or any other business comes out in the open and says, "We are for this man and against the other," and contributes its money and accounts for it under the law so that the public may know the truth, the public can take care of itself. But it is the secret character of their attack upon the people that is to be condemned; and in that campaign, though they did not believe us, though we sought to have investigations during the campaign, though we stood up in open meeting and told Pennsylvania the truth, it was not until months and months afterwards when the harm had been done to the people and they had been deceived that through the efforts of a fearless district attorney in Western Pennsylvania, acting under the orders of the Government at Washington, the truth was disclosed and the result was that over one hundred brewers of this organized liquor traffic were indicted by a Federal grand jury for crime in that election. Are we going to stop fighting that? Worse than that, in my judgment, is this thing this year, when, secretly, without allowing the people to know the truth, the organized liquor traffic of the State, through its old conduit, seeks to fool the people into the belief that the Democratic party is fighting for personal liberty; when, as a matter of fact, its candidate is the instrument and tool of this same liquor traffic. With the truth told, no harm can be done the people, and the truth must be told.

Let me say to you, as an illustration of the lengths to which these interests will go, the facts will soon appear which will conclusively show that twelve or fifteen German brewers of America, in association with the United States Brewers Association, furnished the money, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, to buy a great newspaper in one of the chief cities of the nation; and its publisher, without disclosing whose money had bought that organ of public opinion, in the very Capital of the Nation, in the shadow of the Capitol itself, has been fighting the battle of the liquor traffic.

That money was placed there under methods and by contrivances cleverly designed to keep secret forever who it was that put the money into that great newspaper and the purposes for which it was there. Now, I say to you that when this traffic doomed though it is, undertakes and seeks by these secret methods to control party nominations, party machinery, whole political parties, and thereby control the Government of State and Nation, it is time that the people know the truth, and it is time that we as Americans, as Pennsylvanians, and as Democrats stand for the truth no matter who gets hurt in the process.

The facts in reference to the brewers furnishing the money to buy a newspaper are shown by certain documents, the originals of which are in my possession, as follows:

(6) Six checks of C. W. Feigenspan, Trustee, payable to the order of the Federal Trust Company of Newark, New Jersey, and drawn on said Trust Company, bearing various dates from June 21, 1917 to January 25, 1918, amounting in the aggregate to $400,000.00.

The difference of $75,000 which you will note between these two items is the matter to which I called your attention at the last meeting, and for which no note has as yet been given to me.

I was called on the telephone the same afternoon that you were in New York, but the party stated that he would see you in Washington as his 'phone message to me was after the time of the leaving of your train.

Yours very truly,

C. W. FEIGENSPAN.

Statement of C. W. Feigenspan, covering deposit account at the Federal Trust Co., 740 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., such deposit account standing in the name of "C. W. Feigenspan, trustee":

NEWARK, N. J., July 30, 1918.

During the month of June 1917, to the best of my recollection, the matter of The Washington Times became of mutual interest to Mr. Arthur Brisbane and a number of brewers. Mr. Brisbane, as I have been informed by him, had an option to purchase The Washington Times from Mr. Frank A. Munsey for a sum which I recall as being $500,000. The terms of the sale, as I recall them were that $250,000 was to be paid down, the balance to be paid in installments of $50,000 each every six months.

In order to bring about the purchase of The Washington Times, I at various times advanced Mr. Brisbane funds through the Growing Circulation Corporation, a corporation which I believe is either owned or controlled by Mr. Brisbane. The aforesaid funds were advanced on the dates and in the amounts as hereinafter specified, and in the following manner: I first drew a check or checks on the account at the Federal Trust Company which stood in my name as trustee, such check or checks being payable to the order of the Federal Trust Company, and the Federal Trust Company then would in turn deliver to me a treasurer's check of the Federal Trust Company payable to bearer which treasurer's checks I in turn delivered to Mr. Brisbane personally.

The amounts so advanced to Mr. Brisbane and the dates thereof are as follows:

June 21, 1917	$25,000
June 22, 1917	235,000
June 28, 1917	35,000
August 3, 1917	55,000
November 26, 1917	25,000
	375,000

A statement of the relations which existed in connection with this transaction are more particularly set forth in a letter which I wrote to Mr. Brisbane, dated June 29, 1917, which reads as follows:

"I write this note to define a business arrangement existing between us. I and a number of my friends all of whom I am authorized to represent, have for years felt very strongly that the public welfare and our own industry—because of your well-known convictions—would be benefited by your personal ownership of a newspaper.

"We agreed to supply you with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) for the purchase and establishment of a newspaper by you. We have, at this time, supplied two hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars ($295,000), although I do not enter into any legal obligation to do so, on behalf of myself or others. The understanding of myself and my friends with you, of which understanding this is a memorandum is as follows:

"The money, which we gladly contribute to your enterprise, is to be disposed of, absolutely at your discretion for the purchase, maintenance and establishment of a daily newspaper.

"It is understood that, after a period of five years, you will repay to me and my associates, at your discretion and convenience, on account of the principal, so much of the profits as may be derived from such newspaper as may, in your judgment, be taken out of the business without interfering with its proper operation and development; and that you shall be under no liability whatsoever for repayment of the sums contributed other than out of such profits. It is understood that no interest shall be paid upon this money, our claim to be satisfied in full upon the repayment of the principal without interest.

"You may, of course, repay part or all of the principal at any time and in any manner that you may choose, and our agreement with you shall not be considered as giving me or my associates any interest whatsoever in said enterprise. Should you sell the paper at any time, you will repay to us, up to the full amount of the principal that we may have advanced, any sums received by you in payment for the paper."

The amounts contributed to the fund, and out of which I made the advances to Mr. Brisbane, and the names of the contributors to such fund, are more particularly set forth in a letter dated April 1, 1918, which I wrote to Mr. Robert Crain at Washington, D. C., to which last mentioned letter reference is hereby made.

The only evidence of the foregoing indebtedness which I hold is a note of the Gro ing Circulation Corporation, dated June 21, 1917, for $300,000, upon which there w advanced the sum of $275,000 only, and a memorandum, dated at Newark, N. J., June 21, 1917, signed by Mr. Arthur Brisbane. Up to the present date I have recive no payment on account of the foregoing indebtedness.

(Sigd.) C. W. FEIGENSPAN.

Witness:

July 30, 1918.

Dated New York, July 31, 1918.

I have read the foregoing statement and know the contents thereof and veri believe the same to be true.

(Sigd.) GEORGE EHRET, Jr.

In my Harrisburg address I further said:

"And I say another thing which is appropriate to be said at this time in this gre hour of the country's emergency. I say another thing: That the organized liqu traffic of the country is a vicious interest because it has been unpatriotic; because has been pro-German in its sympathies and its conduct. Why, you and I know pe fectly well that it is around these great brewery organizations owned by rich me almost all of them of German birth and sympathy, at least before we entered the wa that has grown up the societies, all the organizations of this country intended to ke young German emigrants from becoming real American citizens. It is around t saengerfests and the saengerbunds and organizations of that kind, generally financ by the rich brewers, that the young Germans who come to America are taught firs the Fatherland, and second, America. You remember the exposure of the Germa Alliance, brought out first by Mr. Humes in Pittsburgh, and afterwards in Congre when the Senate of the United States revoked the charter because of its disloyal con duct. It was a German whisky alliance and everybody knows it. I know that thes great interests have actually been willing to finance great newspapers for the purpos of spreading German propaganda and sentiments in this country."

As bearing upon the matter to which reference is there made, I submit the attache copies of letters written by Alexander Konta, which speak for themselves. Copies o these letters have been identified as correct by Mr. Konta.

Yours truly,

A. MITCHELL PALMER.

Capt. HANS TAUSCHER,
320 Broadway, New York City.

MY FRIEND TAUSCHER: I wish to acquaint you confidentially with a matter con cerning Dr. Dernburg and myself, in which I am sure I need not emphasize my wish for your sympathetic attention and cooperation.

The fact is I am unable to understand his august Excellency, nor why he should consider himself immune from contempt for not only ignoring the conventional courtesies but even the common decencies in his relations with gentlemen.

At a dinner lately, being seated beside Dr. Dernburg, he spoke to me regarding the purchase of a newspaper, and after listening attentively to his views, I promised at his request to write him a letter outlining the newspaper situation. I gave a good deal of thought to writing this letter, which was absolutely confidential, and set forth facts which I should be very much annoyed to have come under the notice of anyone upon whose discretion, I could not rely absolutely. I have received no answer to the letter—not even an acknowledgment of it.

Now, while I hesitate to put you to any trouble, my dear Captain Tauscher, this matter has annoyed me greatly, and as I have determined that I shall not write Dernburg again, I am forced to call upon you. I should be deeply obliged if you could ascertain whether my letter has been received at all and what disposition has been made of it. I must again repeat that it was written in deepest confidence and contains inside facts with which I would not have my name associated on account of my close and intimate associations with the press of New York. It may be just possible that you could recover the original copy for me. I need not say that any service you can do for me in the matter will be deeply appreciated.

Whatever may be the reputation and ability by reason of which Dr. Dernburg occupies his position, I for one have concluded from personal observation that the man is unpopular and that he has done little or nothing to influence the American people. It would, of course, be a great pleasure to me to be shown that I am wrong in this, but I doubt if it is possible.

Believe me, my dear Tauscher, with kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER KONTA.

MARCH 31, 1915.

Dr. BERNARD DERNBURG,
Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York City.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: In re the purchase and publication of a daily newspaper in this country in the interests of Germany and the German government, I beg leave to submit to your Excellency the following report, in pursuance of our recent conversations.

The expenses of the war news service, combined with a considerable decrease of advertising owing to business depression, have seriously affected the financial status of several papers in this city, already made sufficiently precarious by the excessive competition of the last fifteen years or so. With the standard price of the American newspapers down to one penny, they have shown a serious loss on each copy sold, which has had to be met entirely out of advertising profits. The consequence has been, and this state of affairs continues, that most of the daily papers in New York have been published at an annual loss which has had to be met by constant loans in Wall Street, which, as a rule, is content to take its profits indirectly—in abstention from hostility to its doings, if not in positive support of them.

In the field of the evening newspapers conditions are better. In fact, the morning papers publishing also evening editions look to the latter to cover their losses and show a profit. Thus it is the "Evening Journal" that earns much money, whereas the "New York American" is run at a loss. The Morning "World" comes out about even, according to common report, but the "Evening World" prospers. The morning "Sun" has been a heavy loser for many years; under its new management it has spent money so recklessly that it is seriously embarrassed, but the "Evening Sun" is an increasingly sound business proposition.

What is true of the morning papers that issue no evening editions is also true of the independent evening papers; that is, these that have no connection with a morning paper. "The Globe" has cost its proprietors considerably more than $1,000,000 already. "The Evening Mail" has borrowed so much money that it can never show a real profit. "The Evening Post" is in desperate straits. This paper, undoubtedly the ablest newspaper in America, and probably also in the English-speaking world, is published at three cents. Yet the cost of its excellence is so great, and its circulation so small (19,000 copies daily) that it simply cannot make both ends meet.

Leaving out of the reckoning the "Herald" with its "Evening Telegram" and the "Tribune" which is part of one of the great fortunes of America, and which is the hobby of the young and energetic son of its chief owner, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid; the "Times," which prospers, and the "World" which, like the "Tribune" is part of an enormously rich estate, we have in the morning field:

The Sun
The Press
The Morning Telegraph
The New York Commercial.

Whether "The Sun" is actually for sale I have carefully refrained from inquiring into before the time for action is ripe. Certain it is that Mr. Reick made a despairing pilgrimage to Europe last summer in the wake of a rich American in search of $...000,000 which he failed to get.

The drawback of the "Sun" is that it is not a member of the Associated Press, and consequently must rely for its news upon its own news service, the so-called Laffan service. This paper, I need not say, has an exceptionally high reputation for its foreign news.

The "Press" changed hands less than a year ago, and its old owner, was so delighted to get it off his hands that he made his managing editor a present of $10,000 out of the purchase price. Whether the new ownership has grown tired of its bargains yet remains to be seen.

The "Morning Telegraph" can be bought at any moment. This is a five-cent paper which has endeavored to be a sort of New York "Gaulois." It has no standing as an authority on foreign affairs; in fact, its field is deliberately local, and confined chiefly to the gay life of the town, sports, etc. It would have to be remodelled from beginning to end.

The "New York Commercial" is a mere skeleton of a newspaper, which has tried for years to compete with the "Commercial Advertiser." It has no Associated Press service, and has already lost $1,000,000. In 1907 the owners were on the point of stopping its publication altogether. I mention it only as a last resort.

In the evening field we have, as already said:
The Evening Post
The Evening Mail
The Globe

The first of these would give its new management at once an influence that can hardly be computed. Notwithstanding its small circulation, it reaches all parts of the country, the editors of the provincial press accepting it as an unimpeachable authority, and following its lead. A change from 3 cents to 1 cent per copy would be necessary, and a heavy loss would have to be looked for at first.

The price quoted for "The Evening Mail" by its editor, who controls the stock is $1,000,000; whether control of the "Globe" can be had at all is a matter for cautious inquiry. Of course, an evening paper can be turned into a morning paper, if preferred. Certain it is that generally speaking, and with the exception of the "Evening Post," the morning press has far more influence on political opinion in this country than have the evening papers, which are held to be more read by women. Hence their superiority in the advertising field.

In all this I have assumed that the purpose is to buy a paper already existent, and not to found a new one. The chief advantages of this, aside from the invaluable Associated Press franchise, which inhered in the paper however often it changes hands,—the chief advantages of the purchase of a paper already in existence, however precarious its state, must be obvious. There is a name already familiar; there is an organization in working order, easily remodeled; there is a complete plant—all advantages to be had for much less than it would cost to found a new paper, organize its own news service, find its editorial and business staff, establish connections with advertisers, newsdealers, etc., etc.

It is perhaps little to the purpose now to reflect upon what might have been done twenty years ago. One of the most sensible schemes then proposed was the purchase of the "Staats-Zeitung" and its conversion into an American paper. The stock of this paper is rapidly changing hands just now, but who or what is behind this I have been unable to find out. The present editor declares that he still has the controlling interest safely in his hands. Whether the paper will be able to retain the circulation which it has regained since the beginning of the war is open to serious doubt. It might be well to bear the "Staats-Zeitung" in mind for future consideration. Some ten years ago there was much talk of the purchase of the "Tribune." This is now out of the question.

In ordinary circumstances a loss of from $250,000 to $500,000 per year would have to be provided for, but I believe that, owing to my connection with certain interests in this country, this could be greatly reduced, if not wiped out altogether by attention to newspaper management.

Prohibition is seriously occupying the minds of the brewers and distillers of this country. It is not a question of temperance, which they advocate, but of the actual prohibition by law of the sale of beers, wines and liquors. A paper that would not be hostile to the personal liberty of the citizen to drink in moderation what he pleased could count upon the powerful support of the brewers and distillers, who command almost illimitable capital, and what is more, means of giving the paper in question a circulation large enough to attract advertisers. Add to this a discreet appeal to every German society in the country for support by its members, and we could easily count upon a national daily circulation of 500,000 copies. This, to be sure, would be a circulation among German and German-Americans, whereas what is wanted is native American readers, but if this German circulation is built up discreetly as I suggest, the man in the street will only be impressed by numbers. A large circulation widely advertised would impress the native American and lead him to take the paper. And, meanwhile, a deficit would be changed into a profit to be used for further propaganda.

The interests to which I refer have repeatedly consulted me on this very subject of a newspaper not hostile to their industry, and I know that they would be more than ready to give their support to the plan now in hand.

This is a general survey of the field. Financially the moment is favorable to the plan under discussion. The newspapers have suffered heavily from the war, and from some of them the load is beginning to be too heavy. Politically the transaction would have to be handled with the utmost delicacy. No suspicion of the influences behind it should be allowed to reach the public. And the newspaper world is like a sounding-board.

I shall be delighted to keep myself at Your Excellency's disposal in case you should desire further facts.

(The proceedings of the subcommittee on this day were in executive session, and at 1.15 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 11 o'clock a. m., in the room of the Committee on the Judiciary in the Capitol, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Upon the adjournment of the subcommittee on September 27, pursuant to the direction of the subcommittee I wrote to the Attorney General of the United States the following letter:

SEPTEMBER 27, 1918.

Hon. T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: On behalf of the subcommittee appointed in pursuance to Senate Resolution 307, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, I have the honor to request that you send to the Committee all documents and evidence in the possession of your Department, or in the hands of United States District Attorneys, relating to the charges therein mentioned.

Very truly yours,

LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman of Subcommittee.

To this letter, at this date, no response has been received.

I wrote to Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, Alien Property Custodian, the following letter:

SEPTEMBER 27, 1918.

Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Alien Property Custodian, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PALMER: On behalf of the subcommittee appointed in pursuance to Senate Resolution 307, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, I have the honor to request that you send to the Committee all documents and evidence in your possession relating to the charges therein mentioned.

Very truly, yours,

LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman of Subcommittee.

In response to this communication Mr. Palmer has sent to me, as chairman of the subcommittee, certain documents, which will be printed in the record at this point.

(The documents referred to are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

ROBERT CRAIN, Esq.,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR BOB: All told, I have received the following amounts from the following gentlemen:

George Ehret	$50,000
C. Feigenspan	25,000
Julius Liebmann	25,000
J. C. G. Hupfel	7,500
Jacob Ruppert	50,000
Jos. E. Uihlein	50,000
Edward Landsberg	15,000
Reuter & Co.	15,000
A. J. Houghton Co.	10,000
William Hamm	10,000
G. Pabst	50,000
Fred Miller Brewing Co. (shares for this check to be made up as follows: E. G. Miller, $3,000; F. A. Miller, $3,000; E. P. Miller, $3,000; Mrs. C. A. Miller, $3,000; Mrs. E. K. John, $3,000)	15,000
C. Schmidt & Sons	5,000
F. A. Poth & Sons	15,000
Berner & Engel	10,000
U. S. B. A.	30,000
U. S. B. A., adv.	25,000
Total	407,500
Total advanced to the Growing Circulation Co.	375,000
Difference, cash on hand, including 25,000 advanced by the advertising fund	32,500

I hold a memorandum in the shape of a note, given to me by the Growing Circulation Company a copy of which is enclosed. The difference of $75,000 which you will note between these two items is the matter to which I called your attention at the last meeting, and for which no note has as yet been given to me.

I was called on the telephone the same afternoon that you were in New York, but the party stated that he would see you in Washington as his phone message to me was after the time of the leaving of your train.

Yours very truly,

Statement of C. W. Feigenspan, covering deposit account at the Federal Trust Co., 730 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., such deposit account standing in the name of "C. W. Feigenspan, trustee":

NEWARK, N. J., July 30, 1918.

During the month of June, 1917, to the best of my recollection, the matter of the Washington Times became of mutual interest to Mr. Arthur Brisbane and a number of brewers. Mr. Brisbane, as I have been informed by him, had an option to purchase the Washington Times from Mr. Frank A. Munsey for a sum which I recall as being $500,000. The terms of the sale, as I recall them, were that $250,000 was to be paid down, the balance to be paid in installments of $50,000 each every six months.

In order to bring about the purchase of the Washington Times, I at various times advanced Mr. Brisbane funds through the Growing Circulation Corporation, a corporation which I believe is either owned or controlled by Mr. Brisbane. The aforesaid funds were advanced on the dates and in the amounts as hereinafter specified, and in the following manner: I first drew a check or checks on the account at the Federal Trust Co., which stood in my name as trustee, such check or checks being payable to the order of the Federal Trust Co., and the Federal Trust Co. then would in turn deliver to me a treasurer's check of the Federal Trust Co. payable to bearer, which treasurer's checks I in turn delivered to Mr. Brisbane personally.

The amounts so advanced to Mr. Brisbane, and the dates thereof, are as follows:

June 21, 1917	$25, 00
June 22, 1917	235, 00
June 28, 1917	35, 00
Aug. 3, 1917	55, 00
Nov. 26, 1917	25, 00
	375, 00

A statement of the relations which existed in connection with this transaction ar more particularly set forth in a letter which I wrote to Mr. Brisbane, dated June 29 1917, which reads as follows:

"I write this note to define a business arrangement existing between us. I and number of my friends all of whom I am authorized to represent, have for years fel very strongly that the public welfare and our own industry—because of your well known convictions—would be benefited by your personal ownership of a newspaper

"We agreed to supply you with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000 for the purchase and establishment of a newspaper by you. We have, at this time supplied two hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars ($295,000) and we shall, a soon as possible, supply the balance—namely, two hundred and five thousand dollar ($205,000), although I do not enter into any legal obligation to do so, on behalf of my self or others. The understanding of myself and my friends with you, of which understanding this is a memorandum, is as follows:

"The money, which we gladly contribute to your enterprise, is to be disposed of absolutely at your discretion, for the purchase, maintenance and establishment of daily newspaper.

"It is understood that, after a period of five years, you will repay to me and my associates, at your discretion and convenience, on account of the principal, so much of the profits as may be derived from such newspaper as may, in your judgment, be taken out of the business without interfering with its proper operation and develop ment; and that you shall be under no liability whatsoever for repayment of the sum contributed other than out of such profits. It is understood that no interest shal be paid upon this money, our claim to be satisfied in full upon the repayment of the principal without interest.

"You may, of course, repay part or all of the principal at any time and in any manner that you may choose, and our agreement with you shall not be considered a giving me or my associates any interest whatsoever in said enterprise. Should you sell the paper at any time, you will repay to us, up to the full amount of the principa that we may have advanced, any sums received by you in payment for the paper."

The amounts contributed to the fund, and out of which I made the advances t Mr. Brisbane, and the names of the contributors to such fund, are more particularly set forth in a letter dated April 1, 1918, which I wrote to Mr. Robert Crain at Wash ington, D. C., to which last mentioned letter reference is hereby made.

The only evidence of the foregoing indebtedness which I hold is a note of the Growing Circulation Corporation, dated June 21, 1917, for $300,000, upon which there was advanced the sum of $275,000 only, and a memorandum, dated at Newark, N. J. on June 21, 1917, signed by Mr. Arthur Brisbane. Up to the present date I have received no payment on account of the foregoing indebtedness.

GEORGE EHRET, JR.

Senator OVERMAN. The following letter was received by me on September 29 from Mr. Arthur Brisbane:

THE WASHINGTON TIMES,
Washington, D. C., September 28, 1918.

MY DEAR SIR: It is stated in the Washington Star that an investigation ordered by the Senate into the affairs of my newspaper, the Washington Times, and other matters may be conducted without the summoning of witnesses on the part of the Judiciary Subcommittee of which you are chairman.

I request most earnestly that you allow me to appear before your committee and answer charges that are implied in a letter from A. Mitchell Palmer made public through the Senate and the Senate resolution.

The documents published, with which my newspaper has been connected, included a letter written in 1915 by a man whom I have not seen and from whom I have not heard in eight years, a letter having no connection with me, my own newspaper or any newspaper with which I am connected.

This letter has been used by newspapers throughout the United States as basis of a charge, preposterous on the face of it, since my newspaper is published at Washington where every Government agent has seen it, that the Washington Times or I, its sole owner, have been guilty of sympathy for a nation with which the United States is at war.

I request that you give me a hearing, and an opportunity to testify under oath to the following facts which I can prove:

First, that I am the sole owner of the Washington Times, absolutely in control of its management, and policies, from the day I purchased it.

Second, that from the day I bought it, the Washington Times has been, to borrow the expression of a Senator, "100 per cent American, and 500 per cent anti-German."

The accusation against me has been reprinted and magnified in hundreds of newspapers in this country. Its publicity being partly due to the Senate resolution, I hope that the Judiciary Subcommittee will not refuse me an opportunity to reply publicly to false accusations thus publicly made.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR BRISBANE.

Hon. L. S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate.

To that letter I replied as follows:

SEPTEMBER 30, 1918.

ARTHUR BRISBANE, Esq.,
The Washington Times, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your September 28 letter, I have to say that the Judiciary Subcommittee has not yet determined upon the exact course it will pursue in the investigation committed to its charge. In due time the committee will settle what witnesses should be examined and the course and scope of the examination. In the meantime, however, I suggest that you may, if you see fit, send to me, as chairman of the committee, all articles printed in the Washington Times under its present management which have direct relation to the war or to our controversies with Germany and other enemy countries.

The above papers if furnished now will probably facilitate the progress of the investigation.

Very truly,

LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman of Subcommittee.

In response to this letter Mr. Brisbane has sent to the subcommittee what he says are all of the articles on this subject which have appeared in the Washington Times since it became his property. His reply, transmitting these articles, will be inserted in the record at this point.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full as follows:)

THE WASHINGTON TIMES,
Washington, D. C., September 30, 1918.

MY DEAR SIR: I thank you for your letter just received suggesting that I may send you as chairman of the Committee, all articles printed in the Washington Times under its present management which have direct relation to the war or to our controversies with Germany and other enemy countries.

I accordingly present herewith, by the messenger who brings me your letter, 130 editorials and signed articles written by me since I became owner of the Washington Times. They include ALL of the articles of any kind relating to the war or to our controversies with Germany or other enemy countries, since the Times has been my property.

The first copy of the Washington Times under my ownership was published June 27th. The first editorial on the subject of the war, suggesting and urging the use of dynamite from flying machines behind the German lines, a demand that has been constantly repeated since, was published in the Times July 2nd, 1917, five days after I had become the owner of the Times.

I thank you for permitting me to put in the hands of the Committee the articles that on their face answer the charge of disloyalty that has been unofficially but very widely made against the Washington Times and against me as its owner, in thousands of newspapers in the United States.

Yours sincerely,

A. BRISBANE.

P. S.—I send with this also all the cartoons, published in the Washington Times under its present management which have direct relation with the war or our controversies with enemy countries. Cartoons are often more efficient than written words in forming public opinion.

Many of these cartoons and articles have been cut from the bound files of the Times. If they could properly, without inconvenience, be returned at the close of your investigation, I should be glad.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Senator OVERMAN. The question we have to decide now is whether, in the absence of Senator Sterling, and of Senator King, who I understand is sick, we should go on with the matter before the subcommittee, or what we can do before we hear from the Attorney General.

Senator WOLCOTT. If I may suggest, I think we should have the assistance of the full subcommittee when we proceed. Senator King presumably will be able to attend the committee meetings soon, but Senator Sterling will be absent for some time. He proved himself a very valuable member of another committee of which I was a member, and I think he should be here.

Senator OVERMAN. The scope of our investigation under the provisions of the resolution is a matter which was discussed at our last meeting, and it is a matter for the consideration of the full subcommittee. The question is whether we should now go on, or take an adjournment subject to the call of the chairman.

Senator NELSON. One objection to going on now is that if we do so, when the other members come back we will have to go all over it again.

Senator OVERMAN. The Attorney General has not yet said whether he would send us the documents or not. As I understand, these documents called for by the resolution are very numerous, and it would take us a long time to go over all those records. I expect it would be best for us to employ some one to go over them and cull out those that are material here, in regard to disloyalty.

Senator NELSON. It would be well for us to have a man to go over them and brief them for us, and call attention to those we ought to see.

Senator OVERMAN. I think this is as far as we can go this morning. We will have printed such documents as we have, and await the reply of the Attorney General. We do not want to make two bites at a cherry, and when we have all the documentary evidence before us then we can determine as to the matter of examining witnesses and as to the scope of the investigation.

Senator NELSON. I think, if there is such a great volume of documents, it would be a good plan to have them briefed for us. Perhaps the Attorney General could put a man to work on that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

Senator OVERMAN. What is your name?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Antisaloon League.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Inasmuch as the colloquy between Senator Jones, the proponent of this resolution, and Senator Fletcher, is to be printed in this record, would it be appropriate for Senator Jones to make a statement to the committee as to the scope of the resolution as he understood it, and what he intended it to cover?

Senator OVERMAN. If Senator Jones desires, he can come before the committee any time he wants to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senate is not in session, could that be done by written communication?

Senator OVERMAN. No; if Senator Jones desires to make a statement, let him come before the committee and make it.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought, inasmuch as the question had been raised on his statement——

Senator OVERMAN. That question is not before us now. I have put in the record a quotation showing what took place in the Senate, and the resolution itself.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. We will determine later whom we will hear; and Senator Jones is a Member of the Senate, and if he wants to explain his resolution or say anything at all, he has a right to do it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, there are two or three matters that have about them an atmosphere of indefiniteness now. There is the probability of the absence of members of the subcommittee; there is the probability of Congress taking a recess, and there is the probability of the Attorney General sending us a vast mass of documents that will have to be analyzed. In view of those uncertainties, I do not see why we should go on at this particular time, and I do not know what date we should adjourn to. Therefore I suggest that we adjourn subject to the order of the chairman.

Senator NELSON. I second the montion.

(The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.)

Senator OVERMAN. If we find that Congress is going to stay here in session, we will go on with the investigation; and provided the Attorney General sends those documents here, I want to have authority from the subcommittee to employ someone to brief them and find out what is in them. I suppose there will be thousands of them.

Senator NELSON. I move that the chairman of the subcommittee be authorized to employ a man to examine those documents in the Department of Justice and brief them for us. He may not send them up here, but he may have them down there.

Senator OVERMAN. My understanding is that these documents are in Pittsburgh and in other places in the country, in the hands of the different district attorneys, and, of course, he will have to get them together and in a measure look over them.

Senator NELSON. He will have to get them together at the Department of Justice from his different attorneys?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. I will see the Attorney General personally and see if he will have them briefed for us, if he is going to send them to us at all.

Senator NELSON. Let him have them briefed, and then if he is going to send them up here——

Senator OVERMAN. We can ask for just what we want.

Senator NELSON. Yes; after he has briefed them.

The amounts so advanced to Mr. Brisbane, and the dates thereof, are as follows:

June 21, 1917	$25,000
June 22, 1917	235,000
June 28, 1917	35,000
Aug. 3, 1917	55,000
Nov. 26, 1917	25,000
	375,000

A statement of the relations which existed in connection with this transaction are more particularly set forth in a letter which I wrote to Mr. Brisbane, dated June 29, 1917, which reads as follows:

"I write this note to define a business arrangement existing between us. I and a number of my friends all of whom I am authorized to represent, have for years felt very strongly that the public welfare and our own industry—because of your well-known convictions—would be benefited by your personal ownership of a newspaper.

"We agreed to supply you with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) for the purchase and establishment of a newspaper by you. We have, at this time, supplied two hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars ($295,000) and we shall, as soon as possible, supply the balance—namely, two hundred and five thousand dollars ($205,000), although I do not enter into any legal obligation to do so, on behalf of myself or others. The understanding of myself and my friends with you, of which understanding this is a memorandum, is as follows:

"The money, which we gladly contribute to your enterprise, is to be disposed of, absolutely at your discretion, for the purchase, maintenance and establishment of a daily newspaper.

"It is understood that, after a period of five years, you will repay to me and my associates, at your discretion and convenience, on account of the principal, so much of the profits as may be derived from such newspaper as may, in your judgment, be taken out of the business without interfering with its proper operation and development; and that you shall be under no liability whatsoever for repayment of the sums contributed other than out of such profits. It is understood that no interest shall be paid upon this money, our claim to be satisfied in full upon the repayment of the principal without interest.

"You may, of course, repay part or all of the principal at any time and in any manner that you may choose, and our agreement with you shall not be considered as giving me or my associates any interest whatsoever in said enterprise. Should you sell the paper at any time, you will repay to us, up to the full amount of the principal that we may have advanced, any sums received by you in payment for the paper."

The amounts contributed to the fund, and out of which I made the advances to Mr. Brisbane, and the names of the contributors to such fund, are more particularly set forth in a letter dated April 1, 1918, which I wrote to Mr. Robert Crain at Washington, D. C., to which last mentioned letter reference is hereby made.

The only evidence of the foregoing indebtedness which I hold is a note of the Growing Circulation Corporation, dated June 21, 1917, for $300,000, upon which there was advanced the sum of $275,000 only, and a memorandum, dated at Newark, N. J., on June 21, 1917, signed by Mr. Arthur Brisbane. Up to the present date I have received no payment on account of the foregoing indebtedness.

In response to this letter Mr. Brisbane has sent to the subcommittee what he says are all of the articles on this subject which have appeared in the Washington Times since it became his property. His reply, transmitting these articles, will be inserted in the record at this point.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full as follows:)

THE WASHINGTON TIMES,
Washington, D. C., September 30, 1918.

MY DEAR SIR: I thank you for your letter just received suggesting that I may send you as chairman of the Committee, all articles printed in the Washington Times under its present management which have direct relation to the war or to our controversies with Germany and other enemy countries.

I accordingly present herewith, by the messenger who brings me your letter, 130 editorials and signed articles written by me since I became owner of the Washington Times. They include ALL of the articles of any kind relating to the war or to our controversies with Germany or other enemy countries, since the Times has been my property.

The first copy of the Washington Times under my ownership was published June 27th. The first editorial on the subject of the war, suggesting and urging the use of dynamite from flying machines behind the German lines, a demand that has been in his possession relating, of course, especially to the charges made by him; and it also authorizes the Committee to call upon the Department of Justice and its United States district attorneys to produce the evidence and documents in their possession, especially relating to the second phase of the inquiry as disclosed in the preamble. But, of course, each of these agencies is directed to produce the evidence and documents in its possession relating to any of the charges whether under the first "whereas" or the second "whereas." And to leave no doubt as to the unlimited scope of the Committee in securing evidence to sustain or disprove the charges recited in the preamble, the resolution further authorizes the Committee or Sub-Committee to subpœna "any witnesses or documents relating thereto that it may find necessary."

It seems to me there can be no question at all but that the Committee is fully authorized to subpœna any witness or document that it has reason to believe will furnish evidence or testimony relating to the various charges set forth in the resolution. Whether or not a given document, or such testimony, tends to prove the charges set forth in the resolution; of course, is to be decided by the Committee. But if any evidence or testimony is secured or presented which is relevant to these charges, I respectfully submit that the Committee is fully authorized to secure and consider the same. I have no doubt it will do it.

I believe that the documentary evidence alone that will be secured, if called for, under this resolution will fully establish the following facts:

1. That the United States Brewers' Association, individual Brewers and corporations have financed newspapers in the interest of the liquor traffic, and deceived the public as to the secret arrangements made for money loaned, which in some cases was to be repaid only at the discretion of the newspaper owner out of the profits of the paper, if there should be any profits. Evidence of this may be obtained from the Custodian of Alien Property, A. Mitchell Palmer, and no doubt evidence of other papers will come to the Committee or information from which it can get further proof.

2. That the United States Brewers' Association and certain individual Brewers who helped to finance certain newspapers, advocating the liquor traffic, also contributed to the National German-American Alliance and financed the publication of its official organ, "The Official Bulletin," after the sinking of the Lusitania and other similar German atrocities. Evidence of this will be found in the Official Bulletin, the organ of the National German Alliance. Copies of this Bulletin are in the possession of Gustavus Ohlinger, of the General Staff Military and Intelligence Branch of the War Department.

3. That the United States Brewers' Association and certain individual Brewers and Brewery Corporations have been convicted, plead guilty or plead nolo contendere to charges of violation of Federal corrupt practices act and other criminal laws and paid several hundreds of thousands of dollars in fines and penalties. Evidence of this is obtainable from the Attorney General of Texas, the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh and other sources.

4. That the National German-American Alliance was financed in part by the United States Brewers' Association and individual Brewers and liquor dealers; that the National German-American Alliance through state and local organizations and societies has carried on a propaganda which hindered the assimilation of Germans by America; promoted German Kultur and German ideals to the detriment of the United States; carried on political activities in the interest of the German Alliance; attempted to force compulsory teaching of German in the elementary public schools of the United States; proclaimed that our Government was a failure and that a constitutional monarchy was preferable to it; discouraged war loans to our allies and hindered the war program of the United States. Evidence of this will be found in the Official Bulletin, the organ of the National German-American Alliance. Copies of this Bulletin are in the possession of Gustavus Ohlinger, of the General Staff Military and Intelligence Branch of the War Department, in the documents in the United States District Attorney's office at Pittsburgh and in the office of the Attorney General of Texas and persons whose names will be given the Committee if desired.

5. That the United States Brewers' Association through organizations whose identity has been concealed, such as the so-called National Association of Commerce and Labor, Manufacturers and Dealers' Association, Business Mens' Association, Tax Payers League, Home Rule and other organizations, have made political surveys relating to the attitude of candidates for office and how they could be influenced and controlled in the interest of the liquor traffic. Evidence of this will be found among the documents in the control of the Attorney General of Texas, Hon. B. F. Looney and among the documents in the United States District Attorney's office at Pittsburgh.

6. That the United States Brewers' Association, State Brewers' Associations and allied liquor organizations have employed men to organize and dominate labor organizations in the interests of the liquor traffic. Evidence of this will be found in the office of the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh, Pa.

7. That the United States Brewers' Association and individual Brewers and liquor organizations have by indirect methods attempted to subsidize certain newspapers, magazines, periodicals and publications, many of the articles being first censored in the office of the United States Brewers' Association before being printed.

8. That the United States Brewers' Association and individual Brewers and liquor dealers have contributed large sums of money in political campaigns to committees and candidates and exacted pledges of support in return for such financial help. The evidence of this will be found in the United States District Attorney's office at Pittsburgh, Pa., in the Attorney General's office in Texas and from many other sources.

9. That the Brewers who have contributed largely to political campaigns in violation of laws, have deducted similar amounts from their tax returns and defrauded the Government out of sums of money due the Government in payment of taxes. This evidence is in the United States District Attorney's office in Pittsburgh.

10. That the State Brewers' Associations, United States Brewers' Association, individual Brewers and organizations under their control, have expended large sums of money in payment of poll taxes for voters in Texas in violation of law and have expended sums of money to control State and Federal elections in violations of law. Evidence of this may be found in the United States Courts and the United States District Attorney's office at Pittsburgh; State Court records and the Attorney General's office in Texas, and in other states.

11. That the United States Brewers' Association, State Brewers' Associations, and individual Brewers and persons and organizations which they control have instituted boycotts against merchants, manufacturers, railroads and business men who have opposed the liquor traffic. The aforesaid organizations and individuals have also encouraged the starting of strikes in dry territory and instigated local troubles in shops and factories whose owners and managers favored prohibition. Evidence of this will be found in the documents in possession of the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh and further evidence will be disclosed to the committee as the investigation proceeds.

12. That the Brewery trade and liquor traffic is pro-German in its sympathy and conduct as charged by Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, Custodian of Alien Property, will be shown by testimony in the hands of the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh; the United States District Attorney's office at Detroit, from the records in the trial of Mr. Keltschmidt; and from the records of the trial of Mr. Jacobson in the District Attorney's office at Chicago; from the records of the trials of the owners, editors and officers of the Tageblatt, a German paper at Philadelphia, and officers of various other German papers and periodicals, who have been tried in the Federal courts under the espionage and other criminal laws.

13. Evidence of the general practices and activities of the Brewers' corruptive politics, violating election laws, influencing improperly State and Federal legislation, will be found in documentary form and otherwise in the office of the Attorney General of Texas, Honorable B. F. Looney, who I am sure will bring this proof upon the call of the Committee.

Evidence of the brazen methods used by the Brewers and liquor interests to corrupt electorates and public officials, will be found in the United States District Attorney's office in Indiana where Dan Roberts and others were convicted for violating the Federal election and criminal laws. Honorable Frank C. Dailey, of Indianapolis, was the United States District Attorney who prosecuted the cases.

I trust this letter will be made a part of the Record and if more detailed information as to any source of evidence is desired, I shall be glad to try to furnish it.

Respectfully yours,

The subcommittee considered a request in writing from Mr. Alexander Konta, 20 Exchange Place, New York City, that he be heard by the committee.

On motion of Senator King, seconded and agreed to, the subcommittee directed that Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, Enemy Property Custodian, and Mr. Alexander Konta, should be notified that they would be heard on Tuesday next, October 15, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

(Thereupon the subcommittee adjourned until Tuesday, October 15, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 11 o'clock a. m. in the room of the Committee on the Judiciary in the Capitol, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. There is a quorum of the committee present, andI will call the committee to order.

I will say to the members of the committee that the Attorney General of the United States is going to furnish us with the facts and documents requested in the resolution, and he is going to send to Pittsburgh Mr. Humes, who was formerly United States district attorney in Pittsburgh, who is going to get these papers together and give us a digest of their contents, and I expect to have a conference with Mr. Humes.

I will say also that I wrote to Mr. Looney, the attorney general of the State of Texas, as suggested in the letter of Senator Jones, which you will recall, which is printed in the record, asking him to send us any evidence they have there, as suggested in the memorandum.

This meeting of the subcommittee was called for the purpose of hearing Mr. Alexander Konta, who demanded a personal hearing. I did not know when he could come here, and then I got a letter from his lawyer claiming that he is entitled to a hearing and saying that he wants a hearing, so that I called a meeting of the subcommittee for this morning in order to hear him, and notified him of the fact that I had done so. I received from him yesterday or the day before a telegram which said that he had influenza and did not know whether he would be able to come here or not, following which I telegraphed him to know whether he would be here.

Senator NELSON. That is, Mr. Konta?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; as I did not want to have the committee come together to hear him unless he was going to be here, this meeting having been called for him only. I then received from him the following telegram:

NEW YORK, October 14, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

Your dispatch of this date received at Mr. Konta's office and forwarded to me as his attorney for reply; Mr. Konta, much to his disappointment, is still confined to his house with influenza, forbidden by his physicians to go out; my associate, Senator Saxe, will attend before your committee to-morrow morning and explain the facts fully, with supporting documentary evidence.

S. HANFORD.

Is Mr. Saxe here?

Mr. SAXE. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. We called Mr. Konta to appear here, and thi telegram says that you will attend "with supporting documentar evidence." What kind of documents have you here?

Mr. SAXE. I think possibly the chairman has misconceived the tele gram. I appear solely for Mr. Konta, to explain why he is not her and to show our respect to this committee. Mr. Konta received th notice of this meeting last Friday, and he immediately telegraphe the committee that he was confined to his house and feared he migh not be able to keep the appointment, but stated that he still hope to attend to-day.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAXE. He has been hoping ever since that he could come her to-day, but at a consultation of doctors yesterday morning they sai it was impossible for him to take the stand or to get here to-day and he therefore sent me to thank the committee very much for hav ing afforded him the opportunity to appear before the committe and to express his regret that he could not possibly be here upon th particular date set, and to ask for a further opportunity, about a week hence, to appear.

Out of respect for the committee I took the liberty of procurin the certificates of the two different doctors who attended Mr. Konta and I want to submit to the committee these certificates, of Dr. Horn and Dr. Colles, who both saw him yesterday morning and said tha it was actually unsafe for him to attempt to come. He has the grippe or influenza, and while he is convalescent, he ought not to go out o the house at this time. But we very seriously and earnestly as that Mr. Konta be given an opportunity about a week hence t appear before the committee.

NEW YORK, October 14, 1918.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Mr. Alexander Konta, residing at 1 West Eighty-fifth Stree is under my care since the 11th instant; he is barely over an attack of the prevailin epidemic of influenza and is not permitted to leave the house for a few more days for fear of complications.

DR. FRANK I. HORN.

DR. CHRISTOPHER J. COLLES,
115 East Thirty-fifth Street, New York, October 14, 1918.

This is to certify that I have this day examined Mr. Alexander Konta, of 5 West Eighty-fifth Street, New York City. Mr. Konta has had an attack of grippe of four days' duration, and is now in a depressed physical condition from its effects. He has a subnormal temperature and a depressed pulse rate. The mucous membrane of the nose and throat is still congested and inflamed, which makes him feel very uncomfortable. I consider his condition such that exposure in railway traveling, etc., would render him exceedingly prone to a reinfection, with all its dangerous possibilities and sequences. I have therefore advised him to remain in his home and not expose himself for some days.

CHRISTOPHER J. COLLES, M. D.

Mr. SAXE. So far as Mr. Hanford refers to documentary evidence the thought of Mr. Konta was that he would like at this time, at the very beginning of the hearings, to file the shortest kind of an affidavit denying all connection with the purchase of the Washington Times, whatsoever, and the only document that I care to offer at just a very short affidavit covering that general feature and nothing else, and I ask the committee's leave that I may file that affidavit.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you please read it.

Mr. SAXE. Yes, sir. [Reading.]

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

ALEXANDER KONTA, being duly sworn, says:

1. I am informed by my physicians that I can not attend before the Senate Judiciary Committee at Washington on Tuesday, October 15, 1918. I am most desirous of attending at an adjourned date, and I file this affidavit solely that the committee may have before it at once my positive denial of any connection whatsoever with the purchase of the Washington Times.

2. Mr. Palmer has given out a letter which I wrote to Dr. Dernburg in March, 1915. In the latter part of March, 1915, I attended, by invitation, a dinner at the German Club in New York City. I was not a member of that club and have never been a member. I was seated next to Dr. Dernburg. During the dinner he complained bitterly about his inability to place before the American public the German side of matters connected with the war. He stated that he thought a newspaper ought to be purchased for such purpose, and he said that unfortunately there were no funds at the disposal of the German officials for that purpose. He asked me whether, if funds could be obtained, I would act as broker in the matter, and with that end in view whether I would procure for him some data as to the financial standing of the various New York papers. A day or two later I wrote him the report or letter which Mr. Palmer has made public. Dr. Dernburg did not acknowledge this letter and I have never heard from him since. I have never discussed the proposition with anyone else, and I have never had any conversation about the proposition with any brewers in America.

I have never been a member of the German Alliance. I have not seen, spoken to or communicated with Arthur Brisbane for over eight years. I have never met William R. Hearst in my life. At the time of the purchase of the Washington Times I knew nothing whatever about the facts. There was absolutely no connection between my letter to Dernburg, in March, 1915, two years before the United States entered the war, and the purchase of the Washington Times in June, 1917, several months after the United States entered the war.

ALEXANDER KONTA.

Sworn to before me this 14th day of October, 1918.

[SEAL.] MABEL GOUDCHAUX.
Notary Public, N. Y. Co., 736, N. Y. Reg. No. 10007.

I certainly hope that you can give Mr. Konta an opportunity of a hearing about a week hence.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think we ought to hear him.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I think so. May I ask what reasonable probability there is that a week hence Mr. Konta will be well enough to appear here? I ask that because some of us have to travel some distance to reach here for the hearing.

Mr. SAXE. I asked that very question of Dr. Christopher Colles at noon yesterday before taking the train to come here, and he said that Mr. Konta was convalescent, and that it was, he thought, almost certain that he would be all right in a week from now. That is what the doctor told me, and I really have not any reasonable doubt but what he will be all right, say about a week from to-day. I asked that very question for the purposes of the committee, because I knew you would want to know just when he could appear, if you could hear him.

Senator NELSON. Would it not be better for us to let him first notify us when he is ready to come?

Senator WOLCOTT. You say he has influenza?

Mr. SAXE. He has influenza, or grippe.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is a thing that is rather tenacious when it gets hold of anyone. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to say next Tuesday, if we have to go on on that date, but this thing that Mr. Konta has is, as I said, a tenacious thing, and we might all be coming here on Tuesday and Mr. Konta still be unable to get here. I think we had better postpone his hearing long enough so as to give him ample time, to make sure that he can be here.

Senator NELSON. How would it be, Mr. Chairman, to let him write to you and let you know when he can come, and then you can arrange for a meeting to suit our convenience?

Senator WOLCOTT. I think that is the better plan.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you communicate, Mr. Saxe, for him, when he can come, and say whether he can be here next Tuesday?

Mr. SAXE. I feel reasonably sure that he can be here next Tuesday.

Senator NELSON. Let him write a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee and state when he can come.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you communicate that to him, and say we would like to have him say when he can come?

Mr. SAXE. That is entirely satisfactory.

Senator NELSON. Of course, we may not be able to meet on the very day, but when he is well and can come, then we will fix a day.

Senator OVERMAN. As soon as I have an assurance of a certainty of his being able to come, I will call the committee together and notify him of the date fixed.

Mr. SAXE. I shall be very glad to have it set for a week from to-day, at the same hour, and then I will telegraph you to-morrow, if it is all right, if that is satisfactory. I will telegraph you as soon as I get back to-morrow.

Senator NELSON. When he is sure that he can come the chairman can call a meeting.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I will adjourn the meeting, subject to the call of the chairman.

Mr. SAXE. I want to thank you again, Mr. Chairman, for having given us this opportunity.

Senator OVERMAN. You have no other documents you want to present to us?

Mr. SAXE. No. I appeared personally just to show my respect to the committee and to show appreciation.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Konta is not here. This affidavit is offered to show that he had no connection whatever with the matter of the purchase of the Washington Times. I think Mr. Konta ought to be examined before we proceed further with Mr. Palmer. Mr. Humes, who was formerly United States district attorney in Pittsburgh, is now in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army. He was in Washington, and he has been sent out to Pittsburgh to get these papers, and I suppose they will be delivered to him and he will be ready to present them here at any time, and I suggest to the committee that we request him to make a digest of these papers for us so that we may indicate what papers we want. I thought I would ask the Secretary of War to detail Maj. Humes down here to help us.

I have a gentleman here this morning, Capt. Lester, who has had charge of all this matter in the Military Information Division of the War Department, and who has furnished me a story of what he has discovered in regard to this German propaganda in this country, which is very, very interesting. I do not know whether the committee will want to ask him any questions or not, but I would like to have you, Senator Nelson, read this statement—I have given Senator Wolcott a copy—and see whether we should put this in the record or whether we should put Capt. Lester on the stand and examine him.

I want to say that Mr. Palmer was asked to come down also and make a statement, but Mr. Brisbane is not present this morning, and he ought to be here when Mr. Palmer testifies, so I have excused Mr. Palmer until our next meeting, and he will be here when we want him. I will probably get through with Mr. Konta first and then put Mr. Palmer on the stand. Mr. Konta's representative came to me and asked me if we expected to hear Mr. Palmer, and I told him no, that we expected to hear Mr. Konta first, and therefore his representative is here.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Palmer ought to be here when Mr. Konta testifies.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I want him to hear Mr. Konta testify.

Gentlemen, the subcommittee will stand adjourned until we hear further from Mr. Konta, subject to my call, and I will call the committee together probably, if Mr. Konta can be here, to meet on Tuesday next. If there is no further business before the committee now we will have an executive session.

(At 11.30 o'clock a. m. the subcommittee went into executive session, at the conclusion of which it adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, in room No. 226 Senate Office Building, at 10 o'clock a. m., Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. The subcommittee will come to order. Under the resolution, an investigation having been made in Pennsylvania by the district attorney, Maj. E. Lowry Humes, by the kindness of the Secretary of War and of Maj. Humes himself, who has consented to it, Maj. Humes has been detailed to aid this committee in systematizing the matter and documents before it and to aid the committee in conducting this investigation.

The Chief of Staff of the Army also, at my request, has detailed to assist the committee Capt. George B. Lester, of the Division of Military Intelligence, War Department.

(The orders detailing Maj. Humes and Capt Lester are here printed in the record, in full, as follows:)

OCTOBER 19, 1918.

Memorandum for the Judge Advocate General:

The Chief of Staff directs that you be advised that the Secretary of War has approved the request of Senator Overman, who is chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee investigating certain allegations of alien enemy influence in connection with the purchase and management of some American newspapers, that Major Humes, of the Judge Advocate General's Office, be assigned to temporary duty with Senator Overman's Committee, in order to assist this Committee in the enquiry referred to.

He accordingly directs that Major Humes be instructed to report to Senator Overman for the duty referred to, it being understood that he is acting under the direction of the Senate Committee and that he is not expected to produce before that Committee intelligence secured by the Army of a confidential character and of such military importance that its disclosure at this time would be against the public interest.

FULTON Q. C. GARDNER,
Colonel, General Staff, Secretary.

The Chief of Staff directs that you be advised that the Secretary of War has approved the request of Senator Overman, who is Chairman of a sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee investigating certain allegations of ali enemy influence in connection with the purchase and management of some Ame can newspapers, that Captain Lester, of the Military Intelligence Division, be assigned to temporary duty with Senator Overman's Committee, in order to ass this Committee in the inquiry referred to.

He accordingly directs that Captain Lester be instructed to report to Senat Overman for the duty referred to, it being understood that he is acting und the direction of the Senate Committee and that he is not expected to produ before that committee intelligence secured by the Army of a confidential cha acter and of such military importance that its disclosure at this time would against the public interest.

FULTON Q. C. GARDNER,
Colonel, General Staff, Secretary.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES MOORE.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Moore, you are the assistant cashier of th Northwestern National Bank of Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was a subpoena duces tecum served upon the ban to produce certain papers?

Mr. MOORE. It was.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the president of that bank?

Mr. MOORE. Edward A. Smith.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the papers that were called for by th subpoena?

Mr. MOORE. I have.

Maj. HUMES. Will you produce them, please?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir [producing papers].

Maj. HUMES. Are these the papers relating to a certain loan mad to Charles H. Allen, of Montgomery, Ala.?

Mr. MOORE. They are.

Senator NELSON. You had better have each one of those paper marked as an exhibit, by the stenographer, in connection with the tes timony of the witness.

Maj. HUMES. Part of these papers are original notes of consider able sum that I assume the committee does not care to be charge with the responsibility of, and it might be better to read them int the record so as not to assume responsibility for the securities.

Senator OVERMAN. That is a good idea.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence a note dated Philadelphia, Au gust 14, 1918, $45,000.

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 1.

Six months after date I promise to pay to the order of the Northwestern Na tional Bank Forty-five Thousand Dollars, without defalcation, for value re ceived, and have delivered to the said bank as collateral security collateral at tached hereto. Also Policy 359998 of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insuran Company for Ten Thousand Dollars, and twenty-five shares of the Advertis Company, Montgomery, Alabama, with interest at six per cent, payable at th Northwestern National Bank.

CHARLES H. ALLEN.

The note contains the usual judgment clause.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by the usual judgmen clause?

Maj. HUMES. Pennsylvania form.

Senator WOLCOTT. With power of attorney?

Maj. HUMES. With power of attorney to confess judgment, and waiver of inquisition.

Senator NELSON. It is what they call a judgment note?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. I also offer in evidence the collateral attached to this note, as follows:

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 2.

$47,500.00 PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 14th, 1918.

One year after date we promise to pay to the order of The Northwestern National Bank, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the sum of Forty-seven Thousand Five Hundred Dollars, in the individual proportions as set forth below, without defalcation for value received. With interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. It is covenanted and agreed between the makers and the payee of this note, and each with the other, that the individual obligation of each of the makers hereof is limited to the sum set opposite their respective names, and interest thereon in like proportion, and the makers are not to be held liable by the payee in any greater sum by reason of any of them defaulting in either their share of principal or interest.

Makers.	Amount of liability assumed by each maker hereunder.
Edw. A. Schmidt,	Forty-seven hundred & Fifty Dollars $4750.
Louis B. Schram,	Forty seven hundred & Fifty Dollars.
J. Liebman,	Forty Seven Hundred & Fifty Dollars. ($4750).
R. J. Schaefer,	Forty seven Hundred & fifty Dollars ($4750).
Jacob Ruppert,	Forty seven hundred & fifty Dollars ($4750).
C. W. Fiegespan,	Forty seven & Fifty 00/00 $4750.
George Ehret, Jr.	Ninety-five hundred Dollars $9500.00/000.
N. J. & M. L. Griel,	Forty seven hundred & Fifty ($4750) Dollars."

And as additional collateral security, certificate of deposit No. 7605, Northwestern National Bank of Philadelphia.

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 3.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 16, 1918.

P. Ballantyne & Sons have deposited in this bank $2,250 payable to the order of cash, on return of this certificate properly endorsed.

WILLIAM C. RANGAN, for cashier.

Also, as further collateral, stock certificates Nos. 18, 27, 28, 29 and 30 of the Advertiser Company.

Senator OVERMAN. What Advertiser Co.? Does it say of where?

Maj. HUMES. City and county of Montgomery, State of Alabama.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me understand, Maj. Humes. The primary obligation is of Charles H. Allen, $45,000?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. And collateral under that note consisted of this stock and this certificate of deposit that you read into the record, and another note signed by various gentlemen in certain amounts; is that the situation?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. The original obligation, however, was for another amount, and the proof will subsequently show the original amount of the obligation, there having been between the time this collateral note was made and the time the original obligation was renewed, a payment of $2,500 made. That is why the amounts vary.

Senator OVERMAN. Those persons who obligate themselves to pay, whose names you have read, who are they, do you know?

Maj. HUMES. I know who they are, if it is proper for me to state.

Senator NELSON. I suppose the witness might answer that.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I was expecting to establish that by a witness rather than by any statement by myself.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That is only one of the notes, and these exhibits are not yet all presented to you.

Senator WOLCOTT. You said $2,500 was paid on the renewal of the note?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; in August.

Senator WOLCOTT. You mean paid on that original note?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Originally the notes were $50,000 each, and there have been reductions since that time, until the notes are now $45,000 each, there having been $10,000 paid on the two obligations, one of which has not yet been presented to the committee.

Senator WOLCOTT. This collateral accompanied both of the notes?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; there is another note with the other collateral.

Senator WOLCOTT. I see.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Moore, this is the original note and these are the collaterals attached thereto, of William T. Sheehan, are they?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence the following note, which is identified by the witness:

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 4.

PHILADELPHIA, August 14, 1918.

$45,000.

Six months after date I promise to pay to the order of the Northwestern National Bank Forty-five Thousand Dollars, without defalcation, for value received, and have delivered to said bank as collateral security collateral attached hereto. Also Policy 5748 of the American Life Insurance Company for $10,000 and twenty-five shares of the Advertiser Company, Montgomery, Alabama,

WILLIAM T. SHEEHAN.

Attached thereto as collateral is the following:

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 5.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 14th, 1918.

$47,500.00.

One year after date we promise to pay to the order of The Northwestern National Bank, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the sum of Forty-seven Thousand, Five Hundred Dollars, in the individual proportions as set forth below, without defalcation for value received, with interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. It is covenanted and agreed between the makers and the payee of this note, and each with the other, that the individual obligation of each of the makers hereof is limited to the sum set opposite their respective names, and interest thereon in like proportion, and the makers are not to be held liable by the payee in any greater sum by reason of any of them defaulting in either share of principal or interest.

Makers.	Amount of liability assumed by each maker hereunder.
Edward Landsberg,	Fifty-seven hundred dollars ($5700)
Gustave Pabst,	Fifty-seven hundred dollars.
Henry Vahlkamp,	Twenty-eight hundred fifty—$2850.00 Dollars
Aug. A. Busch,	Fourteen thousand two hundred & fifty ($14250) Dollars
Eugene M. Keeley	Forty-seven hundred fifty $4750.
John Moerlein,	Forty-seven hundred fifty Dollars (4750)
The F. W. Cook Brewing Co. By G. Michael Daussman, Pres't.	Forty seven hundred fifty Dollars ($4750.00)
Peter S. Theurer,	Forty-seven hundred fifty dollars (4750.00)

Senator WOLCOTT. That collateral note is not the same collateral note that you read in the first connection?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir. This is the collateral note that is attached to the note of Mr. Sheehan. The former collateral note I read was attached to the note of Mr. Allen.

Senator WOLCOTT. I gather from you that there were two notes, totaling $100,000?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Which the first collateral note you read in the record accompanied?

Maj. HUMES. No, it accompanied one of them; one of the $50,000 notes: and this collateral note accompanied the second $50,000 note.

Senator WOLCOTT. I misunderstood the situation.

Maj. HUMES. Attached as further collateral are certificates of stock Nos. 21, 22, 45, 48, 16, 19, and 20 of the Advertiser Co., of Montgomery, Ala.

Mr. Chairman, I am making no mention, further than is embraced in the bodies of these notes, of the life-insurance policies. I assume there is no desire for any further mention of that item of collateral.

Mr. Moore, have you the correspondence of the Northwestern National Bank that was subpœnaed, relative to this transaction?

Mr. MOORE. I have.

Maj. HUMES Will you produce it?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir [producing papers].

Senator NELSON. This evidence, as I understand it, is for the purpose of showing who purchased this newspaper?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator KING. Is the proprietor of the paper here?

Maj. HUMES. Not that I know of.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the proprietor?

Maj. HUMES. There is correspondence here that establishes that. Much of this correspondence which I have here is purely formal correspondence, and if the committee desires me to take the time I shall pick out certain portions of it.

Senator KING. The point I had in mind is whether there is any controversy as to the ownership of the newspaper at present, and the contention which I understand you make, namely, that it was acquired by brewers or the brewery interests.

Maj. HUMES. I know of no dispute. The records of the other departments of the Government show that the ownership is as indicated by these securities.

Senator KING. The question I had in my mind was whether or not there is any necessity of encumbering the record with so much of this, if there is no controversy; if the ultimate fact might be stated, so that these exhibits might be left here for reference in case there should be any subsequent dispute.

Senator OVERMAN. You might read two or three of the letters and put them in evidence.

Maj. HUMES. There were a few letters that I thought would clear that up, and if the committee will bear with me for a moment I think I can pick them out right now.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, did the newspaper or the reputed owners of the newspaper understand that that matter was to be gone into to-day?

Senator OVERMAN. No.

Senator KING. Did they know that the question as to the ownership of that paper would be the subject of inquiry to-day?

Senator OVERMAN. No; no notice was given to anyone.

Senator KING. I was wondering whether they wanted to be heard or if they dispute any of these contentions.

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose there will be notice of it in the newspapers. The claim, as I understand it, Major, is that the brewers paid for the Montgomery Advertiser $100,000?

Maj. HUMES. That they financed the purchase.

Senator OVERMAN. Of course, they would be entitled to be heard if they desire to be heard.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I submit a letter for the purpose of showing the consumation of the transaction, signed by Charles H. Allen, publisher.

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 6.

[F. P. Glass, Prest. The Advertiser Co. Proprs. R. F. Hudson, Sec'y. The Montgomery Advertiser, established 1828. The leading Alabama paper in news, influence, and quality of circulation.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA., August 19, 1915.

Mr. NICE,
Cashier, N. W. National Bank,
Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. NICE: Although I expressed my appreciation of your courtesy and consideration in our transaction, I cannot refrain from repeating the thought of appreciation by mail.

I take great pleasure in enclosing you herewith front page of the Advertiser carrying the announcement of the change in the ownership of this newspaper which I know will be of passing interest to you.

With warm personal regards and assuring you that I shall always remember my past relations with you as happy and most congenial, believe me.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. H. ALLEN,
Publisher.

Senator OVERMAN. Is Mr. Allen the publisher of the Advertiser?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Is it the desire of the committee to incorporate into the record the announcement as published on the front page of the paper?

Senator WOLCOTT. I was just going to look at that to see what it said. For certain reasons that occur to me I suggest that it would be well to have the statement in the first issue of the paper after its change of hands inserted in connection with the letter which has just been read.

Senator OVERMAN. I think so; and also the news item in respect to it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes: the news item on the last column of the first page.

(The articles referred to were marked "Moore Exhibits No. 7 and No. 8" and are here printed in the record in full, as follows:)

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 7.

THE ADVERTISER'S NEW MANAGEMENT.

We have purchased from Mr. Frank P. Glass his entire interest in The Advertiser which is fifty per cent of the total capital stock. We will operate and control the paper with the aid and cooperation of the family of the late Major W. W. Screws which owns the other fifty per cent of the stock.

In the new organization Mr. Sheehan will be President and Editor; he will have sole control of the editorial and news department of the paper. Mr. Allen will be Publisher and General Manager. He will be in sole charge of the business and mechanical end of the paper. Mr. R. F. Hudson, will continue under the new management as under the old, as Secretary and Treasurer.

The transfer of this stock severs all the connection of Mr. Frank P. Glass with the Advertiser; that connection has covered a period of thirty years, during which the Advertiser has been a very vital force in the political, industrial and civic life of Alabama. The Advertiser, in that period has not only been an aggressive and influential factor in the affairs of Alabama, but it has been a continuous business success.

Mr. Glass had ended this connection, so rich in memories of struggles and triumph of satisfying labor and achievements with a deep personal regret, understood by those who know his love for the Advertiser. He was moved to offer for sale, his stock, by the belief that he could concentrate his efforts in Birmingham and upon the Birmingham News of which he is part owner. He felt and said so that the ownership and control of the Advertiser by men living in Montgomery who were in the daily work of making the paper, and whose ability and experience he was kind enough to say, were equal to the task of conducting the paper, would be best for the Advertiser and for Montgomery.

We assume the responsibility for the management and conduct of The Advertiser with a full understanding of its gravity. We hope to make The Advertiser the very best paper in Alabama; all the ability, all the energy and all the experience that we have will be centered in the attainment of that purpose. We propose so far as it is our power to do so to make The Advertiser essentially an agency for the upbuilding of Montgomery and of Alabama.

The policy of The Advertiser will be to emphasize the importance of the material and industrial interests of the State, rather than to overemphasize political personages and political issues. We hope to make The Advertiser primarily, a paper of progress and development. We enter upon our new task firmly convinced that the South and particularly Middle Alabama is on the eve of a great industrial and commercial progress. A live paper alert for opportunities to assist in this development, we believe will be a potent fact for its stimulation. To this particularly we will bend our efforts to preaching Montgomery and its prosperity, Middle Alabama and its progress.

We are gratified, for instance, that we had a hand in establishing the new Farm and Immigration Section of The Advertiser, which is the most ambitious effort made by any Southern paper for the improvement of the farming interests of the State and the extension of the doctrine of diversification. We are going to seek alignment in other progressive endeavors with the live aggressive forces of the city and of the section. We would make The Advertiser the organ of progress and when called in the name of progress no night will be dark, and no day too stormy for The Advertiser to respond. This we want the business community of Montgomery to know—The Advertiser is primarily and essentially an agency for service.

It is more than probable that we will minimize politics in comparison to progress and to service as a newspaper. We begin the conduct of this paper, believing that Alabama has too much politics and that the attention of the people of Alabama is too much distracted by politics. Assuredly we reserve the right to take any position we may see fit on public issues as they arise; this we propose to do. We are firmly convinced of the wisdom of the basic political convictions upon which the policy of The Advertiser as developed by Major W. W. Screws are just, correct and best for the welfare of the people of Alabama. These fundamental principles, set down and taught by the great editor of The Advertiser, will continue to be the guide of the editorial policy of The Advertiser. The present editor of the paper was for more than twelve years intimately associated with Major Screws and on his death became editor of the paper. On issues of public policy, therefore there will be no change. We will continue to assert our views on these issues, with the characteristic aggressiveness of The Advertiser.

Primarily, the function of a newspaper is to publish the news; it is in this particular field that we hope to do our best work. We propose to plan and labor to the extent of our capacity to make the news columns of this paper live and vital. We consider that the main clause in our implied contract with our subscribers is to give them the news, "with the bloom on it." And, we propose to publish the news fairly and impartially.

We are proud of the reputation of The Advertiser for cleanliness in its news columns; we will maintain in the future that reputation of the past. The Advertiser will be sent to its subscribers with its news columns so wholesome, that every line in it can be read aloud in the sitting room with the entire family gathered about. It is possible that we may make errors which may do some person or some interest an injustice. If such an unintentional error occurs, it will be our policy to rectify it at once. The Advertiser is too important and too fair an institution to do an individual an injustice.

Under the direction of the General Manager, the entire force of The Advertiser will endeavor to come into sympathy and cooperation with the business community of Montgomery. We realize fully that the future of this paper depends upon the quality of the service this paper renders to the community as a whole and second, to the business men of the city who wish to reach our people, through its columns. We intend to be helpful, as accommodating and as generous as possible in cooperating with the business interests of the city.

And, finally this is our city and these our people. What we have is invested here, our future is committed to this city. Our families are established here and we will rear our children here. Our interests are indissolubly wrapped up in the interests of Montgomery; we progress or we stagnate with the city. We will strive to the limit of our power for a better, a larger and a more prosperous Montgomery. We only ask such recognition as our work merits.

W. T. SHEEHAN.
CHAS. H. ALLEN.

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 8.

F. P. GLASS SELLS HIS INTEREST IN THE ADVERTISER TO SHEEHAN AND ALLEN.

Mr. W. T. Sheehan Becomes President and Editor and Mr. Chas. H Allen, Publisher and General Manager with this Issue of Paper—General Policy is Clearly Outlined in Statement—No Sweeping Changes to be Made in the Conduct—Stock Owned by family of Late Maj. Screws is Unaffected by Change, Remaining Entirely in Possession of Members of That Family.

Frank P. Glass, who has been for thirty years owner of fifty per cent of the stock of The Advertiser has disposed of his entire holdings to W. T. Sheehan, editor of the paper, and Charles H. Allen, the paper's advertising manager. Messrs. Sheehan and Allen will, in the future, personally conduct the paper, with the sympathy and cooperation of the family of the late Major W. W. Screws, which owns the remaining fifty per cent of the stock.

On the sale of his stock Mr. Glass resigned from the Presidency of the Advertiser Company and from its directorate. W. T. Sheehan will be President of the paper, Charles H. Allen will become Publisher and General Manager. Under the new organization Mr. Sheehan will have exclusive control of the editorial and news departments of the paper. Mr. Allen will be in exclusive control of the business and operating department of the paper.

POLICY IS OUTLINED.

The new officers of the company, in a statement published in another column of the paper, indicate the general line of policy which they will follow in the conduct of the paper. They contemplate a number of improvements in time, but no sweeping changes are considered. The officers, who have had many years of newspaper experience, stated Saturday night that they would devote their time and energy to making The Advertiser a newspaper which would please and satisfy Montgomery and Middle Alabama, and which would be an energetic factor in stimulating the inevitable progress of Alabama.

For several months the purchase of the stock of Mr. Glass by Messrs. Sheehan and Allen has been under consideration and discussion. Mr. Glass, who was associated for nearly thirty years as an equal partner of Major W. W. Screws, the great editor of the paper, was reluctant to sell his stock and sever a connection, in which he achieved so much and of which he was so proud. Inasmuch as he was part owner and editor of The Birmingham News and vitally interested in the welfare of the Birmingham district, he agreed to part with his stock in order to concentrate his resources and his energies in the very important work in which he is engaged in Birmingham. Mr. Glass believed too, that it would be best for The Advertiser and best for Montgomery that The Advertiser be conducted by men who gave it "the daily concentration of the mind which a successful newspaper needs."

OTHER HOLDINGS UNAFFECTED.

The stock owned by the family of the late Major W. W. Screws, who was for nearly fifty years the guiding spirit of The Advertiser, is unaffected by the change. It remains in its entirety in the possession of the members of the family of Major Screws. They are in sympathy and in partnership with the new owners of the other half interest.

Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Allen are not only now connected in active work with The Advertiser, but they are, each in his own field, newspaper men of wide experience. Both are native Alabamians, both were born in the Alabama Black Belt, Mr. Sheehan in Barbour County, Mr. Allen in Sumter County. Both were not only born in Alabama, but they have lived all their lives in this State and all their interests are in the city of Montgomery. It is believed that their wide knowledge of Alabama, and their acquaintance and sympathy with the people of Alabama qualifies them in their announced purpose of making a newspaper which will truly serve the people of Alabama, and which will fairly represent the life and views of the people of Alabama.

SHEEHAN BORN IN EUFAULA.

Mr. Sheehan was born in Eufaula, Jan. 8, 1874. He was the son of Wm. T. Sheehan and Emma Garrett Sheehan. His father was a victim of the Cholera epidemic in Birmingham in 1874; his mother died in 1879. Left orphan at 5 years of age, he was reared by kindly relatives and educated in the public schools of Eufaula. In his later school life he assisted by his labor in securing an education in various ways. He was at various times office boy in a mercantile house, drug clerk, clerk in the Eufaula postoffice, and substitute railway mail clerk. Upon his graduation from the Eufaula High School, he was elected a teacher in the grammar school of that city. He taught in these schools for four years, retiring as Assistant Principal of the High School.

In April, 1898, he resigned his place in the schools as he had volunteered for service in the Spanish-American War. He went out as a member of Company G, Second Albama Volunteers, and served in the various camps of that regiment in Mobile, Miami, Jacksonville, and Montgomery. Following that service he retained his connection with the Alabama National Guard for ten years serving successively as Captain in the Second Alabama and Lieutenant-Colonel upon the Governor's staff.

Following the advice of former Governor Jelks, a close personal friend who was then editor of the Eufaula Times, Mr. Sheehan entered upon newspaper work at the close of the Spanish-American War. His first newspaper connection was a short service in the circulation department of The Age-Herald. He left this paper to become associated with Honorable W. D. Jelks in the publication of the Eufaula Times. This connection was maintained until the sale of the paper to other parties in 1899.

CAME HERE IN 1899.

In November, 1899, Mr. Sheehan came to Montgomery and has since then continuously resides in this city. His first position in Montgomery was as cub reporter on the Montgomery Journal. From this position he was quickly promoted to be City Editor of The Journal. In February 1902, he became a reporter on The Advertiser, and since then he has been continuously connected with this paper. In the past thirteen years he has filled every place in the news and editorial department of the paper from cub reporter to editor. He was successively, reporter, capitol and political reporter, staff correspondent, city editor, news editor, associate editor and editor.

For the six years previous to the death of the late Major Screws, Mr. Sheehan was his associate and assistant. He worked in the closest intimate relation with the great editor and enjoyed in a rare degree his confidence. He was the choice of Major Screws as his successor on The Advertiser, and he was chosen as editor upon the death of Major Screws. For the past two years he has been in editorial control of The Advertiser.

Mr. Sheehan was married in April 1901, to Miss Mary Crawford of Eufaula; she died in August of the same year. He was married in November 1907 to Miss Elizabeth Houston Winston of Sumter County. They have three children, two boys and a girl.

VISITS EVERY COUNTY.

Mr. Sheehan's active newspaper work has taken him into every county in Alabama. As staff correspondent of The Advertiser he visited every county in Alabama and every county seat except two. He has taken an active part in public affairs, especially in the affairs of the city of Montgomery. He is a director of The Advertiser Company, a director of the Business Men League, a director of the Paragon Press, a member of the Beauvoir Club, the Thirteen Club of the Elks and of the Knights of Pythias. In 1904 he was the Alabama Messenger to the National Electrical College. He is now Tax Collector of Montgomery County—an office to which he was appointed by former Governor O'Neal.

Charles H. Allen, the new publisher and General Manager of the Advertiser, has been actively engaged in newspaper work ever since as a boy he "stuck type" in the office of his father C. H. Allen, one of the best known of the older editors of Alabama. The elder Allen for many years published a paper at Gainesville in Sumter county, and he is known to the editors of the present day as an associate a few years ago, when he was Editor and Publisher of the Sumter County Sun.

BORN AT GAINESVILLE.

Charles H. Allen the younger was born November 11th, 1879, at Gainesville, where his father was engaged in publishing a paper in that once thriving town. Charles H. Allen the elder, was not only one of the best known editors of his day, but he was an attorney and a member of the Alabama State Bar Association. The mother of the younger Mr. Allen, was before her marrige, Miss Belle Stewart, the daughter of Mr. Wiley W. Stewart, who before the war was a leading planter in North Sumter county. Mr. Alex Stewart who is now a prominent merchant and planter of Gainesville is an uncle of Mr. Allen.

Mr. Allen gained his schooling in Gainesville and at Livingston to which place his father moved while he was a boy. His school training was alternated with work in his father's printing office. He became trained in his father's office in every line of work in a weekly newspaper office, from distributing type to washing rollers and writing editorials and personals. Before he reached his majority, he purchased the Demopolis Dispatch at that time a prosperous weekly of Marengo county. Realizing that Demopolis offered a somewhat circumscribed field in newspaper work, he accepted a very flattering offer from the Birmingham Age-Herald. For a little less than two years he was actively engaged in advertising work for the Age-Herald.

BUYS INTO MOBILE PAPER.

From Birmingham he went to Mobile where he had purchased an interest in the old Mobile Herald. For three years he was Business Manager of the Herald. Upon the purchase by Frederick I. Thompson of a controlling interest in the Mobile Register, Mr. Allen was offered and accepted the position of Business Manager of the Register. His success in the business office of the Register attracted notice and attention throughout newspaper circles in the South. For five years Mr. Allen was in charge of the business department of the Register. He was at this time one of the largest stockholders in the Register.

Mr. Allen remained with the Register until he received a flattering offer from the Advertiser to become Manager of the Advertising Department of this paper. He assumed this position in December and quickly made an impression upon the business community of Montgomery.

Mr. Allen was married in November 1903 to Miss Retitia Rundle Shearer of Mobile. They have three children, two boys and a girl. Mr. Allen is a member of the Rotary Club and several prominent fraternal organizations.

DEAR MR. SCHMIDT: We desire to inquire in regard to the loan negotiated by you a year ago toward which we contributed $2500, under date of July 16th, 1915. You acknowledged receipt of our check and stated that "it is understood that the loan is to be made for one year and to bear interest at the rate of 6% per annum and to be repaid to the subscribers pro rata as collected."

The year having expired, we should be glad to learn whether the sum is in hand to repay the loans.

Yours truly,

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 11.

JULY 16TH, 1917.

Mr. CHARLES H. ALLEN,
The Montgomery Advertiser,
Montgomery, Ala.

DEAR SIR: We enclose herewith copy of letter from the Alabama Audit Company as of January 10th, 1917, said copy we are forwarding you at the request of Mr. John A. McDermott.

Trusting both Mr. Sheehan and yourself are enjoying your usual good health, with kind regards, we remain

Very truly yours,

———— ————.

Cashier.

Senator KING. In your investigations and inquiry into the correspondence which you have produced, did you discover whether or not this was a clandestine transaction or was open and public—whether the public knew of it?

Maj. HUMES. I have made no investigation of the matter except since the records have been produced by the bank. I had reason to believe that the records existed, and the records were subpœnaed.

Senator WOLCOTT. That makes pertinent a question which I was about to ask. Have you any proof disclosing the terms of the contractual relations between the purchasers of this newspaper and the signers of these collateral notes?

Maj. HUMES. I have not. I knew nothing about the transaction except the intimation that I had that there was such a transaction until I had an opportunity to look at these records last evening in an effort to see if we could not make copies of them to submit to the committee, and not delay the committee or unduly inconvenience the witness. At that time, in order to save time, we made copies of those collateral notes because of the difficulty in reading the signatures when they should be presented at the hearing.

Mr. RUBY R. VALE. Do you not think it is fair to the bank, in answer to Senator King, Maj. Humes, to state that your investigation disclose that this was an ordinary transaction taking place in a bank, and that the directors are absolutely innocent? Mr. Chairman, as legal representative of the Northwestern National Bank in answer to Senator King, I think it only fair to state that this was an ordinary banking transaction, where notes were discounted in the ordinary course of business, where the board of directors subsequently passed on the loan, and further, that when we were asked subsequently to produce the papers for the information of this committee and the information of Maj. Humes, in the examination of the Pennsylvania investigation, we freely and frankly did so. There was nothing secretive about it. It was an open banking transaction.

Senator KING. What are your relations to the bank?

Mr. VALE. I am counsel for the bank. My name is Ruby R. Vale.

Senator WOLCOTT. And I might say in that connection that Mr. Vale is a Delaware citizen and I know him well. He is a very reputable gentleman.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I said anything which reflected in any way upon the transaction from the standpoint of the bank. I did not intend to say anything that might give a wrong inference. I denied knowledge of any agreement between these indorsers and the purchasers of this paper. There is nothing in the records produced by the bank to indicate any such agreement.

Senator WOLCOTT. Naturally the bank would not have such records.

Maj. HUMES. I assume they would not.

Senator NELSON. Had you not better put into the record here evidence as to who those men are—in what business they are engaged—who signed these collateral notes?

Maj. HUMES. There are some more of these records that are not yet introduced, and we will do that as soon as we get the records.

Senator NELSON. Very well. I think it should be supplied. In other words, I mean if these men who signed these collateral notes are brewers it ought to appear in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I now offer in evidence a letter on the letterhead of the Montgomery Advertiser, signed by Charles H. Allen.

(The letter was marked "Moore Exhibit No. 12," and is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 12.

[The Montgomery Advertiser. Established 1828. The leading Alabama paper in news, influence, and quality of circulation. W. T. Sheehan, president; Chas. H. Allen, publisher; R. F. Hudson, secretary and treasurer.]

Personal.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., July 17th, 1917.

Mr. EDWARD A. SCHMIDT,
Pres., Northwestern National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. SCHMIDT: Your letter of July 12th to hand and contents noted.

Our situation as far as issuing the bonds is to date about the same as it was when I last saw you, other than the fact that paper is in still better shape, as you will note from the enclosed audit made up to July 1st.

I have had the matter up repeatedly with the Washington party who in turn has been in correspondence with Mr. Warfield of Baltimore and the last information I have is the following letter from the Baltimore party addressed to the Washington party, under date of July 10th:

"Referring to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I beg to say that I have, for one reason or another, been unable to get in touch with Mr. Townsend Scott, the gentleman I originally saw in the matter of the Montgomery bonds."

"I not only saw Mr. Scott but also have made some inquiries in other directions, and feel that in these times it would not be possible to float an issue of bonds such as Mr. Allen desires."

"I shall be very glad to watch this and when the times are propitious, to do what I can in connection with the subject. I am afraid nothing can be done at present. I regret this, as I would like to have been of real service."

"Believe me, with kind regards—

Yours very truly."

Business conditions look much brighter for this Fall than at any time during the past two years. Our crops to date promise a better yield than at any time within the past five years and the market price is sure to be good. Our local bankers are more optomistic than for a long time and I have taken the matter up of our bond issue with one of them who tells me that he believes he will be able to handle it. All statements, etc., have been supplied him and I have every reason to hope that something will be accomplished from this source. In the meantime, I can only say that we are prepared to pay the interest when note comes due August 14th.

If you will take the time to go over the audit that I am enclosing herewith you will see that if we were able to pay mortgage of $28,000 and outstanding bonds of $25,000, or a total of $53,000, there would be no question about promptly issuing the bonds, but with these two claims recorded against the property it is impossible to issue first mortgage bonds.

We stand ready to do anything that our friends suggest to satisfy them and we feel that it will only be a matter of time before we can take care of the situation in full. You will note from the financial statement that the 50% stock you hold as collateral is to-day worth a great deal more than the amount of the loan, which should be an assurance that the collateral is sufficient to insure anyone against loss.

I expect to hear from the local banker as to bond issue within ten days and will then write you promptly. In the meantime, if you have any suggestion to make, will be glad to hear from you, and if you deem it wise will come to Philadelphia to see you.

With warm personal regards, believe me—

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. H. ALLEN.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Moore, have you the records of the bank showing the history of these loans?

Mr. MOORE. I have; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Will you produce them?

(The witness produced certain papers.)

Maj. HUMES. What is this, Mr. Moore?

Mr. MOORE. That is the record from our credit ledger or liability ledger, showing the accounts of Charles H. Allen and W. T. Sheehan.

Maj. HUMES. Showing the history of these two transactions?

Mr. MOORE. The notes and the transactions.

Maj. HUMES. The notes presented and now introduced being the last renewals?

Mr. MOORE. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. We offer in evidence the record just identified by the witness, showing the history of the note of Charles H. Allen, as follows: August 13, 1915, the original note was made, amounting to $53,000, the $3,000 being interest that was added to the note, the principal sum being the $50,000.

Senator NELSON. The $3,000 was the discount?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; also the note of W. T. Sheehan, the original note being dated August 13, 1915, for $53,000; the notes having been renewed at six months' periods since that time and reduced until the principal sum is now $45,000 in each note.

NOTE.—This statement must be made in duplicate and both copies delivered by the publisher, who shall send one copy to the Third Assistant Postmaster General (Division of Classification), Washington, D. C., and retain the other in the files of the post office. The publisher must publish a copy of this statement in the second issue printed next after its filing.

Senator OVERMAN. What does that show?

Maj. HUMES. It shows that Mr. Allen, Mr. Sheehan, and an estate are the owners of the property.

Senator OVERMAN. An estate?

Maj. HUMES. An estate; yes.

To amplify the matter set forth in the last letter offered, showing the situation—I will not take the time to read it unless the committee desires it—we offer in evidence a letter of January 31, 1918, from Mr. Allen, with reference to the situation of the paper, and especially because of the postscript on the bottom: "Jno. Mc. was here yesterday."

(The paper was marked "Moore Exhibit No. 15," and is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

MOORE EXHIBIT No. 15.

[The Montgomery Advertiser, established 1828, the leading Alabama paper in news, influence, and quality of circulation. W. T. Sheehan, president; Chas. H. Allen, publisher; R. F. Hudson, secretary and treasurer.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA., January 31, 1918.

Mr. EDWARD A. SCHMIDT,
Northwestern National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. SCHMIDT: Your letter of January 21st to hand and contents noted. I assure you that nothing would please me better than to issue our bonds and deposit a part of them with you as collateral as you suggested; and this would be done promptly if it were possible, but I cannot record a bond or mortgage on this property's assets until I have paid and caused to be cancelled the present bond issue and mortgage on building, total of which amounts to $43,500.00.

I trust that this explains our inability to issue bonds until an advanced arrangement for selling at least this amount is made. We are working hard on this proposition and nothing will be left undone to make this bond issue as quick as possible—in the meantime, you may expect us to make remittance to reach you by February 14th as agreed upon.

With warm personal regards—

Very truly, yours,

C. H. ALLEN.

Jno. Mc. was here yesterday.

Senator NELSON. Who was "Jno. Mc."?

Maj. HUMES. I think it means the same man that is referred to in another letter—Mr. John McDermott, of the organization bureau of the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator WOLCOTT. Where does Mr. McDermott live?

Maj. HUMES. In New York.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is he?

Maj. HUMES. He has been subpœnaed as a witness. He will appear.

At the request of counsel for the Northwestern National Bank, we call to the attention of the committee the fact that on August 17, 1915, the following appears on the minutes of the board of directors:

Loans covering from 8858 to No. 8917, both inclusive, amounting to a total of $158,524.19, as per discount book, were made and approved.

Showing a compliance by the bank with the requirements of the national banking law.

Senator WOLCOTT. And those numbers include these loans?

Maj. HUMES. Those numbers include the two notes that have been offered in evidence; yes, sir.

Mr. LAMBERT. Major, have you there the names of those who were present at that meeting—that is, the directors?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know. I did not look at that.

Senator KING. I do not suppose anybody is questioning the good faith.

Maj. HUMES. There was no inference at all of any disregard of banking laws in the matter, and therefore I had not gone into that subject.

Senator WOLCOTT. It is the regular minute book of the bank?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; it is the regular minute book.

Senator OVERMAN. If they want to put it in, let them put it in. I do not think it is necessary; there is no question about the good faith of the bank.

Senator KING. The question I propounded some time ago, as to whether this transaction was clandestine or open, related to the persons who purchased and those who sold the interest in the paper, and those who furnished—if anyone did furnish—the money with which to make the partial payment or the full payment. It did not contemplate any reference whatever to the bank or its activity in being a conduit or intermediary in the transaction.

(At this point informal conversation occurred between Mr. Vale, counsel for the Northwestern National Bank, and Maj. Humes.)

Mr. VALE. Mr. Chairman, we have brought all the correspondence. The Major has read in evidence those letters which he considers pertinent and important for the consideration of the committee. I am simply suggesting that the other letters be returned to us, so that we may take them to our files, and that those letters which have been read, after they have been verified by the reporter, may be returned to us.

Senator OVERMAN. That will be done.

Maj. HUMES. The rest of this correspondence is merely with reference to renewals from time to time, and I assume that it would only lumber up the record. It is largely the transactions of the bank, and no one is questioning the legality of the bank's transactions.

Mr. VALE. Thank you very much, Major.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHRISTIAN W. FEIGENSPAN.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. What is your name?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Christian W. Feigenspan.

Senator WOLCOTT. And your residence?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. 53 Lincoln Park, Newark, N. J.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Feigenspan, you were present while the collateral was being presented and the names read a few moments ago?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state in what business the individuals and concerns whose names were signed to that collateral are engaged?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think they are all brewers.

Maj. HUMES. I believe you are one of the signers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am.

Maj. HUMES. Are you in the brewing business?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state whether or not all of those persons are members of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe they are.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state who Mr. John A. McDermott is?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. McDermott is a member of the organization committee of the United States Brewers' Association.

Maj. HUMES. He is the manager, is he not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The manager; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You were subpoenaed to produce certain papers. Have you those papers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you produce them?

Senator WOLCOTT. Pardon me a moment, Major. Is Mr. McDermott himself a brewer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; that is, I do not think he is.

Maj. HUMES. And, if he were, you would know it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Have you those papers? Will you produce them?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. You have asked me to produce a great variety of papers, and I have some of them here myself, and the secretary may have some. My subpoena would rather have brought them.

Maj. HUMES. That is frequently true of subpoenas duces tecum.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes. Now, if you will indicate which you want, I will try to produce them as you ask for them?

Maj. HUMES. First, you are the chairman of the publication committee of the United States Brewers' Association, are you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I am not. I was.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time were you the chairman of that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Up to about a year and a half ago, two years prior to that. Let me see: That would be about 1915 to 1917, I should say.

Maj. HUMES. Who succeeded you as chairman of that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Harry Poth.

Maj. HUMES. Of Philadelphia?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Of Philadelphia; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the records called for by this subpoena as chairman of that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. The secretary, I believe, has all of the records that are the result of the activities of that committee since I have ceased to be its chairman.

Maj. HUMES. You mean the secretary of the association, Mr. Fox?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox.

Maj. HUMES. He was ex officio secretary of the committee, too?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you the records of the committee covering the period when you were chairman?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox has all the records that there are of that committee, even during my period of chairmanship.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the records of all activities in which you participated, looking to the purchase of subsidization or financing, by loan or otherwise, of newspapers, periodicals, or magazines?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. In so far as I know of any, I have them all.

Maj. HUMES. Will you produce those?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have what I have left of the Washington Times matter. The Alien Property Custodian has most of it, and there is a memorandum in there of the papers that are in his possession.

Senator KING. Let me suggest that there is considerable evidence in the record, as I recall, relative to the purchase of the Washington Times, the loans which were made, if they were loans, to Mr. Brisbane, and that transaction. So far as that is in the record, I do not think there is any necessity of duplication.

Maj. HUMES. It was not my purpose to go into that particular transaction in a documentary way.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Those papers you have now are the only papers that are subsequent to the matters that the Alien Property Custodian has.

Mr. LAMBERT. May I ask a question there? I understood Senator King to say that there was considerable in the record relative to the purchase of the Washington Times. As I understand, this is only the second session that this committee has held, and I was present at the previous session, and I do not recall any evidence at all being submitted in connection with this matter at that time.

Senator KING. What I had reference to was the matter found upon pages 6, 7, 8, 9, and down to the middle of page 10 of the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Papers furnished by Mr. Palmer.

Mr. LAMBERT. I see. These were not formally taken up at the other hearing, but were just put in the record, as I understand.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; they were just put in the record.

Senator KING. I suppose there is no controversy as to those items referred to there, and there will be no controversy as to the authenticity of the documents therein referred to.

Mr. LAMBERT. We had not had the record, and I did not know that they had been formally put in.

Maj. HUMES. Do these all relate to the Washington Times?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In order that there may be no duplication, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that at leisure we look these over to see if there is anything that supplements what is in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; it will save time.

Maj. HUMES. It is rather difficult to do that and to do it accurately in a haphazard way.

Mr. Feigenspan, have you any other papers showing the furnishing of money or the furnishing of security by you, or others in cooperation with you, to other newspapers than the Washington Times?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have in my relations personally with another paper.

Maj. HUMES. What newspaper is that?

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, I have been absent from the city and was not present at a number of meetings, and I am not entirely familiar, perhaps, with the conclusions of the committee. My understanding was that the committee would receive from Mr. Palmer, the alien property custodian, any evidence that he had relative to the purchase of the Times, and that a notice should be served upon the Attorney General to produce any papers or documents which he had relative to the same transaction, and that after those documents had been submitted, if the committee conceived that their duties were to make broader and further investigations than the transaction relating to the purchase of the Times the matter should be referred back to the full committee.

Senator OVERMAN. The full committee had another meeting when you were not present, and concluded to go into this whole matter.

Senator NELSON. We decided to go on with the investigation.

Senator KING. So that I may know the scope of the investigation as it was broadened, as I understand the chairman and Senator Nelson, is it the understanding of the subcommittee, based upon subsequent instructions from the full committee, that the investigation shall extend to the activities of the liquor interests or brewery interests in political matters?

Senator OVERMAN. In the publishing of magazines and newspapers, or advertisements, boycotting, or anything of that sort.

Senator KING. Within any restricted period, or covering an indefinite period?

Senator OVERMAN. It is indefinite. Nothing was said as to the time it was to cover.

Senator NELSON. No time was fixed.

Senator KING. Then, as I understand, the hearing is to go beyond the scope of the resolution?

Senator NELSON. Not at all. It is not beyond the scope of the resolution that was passed by the Senate.

Senator KING. I refer to the resolution passed by the Senate. At any rate, then, as I understand the chairman and Senator Nelson, the committee has placed an interpretation upon the resolution called the Jones resolution, which authorizes the investigation of the activities of the liquor and brewery interests for an indefinite period, and relating to newspapers and magazines, their purchase and operation?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. That is covered by the resolution as furnished by Senator Jones and also by the preamble. It is covered by the preamble.

Senator KING. I do not think the wording of the resolution itself would authorize the construction just indicated by the chairman.

Senator NELSON. Is not that a matter we had better discuss in executive session instead of here?

Senator KING. I am not sure about that. It would seem to me that if testimony is offered which any member of the committee thinks contravenes the resolution the suggestion ought to be made, at least, so that the subcommittee might determine the matter.

Senator OVERMAN. If you have any objection to this, Senator, we will have an executive session.

Senator KING. In view of what has been stated as to the construction placed upon the resolution by the full committee, I do not know that I have any objection. At any rate, if so——

Senator OVERMAN. You can object at any time.

Senator KING. Yes; I understand that. At any rate, if I have, I shall call the matter to the attention of the committee in executive session.

Senator OVERMAN. All right. Proceed, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Feigenspan, what was the business of the publication committee of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To gather information, generally speaking, pertaining to our business, and to endeavor to make publicity of the facts that were ascertained, with the viewpoint of presenting the favorable side of our question.

Senator OVERMAN. For the purpose of making public sentiment in the country in favor of the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We were trying to present the good qualities of our product.

Senator NELSON. Was that all—simply the good qualities of your beer? Was that all you had in view?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That was the principal object. We tried to preserve our business.

Senator NELSON. Did you devote your propaganda to that question solely?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say that that was the object we hoped to attain.

Senator NELSON. I ask you, did you devote your propaganda to that subject, of showing the qualities of your beer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say, yes.

Senator NELSON. And that was all?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you not aim to secure newspapers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. They are mediums of publicity. We did not try to secure them. We tried to present certain facts to newspaper editors generally that would show them what our product was, so as to present a favorable viewpoint of it.

Senator NELSON. Did you buy space in the newspapers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We bought space for advertising purposes; yes.

Senator NELSON. What was your advertising; was that all?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That was what we hoped to accomplish by it.

Senator NELSON. To advertise the quality of your beer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; not necessarily the quality of our beer, altogether. I have not any of our advertisements to show you: but they speak for themselves.

Senator NELSON. Did you hire editorial writers to write articles for the magazines?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not editorial writers, but we hired writers to write up certain subjects.

Senator OVERMAN. What subjects?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Oh, you might say one subject that figured was the increasing consumption of drugs in prohibition territory. That was one that comes to mind at the moment.

Senator NELSON. Did you employ John Koren to write articles in the Atlantic Monthly?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. John Koren?

Senator NELSON. Koren?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Koren was not engaged by me; but was employed by the association while I was chairman. He was engaged as a statistician.

Senator NELSON. I remember seeing articles written by him in the Atlantic Monthly.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren, I believe, has written some articles.

Senator NELSON. Did he write those at the instance or suggestion of any of these associations?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not think so.

Senator NELSON. Was anyone paid for it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren was under a retainer from the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. By whom was he retained?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know who originally retained him; but he was retained by the United States Brewers' Association while I was chairman of the publication committee.

Senator OVERMAN. How much was he paid?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think it was $5,000 a year. I would not be positive as to that amount, but that is my recollection.

Senator NELSON. You recall his articles in the Atlantic Monthly, do you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not, to tell you the truth, because I did not read them; but I believe he did write them.

Senator NELSON. He had the kindness to send me a marked copy of the magazine; that is how I come to know.

Senator KING. I suppose, Mr. Witness, that in those States or districts in which the campaign for prohibition was being waged, the brewers—under their organization, the representatives of the organization—took steps, so far as they thought they could, to counteract whatever propoganda, if there was any, was being carried on by the other side?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator KING. And for that purpose, I suppose, they acquired newspaper space and employed writers to put before the public the views of the brewers.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is what we endeavored to do.

Senator NELSON. Are you not mistaken, Senator? Has he not said that their activities were merely as to the good quality of the beer?

Senator WOLCOTT. No; but you had elicited from him that it went further than that.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Feigenspan, what part did you or your people take in reference to controlling or influencing legislation?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. None that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a letter on the letterhead of your concern. The corporate name is Christian Feigenspan——

Mr. FEIGENSPAN (after examination of paper). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you this letter and inclosure, to refresh your recollection, and ask you if you ever interested yourselves in controlling legislative matters [handing witness Exhibit 772]?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN (after examining paper). That was in 1911. I must say I had forgotten this. That letter is written not by me.

Maj. HUMES. It is written by one of the officers of your company?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; he is not an officer. He is an employee, though.

Maj. HUMES. An employee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You remember the transaction now, do you?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know Fitzgerald and Walsh. They are people that we have business with in New Haven, or have had in the past. I do not recollect this particular thing, but it must be so; there is the letter.

Maj. HUMES. Then it is so that you, in connection with other brewers connected with the United States Brewers' Association, spent or expended or caused to be expended $3,000 in the State of Connecticut in connection with legislative matters?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not want to answer that, if I may be excused, because I do not know enough about that particular thing to know exactly whether that is a legislative thing, although it is in that communication.

Senator NELSON. Please talk a little louder.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I say I do not recollect this particular instance well enough to wish to commit myself on it.

Maj. HUMES. The letter covers the transaction pretty fully.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I suppose it does.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are you going to introduce that letter in evidence?

Senator NELSON. Are you not going to put that letter in?

Maj. HUMES. It is for the committee to say whether we want to put the whole of these long letters into the record or not, and it is a question whether it would not be better to decide upon that matter later.

Senator WOLCOTT. You had better have that marked or identify it; and Mr. Feigenspan vouches for the authenticity of the letter.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. There is no doubt about the letter.

Maj. HUMES. Now, I show you this letter marked "Exhibit No. 772," and ask you if that is the letter to which you have referred in the last few questions you have answered.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is the letter. It is marked "772."

Maj. HUMES. And you have no independent recollection of the transaction, but the letter speaks for itself?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The facts are there—1911.

Maj. HUMES. Is it the desire of the committee to read into the record matters of this kind at this time, or, the exhibits having been

Maj. HUMES. In order that there may be no duplication, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that at leisure we look these over to see if there is anything that supplements what is in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; it will save time.

Maj. HUMES. It is rather difficult to do that and to do it accurately in a haphazard way.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. That is covered by the resolution as furnished by Senator Jones and also by the preamble. It is covered by the preamble.

Is your definition of what a political purpose is, correct in that report?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know any more than that might have been, and undoubtedly was, a local option campaign or State-wide prohibition, or something of that sort.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever in your activities as a member of the publication committee, or as a committee, have any connection with the Socialist Party?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the same report, which reads as follows:

We are supplying the committee on alcohol of the Socialist Party with much important data, which will be used in connection with their report next year.

Were you in communication with the Socialist Party and the socialist organization in your activities?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I was not.

Maj. HUMES. Who was?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. If there had been any, the secretary might know of it. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Whom do you mean by the Secretary?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox. And he might have been in touch with the socialist organization, then?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Who prepared this report?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe Mr. Fox prepared it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who made the report; who filed it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I imagine I presented it to the convention as chairman of the committee. It was in 1915. I must have presented it.

Senator NELSON. Is this a report made by you?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. If it was during my time, it was.

Maj. HUMES. It was made in 1915.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. 1915? I think I was chairman of that committee at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Max Eastman, the editor of The Masses?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you or your committee or anyone for your committee have any connection or any business transactions with Mr. Eastman or with The Masses?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. You arranged to secure the publication of articles of supposed literary merit in many of the periodicals of the country, did you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We endeavored to get certain articles reproduced in some periodicals, I believe.

Maj. HUMES. You succeeded, did you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. In some instances.

Maj. HUMES. By what method did you succeed?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The best of my recollection of that is that they were presented and in some instances paid for by the periodical—in some instances, I believe.

Maj. HUMES. In order that there may be no duplication, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that at leisure we look these over to see if there is anything that supplements what is in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; it will save time.

Maj. HUMES. It is rather difficult to do that and to do it accurately in a haphazard way.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To gather information, generally speaking, pertaining to our business, and to endeavor to make publicity of the facts that were ascertained, with the viewpoint of presenting the favorable side of our question.

Senator OVERMAN. For the purpose of making public sentiment in the country in favor of the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We were trying to present the good qualities of our product.

Senator NELSON. Was that all—simply the good qualities of your beer? Was that all you had in view?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That was the principal object. We tried to preserve our business.

Senator NELSON. Did you devote your propaganda to that question solely?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say that that was the object we hoped to attain.

Senator NELSON. I ask you, did you devote your propaganda to that subject, of showing the qualities of your beer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say, yes.

Senator NELSON. And that was all?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you not aim to secure newspapers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. They are mediums of publicity. We did not try to secure them. We tried to present certain facts to newspaper editors generally that would show them what our product was, so as to present a favorable viewpoint of it.

Senator NELSON. Did you buy space in the newspapers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We bought space for advertising purposes; yes.

Senator NELSON. What was your advertising; was that all?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That was what we hoped to accomplish by it.

Senator NELSON. To advertise the quality of your beer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; not necessarily the quality of our beer, altogether. I have not any of our advertisements to show you; but they speak for themselves.

Senator NELSON. Did you hire editorial writers to write articles for the magazines?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not editorial writers, but we hired writers to write up certain subjects.

Senator OVERMAN. What subjects?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Oh, you might say one subject that figured was the increasing consumption of drugs in prohibition territory. That was one that comes to mind at the moment.

Senator NELSON. Did you employ John Koren to write articles in the Atlantic Monthly?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. John Koren?

Senator NELSON. Koren?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Koren was not engaged by me; but was employed by the association while I was chairman. He was engaged as a statistician.

Senator NELSON. I remember seeing articles written by him in the Atlantic Monthly.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren, I believe, has written some articles.

Senator NELSON. Did he write those at the instance or suggestion of any of these associations?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not think so.

Senator NELSON. Was anyone paid for it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Koren was under a retainer from the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. By whom was he retained?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know who originally retained him; but he was retained by the United States Brewers' Association while I was chairman of the publication committee.

Senator OVERMAN. How much was he paid?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think it was $5,000 a year. I would not be positive as to that amount, but that is my recollection.

Senator NELSON. You recall his articles in the Atlantic Monthly, do you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not, to tell you the truth, because I did not read them; but I believe he did write them.

Senator NELSON. He had the kindness to send me a marked copy of the magazine; that is how I come to know.

Senator KING. I suppose, Mr. Witness, that in those States or districts in which the campaign for prohibition was being waged, the brewers—under their organization, the representatives of the organization—took steps, so far as they thought they could, to counteract whatever propoganda, if there was any, was being carried on by the other side?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator KING. And for that purpose, I suppose, they acquired newspaper space and employed writers to put before the public the views of the brewers.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is what we endeavored to do.

Senator NELSON. Are you not mistaken, Senator? Has he not said that their activities were merely as to the good quality of the beer?

Senator WOLCOTT. No; but you had elicited from him that it went further than that.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Feigenspan, what part did you or your people take in reference to controlling or influencing legislation?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. None that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a letter on the letterhead of your concern. The corporate name is Christian Feigenspan——

Mr. FEIGENSPAN (after examination of paper). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you this letter and inclosure, to refresh your recollection, and ask you if you ever interested yourselves in controlling legislative matters [handing witness Exhibit 772]?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN (after examining paper). That was in 1911. I must say I had forgotten this. That letter is written not by me.

Maj. HUMES. It is written by one of the officers of your company?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; he is not an officer. He is an employee, though.

Maj. HUMES. An employee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You remember the transaction now, do you?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know Fitzgerald and Walsh. They are people that we have business with in New Haven, or have had in the past. I do not recollect this particular thing, but it must be so; there is the letter.

Maj. HUMES. Then it is so that you, in connection with other brewers connected with the United States Brewers' Association, spent or expended or caused to be expended $3,000 in the State of Connecticut in connection with legislative matters?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not want to answer that, if I may be excused, because I do not know enough about that particular thing to know exactly whether that is a legislative thing, although it is in that communication.

Senator NELSON. Please talk a little louder.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I say I do not recollect this particular instance well enough to wish to commit myself on it.

Maj. HUMES. The letter covers the transaction pretty fully.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I suppose it does.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are you going to introduce that letter in evidence?

Senator NELSON. Are you not going to put that letter in?

Maj. HUMES. It is for the committee to say whether we want to put the whole of these long letters into the record or not, and it is a question whether it would not be better to decide upon that matter later.

Senator WOLCOTT. You had better have that marked or identify it; and Mr. Feigenspan vouches for the authenticity of the letter.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. There is no doubt about the letter.

Maj. HUMES. Now, I show you this letter marked "Exhibit No. 772," and ask you if that is the letter to which you have referred in the last few questions you have answered.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is the letter. It is marked "772."

Maj. HUMES. And you have no independent recollection of the transaction, but the letter speaks for itself?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The facts are there—1911.

Maj. HUMES. Is it the desire of the committee to read into the record matters of this kind at this time, or, the exhibits having been identified, will it be sufficient simply to have them before the committee as exhibits?

Senator OVERMAN. We do not want to encumber the record with a great many items. It is all right, just so that you make a statement as you go along so that you can identify the papers afterwards.

Maj. HUMES. I think it is probably the better way to content ourselves with identifying the papers as we go along and afterwards the committee can determine whether they want them in the record or not.

Senator KING. You might identify them; and if so, if counsel should appear later or other persons who would want to be informed, they may, understand, give a résumé of the documents. If we do not want to put them all into the record we will not do so.

Maj. HUMES. You have been asked, Mr. Feigenspan, with reference to Mr. John Koren. Did you not also at the instance of the United States Brewers' Association write and cause to be printed articles in the National Municipal Review?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. I might say, in answering that question, that I, as chairman of that committee, in a general sort of way, assumed the chairmanship and defined, again to a limited extent, its policy. The details as to what individual writers may have written I was acquainted with at the time, in all likelihood, but they were primarily left to the Secretary. I am not intimately acquainted with who did the writing or how many writers there were or what they wrote, any more than that I got it in a casual way as the committee's work progressed.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have any considerable number of writers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I do not think they were very numerous.

Senator OVERMAN. About how many were there?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know offhand. I should not say much over half a dozen or so. I do not think there were that many.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to the advertising that was conducted by this committee, was that advertising for trade purposes or for political purposes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The advertising that was conducted by that committee, according to my recollection, was for the purpose of trying to offset the prohibition propaganda that had been put up against us.

Maj. HUMES. For a political purpose or for a trade purpose?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. With the viewpoint of trying to present our side of the question. I do not know whether you would call that political or trade. It seems to me it was with the idea of letting the people know the merits of our side of the question.

Maj. HUMES. Were you a member of the organization committee in 1915?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Or of the publication committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think I was a member at that time.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a report marked "A confidential report of the publication committee, to be read in executive committee," in 1915, and cite the following:

> We have also conducted the society financially in the advertising campaigns which have been carried on for political purposes in Georgia, Louisiana, and Maryland, and during the Michigan campaign we furnished the services of three journalists.

Is your definition of what a political purpose is, correct in that report?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know any more than that might have been, and undoubtedly was, a local option campaign or State-wide prohibition, or something of that sort.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever in your activities as a member of the publication committee, or as a committee, have any connection with the Socialist Party?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the same report, which reads as follows:

We are supplying the committee on alcohol of the Socialist Party with much important data, which will be used in connection with their report next year.

Were you in communication with the Socialist Party and the socialist organization in your activities?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I was not.

Maj. HUMES. Who was?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. If there had been any, the secretary might know of it. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Whom do you mean by the Secretary?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox. And he might have been in touch with the socialist organization, then?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Who prepared this report?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe Mr. Fox prepared it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who made the report; who filed it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I imagine I presented it to the convention as chairman of the committee. It was in 1915. I must have presented it.

Senator NELSON. Is this a report made by you?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. If it was during my time, it was.

Maj. HUMES. It was made in 1915.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. 1915? I think I was chairman of that committee at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Max Eastman, the editor of The Masses?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you or your committee or anyone for your committee have any connection or any business transactions with Mr. Eastman or with The Masses?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. You arranged to secure the publication of articles of supposed literary merit in many of the periodicals of the country, did you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We endeavored to get certain articles reproduced in some periodicals, I believe.

Maj. HUMES. You succeeded, did you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. In some instances.

Maj. HUMES. By what method did you succeed?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The best of my recollection of that is that they were presented and in some instances paid for by the periodical—in some instances, I believe.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you employed some one to write an article, and because of the standing of the author the author was able then to sell the article to a periodical for publication?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe that is true.

Maj. HUMES. And the author of the article received remuneration both from your organization and from the periodical in which the article was published?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe that is true in some instances.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the confidential report of the publication committee that was in executive session in 1915, that comes from the files of the United States Brewers' Association, as follows:

During the past year a large number of articles have been published in many of the leading newspapers and magazines which have either been suggested by us or have been based on our investigations, and from the medical viewpoint articles and editorials have been published in the Medical Record, in the Journal of the Medical Association, and in the British Journal of Inebriety.

Now, I ask you who arranged for the writing of articles that were published in those papers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Who would know?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the following in the same report:

Articles have been published in the Survey, Outlook, American Underwriter, and the Journal of the American Statistical Association, and the American Food Journal, and the National Municipal Review.

Do you know who arranged for the publication of those articles?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not. The secretary might know.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is Mr. Fox?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Fox; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Were these articles mentioned paid for?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I could not tell you. I really do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Feigenspan, did you have any relations with any foreign language publications in the country as chairman or representative of that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Louis N. Hammerling?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any correspondence or business transaction with him?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I never had any.

Maj. HUMES. In connection with foreign-language papers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have never had any correspondence.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any correspondence or connection with Sylvester Viereck?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have never had any.

Maj. HUMES. Did your committee have negotiations with him?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. If negotiations were carried on between your committee or anyone representing the United States Brewers' Association and the gentlemen just named, by whom would they have been conducted on behalf of your association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, by Mr. Fox, as secretary of the United States Brewers' Association; and there was a period where Mr. Andreae, who was connected with one of the activities of the United States Brewers' Association, had some correspondence, I believe, with Mr. Hammerling.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any knowledge of any transaction——

Senator KING. Major, are you through inquiring as to Hammerling?

Maj. HUMES. Of this witness; yes, sir.

Senator KING. Did you know that Mr. Hammerling claimed to control between 700 and 800 foreign-language newspapers in the United States?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know very little about the Hammerling matter as chairman of the publication committee. I have heard of some things about Mr. Hammerling in connection with what we termed the "Andreae bureau."

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the Andreae bureau? Did that come under the euphemistic title of the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The National Association of Commerce and Labor was, I believe, a branch of it. Mr. Andreae, so to speak, hypnotized our convention one year and received practically carte blanche to conduct certain activities against prohibition.

Senator WOLCOTT. How much money did your association turn over to him to finance that propaganda of his, do you recall?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, I do not. It was a considerable sum, I believe.

Senator KING. He got a little over $800,000 in three years, did he not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I would not be surprised.

Senator KING. And he was to use a portion of it through the National German-American Alliance?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe that there was something said about the National German-American Alliance in regard to that matter. Personally, I do not know of the transaction.

Maj. HUMES. You have no personal knowledge as to any moneys being paid by the United States Brewers' Association to the National German-American Alliance?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Of your own knowledge?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You were a member of the board of trustees of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have been a trustee for a considerable period; I do not remember just when I became a trustee.

Maj. HUMES. Was not the relation either established or to be established between the United States Brewers' Association and the National German-American Alliance discussed at this meeting of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Did you say that you did or did not know George Sylvester Viereck?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have never met the man.

Maj. HUMES. You have never met the man. Did you keep in touch with the activities of the publication committee and the places where they were appearing on their propaganda, and expending money, when you were on that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The publication committee was located in the home office of the United States Brewers' Association, and as chairman, I kept in reasonable touch with it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know anything about the financing of this Montgomery Advertiser?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I was one of the indorsers on the notes.

Senator NELSON. One of the guaranty notes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Feigenspan, what arrangements did you have with these men Allen and Sheehan to take care of your secondary liabilities?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know what the details of that transaction were any more than that Mr. Schmidt asked me whether I would indorse a note for a certain man, and I did so.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did Mr. Schmidt tell you the arrangement existing between the purchasers of the newspapers and the brewers who were to indorse the notes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I imagine he in a general way outlined it to me at the time. I do not recall the details of it. I knew we were to guarantee a certain amount of money which was in turn to be repaid at some future time.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was the agreement between the purchasers of the paper and the indorsers of the collateral security reduced to writing?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know of any of the details of the arrangement. Those arrangements were made by Mr. Schmidt.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Schmidt was an intermediary, then, between the group of indorsers and the purchasers of the paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And he ought to be in possession of all the facts in connection with the transaction?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think he is.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any arrangement or understanding between the United States Brewers' Association and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association with reference to financing the political activities of their joint interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know of any definite arrangement as between the liquor interests and——

Maj. HUMES. Was there not an agreement by which the two interests would join in their political activities, and a certain percentage of the expense would be borne by the brewers and a certain percentage would be met by the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, or the distillers, as the word was frequently used?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that years ago there was some such arrangement.

Maj. HUMES. How many years ago did that arrangement exist?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say about up to two years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Up to two years ago. That would be up to 1916?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Along in that neighborhood, I should judge.

Maj. HUMES. Under what circumstances did the relation cease to exist?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I became president of the association about two years ago—a year and a half ago, I think is the exact time—and my own feelings in the matter were that it were better that we take care of ourselves and let them take care of themselves; that any arrangement or any matters that might be done, that they do them as they saw fit, and we would do ours as we saw fit.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was your reason for thinking that the better policy?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, I think there is quite a difference between beer and whisky as a product.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is it not a fact also that along about that time the brewers recognized that some concession had to be made to the so-called temperance forces, and that the reasonable thing for the brewers seemed to be that the stronger drink had just as well be cut out in the hope that the milder drink therefore be saved?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I do not think that was altogether the viewpoint. I think a great many brewers have been of the belief that their product was the superior product and not an injurious product in any way, and they have been more or less antagonistic to whisky themselves. I say that was probably a minority of our members. Others thought we had a common battle and that we should fight it together, and the result was that the severance finally came about, I should say, about a year and a half or two years ago.

Senator NELSON. But there has been no hostility between the two interests since then, has there?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. That has always been your position, has it, Mr. Fiegenspan. that you ought to divorce your interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I felt that way personally.

Maj. HUMES. Now, do you remember a joint meeting that was held on the 29th day of December, 1914, where there was a conference between the brewers and the distillers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, I am not sure as to the date.

Maj. HUMES. You remember attending such a conference?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I remember that there was such a conference and——

Maj. HUMES. Along in the early fall or winter of 1914?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I remember that there was such a conference.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at that conference this very matter of the separation of the distilling from the brewing business was under discussion, at that meeting, and that the purpose of the meeting was to reconcile those differences, as the result of some criticism that had been made of the distillery people by you brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that may be correct.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, at that meeting, declare as follows:

Many of my friends outside of the trade have expressed this sentiment to me. That is, the sentiment that there should be a division.

With many of the brewers it is a question of salvage, and you can not stop the brewer whose business is destroyed or threatened with destruction from taking a course of this kind if they believe it will be to their advantage. Personally, I am opposed to any division, but the momentum for it is growing greater outside of the industry.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Did not that occur at that meeting?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Now, was this question of the share that each organization was to pay discussed at that meeting?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember Col. Ruppert being present?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know whether he was there or not. He probably was.

Maj. HUMES. I will refresh your recollection. Do you remember Col. Ruppert making a statement of this kind?

The distillers are not paying their fair share. Instead of paying one-third in these campaigns they ought to pay one-half.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that Col. Ruppert quite likely said that if he was there.

Maj. HUMES. That was his sentiment, was it not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. But do you remember that having been discussed at the meeting?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I really believe it was, but I do not recollect that positively.

Maj. HUMES. In order to refresh your recollection, is it not a fact that up until recently the working agreement between the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association and the brewers has been that one-third of the expense of the political activities should be defrayed by the distillers, or the wholesale liquor dealers, and two-thirds by the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe that was the arrangement some years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that that same arrangement goes on down through the State organizations of these respective trades?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Senator WOLCOTT. How is it in your State; does that arrangement exist?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir; it does not.

Senator WOLCOTT. Between the local organizations of these trades in your own State?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did it exist?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. It never did to my knowledge?

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Were you present at the Atlantic City convention when that association was organized?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I must have been there. I have not missed any conventions.

Maj. HUMES. Have you not had any conferences at which the work of that association was discussed both in the presence of and in the absence of Mr. Andreae?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have been at some conferences where that has been discussed; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not one of the purposes of that organization to control the foreign-language press of the country and to dominate its policy?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not think so. I do not recall any such matter in connection with the controlling of the foreign-language press.

Maj. HUMES. Can you tell us how the activities of the publication committee were carried on, other than the advertising that you have referred to? What other activities were conducted?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, we spoke about the articles that were prepared by the statistician and the advertising. That about covers the scope of the activities of the publication committee, as I recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Did the publication committee concern itself with the moving-picture business?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that there were a number of moving-picture suggestions presented, but I do not know—I think there was one film gotten out.

Maj. HUMES. One film gotten out that was used over the country?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that was the film of the manufacture of beer.

Maj. HUMES. "Liquid Bread" was the title of it, was it not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Did you undertake to utilize the legitimate stage for the purpose of carrying on your propaganda?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know how that film was——

Maj. HUMES. Well. I mean aside from the films, now; the legitimate stage, the drama. Did you utilize the drama?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, no; that was Mr. Andreae.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Andreae did that?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. He had something to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You have referred to a commerce and labor organization. Will you tell us what that is? It was mentioned awhile ago.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To the best of my knowledge the National Association of Commerce and Labor is an organization which was created for the purpose of raising funds.

Senator NELSON. Was that inspired directly or indirectly by the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that was the creation of Mr. Andreae.

Senator NELSON. How is that?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Of Mr. Andreae.

Senator NELSON. I know, but I asked you the question, Was that inspired directly or indirectly by the brewing interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Why, I imagine you might say that.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Andreae was the man who conceived the idea.

Senator NELSON. When was that organization formed, the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know the exact year. I am guessing, but I should say about 1914; somewhere along there. It was about 1914. I am not sure of the year.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he in the employ of the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. What is that?

Senator OVERMAN. Was Mr. Andreae in the employ of the brewers.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Andreae was in the employ of the brewers. He was a brewer himself, however.

Senator NELSON. What was the object of that organization?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To raise funds.

Senator NELSON. For what?

Senator WOLCOTT. It was more than that, Mr. Feigenspan.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, I know very little about the Association of Commerce and Labor. I know that it was created for the purpose of raising funds in connection with Mr. Andreae's scheme of general publicity, and so on.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course the raising of funds was for a purpose; the funds were to be used in a certain way.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The funds were to be used by Mr. Andreae for whatever his ideas were. He probably had full charge of them.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that the purpose of that was to raise funds to carry on propaganda under Mr. Andreae's direction.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That about covers it.

Senator OVERMAN. Was it to raise funds from the brewers or from the general public?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Why, from the brewers. It was trying to interest the allied trades with us; in other words, those people who were more or less dependent in their business on what purchases the brewers made from them.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know why it was named an association of commerce and labor?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know why they chose that name.

Senator NELSON. Was it not for the purpose of making the people, the public, believe that it was a kind of an innocent concern and was not interested in carrying on the propaganda of the brewers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. May I just interrupt for one question there, Senator?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that the reason that the name National Association of Commerce and Labor was accepted at the meeting at which it was organized at Atlantic City, was because of the similarity of that name to that of one of the departments of the Federal Government?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, I do not.

Maj. HUMES. And was not that suggested as one of the advantages of that name?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recollect that.

Senator KING. The organization, the corporation, known as the National Association of Commerce and Labor, was a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, and it was incorporated in 1913, was it not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Senator KING. And under the direction of Mr. Andreae?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe that is true.

Senator KING. And it was for the purpose of interesting what you have denominated allied organizations, such as the manufacturers of bottles?

Senator OVERMAN. And stoppers?

Senator KING. Well, all articles that would be remotely or directly related to the brewing and the liquor trades?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is true.

Senator KING. And Mr. Andreae received carte blanche there from the brewers and the liquor organizations to solicit contributions from those allied trades, and then to utilize the contributions which he received from them and from the brewers' organizations and the liquor organizations, for the purpose of combatting the temperance movement in any portion of the United States where they appeared?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. For the purpose of combating the prohibition movement.

Senator KING. The prohibition movement; and that his authority went so far as to authorize him to oppose candidates in various legislative districts within States, who might be opposed to the brewing and liquor interests, and to secure legislation that would be favorable to the brewers and to the liquor interests; or at any rate, to oppose legislation that would be hostile to those interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. His idea—the idea of it was to create public opinion, to express itself favorably to our interests.

Senator NELSON. Public opinion against candidates as well as principles, I suppose?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Well, public opinion, that we might not be exterminated.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. As against the prohibition movement.

Senator WOLCOTT. And that activity extended not only to creating favorable sentiment toward the business concerns but also to the securing of men on the party tickets who would be favorable to that business?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not believe that the idea of the Andreae program was entirely a political machine in the sense in which you are trying to put it. The Andreae program, as I understood it and as I believe it has been presented on a number of occasions by Mr. Andreae himself, was for the purpose of trying to create public opinion with reference to prohibition.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes: it is perfectly clear that that was one of the purposes; but Mr. Andreae is also very explicit in saying that the organization went a bit further than that.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know very little about it.

Senator WOLCOTT. It went clear down to indorsing nominees on party tickets, in seven or eight States, as I recall.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know very little of Mr. Andreae's bureau. He took matters very much in his own hands and conducted it as he saw fit.

Senator KING. I suppose it is a fact, and it seems to me it is a matter of public knowledge, that there was a strong public sentiment being developed in the United States; that there were antisaloon organizations being established in the counties and States, and efforts were being made against these local organizations, and the brewers and liquor interests seeing that their business was being jeopardized, they organized for the purpose of combating the organizations against them; and if prohibition candidates were put up in various legislative districts—that is, men supposed to favor prohibition—the liquor interests and the brewing interests attempted to defeat them and to secure men as candidates for the legislature who would oppose prohibition?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. We endeavored to have men elected who would oppose prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. You were present at a meeting of the board of trustees of the United States Brewers' Association on February 11, 1915; and, to refresh your recollection of the arrangement between the two organizations, I call your attention to this extract from the report of the organization bureau at that meeting:

> Mr. Gardner presented the report of his organization bureau. He reviewed the recent activities of the bureau and stated that a joint committee of six—three from the brewers and three from the distillers—would be created to regulate the expenditure of funds in any of the contests in which the two interests might cooperate, with the understanding that expenditures must not be made in any State that will not bear the closest scrutiny and of the legality of which there must be no doubt.
> On motion the report was received and adopted.

Do you remember that?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall that. It may be correct.

Maj. HUMES. Does that refresh your recollection as to the proportion of the expense which each one of these organizations was to pay?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe I have stated that my recollection of that was that the brewers paid two-thirds and the distillers one-third.

Maj. HUMES. What other newspapers than the Washington Times and the Montgomery Advertiser did you help, either personally or through your official connection with the United States Brewers' Association and your association with other brewers, to finance?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have helped one other paper personally, the Newark Ledger.

Senator NELSON. What paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The Newark Ledger.

Senator OVERMAN. New York or Newark, did you say?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The Ledger of Newark, N. J.

Senator NELSON. Is that a weekly or a daily paper, or both?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. It is a daily paper, and also a Sunday paper.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a morning and evening paper, both?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Morning and evening and Sunday.

Maj. HUMES. To what extent have you financed that paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Personally?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I have financed it to the extent of about $15,000, I think it is.

Senator NELSON. You mean that personally?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. $15,500 on notes.

Senator NELSON. And the association, or the interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Nothing.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say that you have financed it to the extent of $15,000?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I personally have loaned this newspaper $15,500.
Senator NELSON. Did your organization loan them any money?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not a cent.
Maj. HUMES. What is the nature of the security that you hold?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Notes indorsed by the owner.
Maj. HUMES. Is it a corporation?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time have those notes been running—approximately?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say about a year altogether.
Maj. HUMES. And this financial support was given for the purpose of starting the paper, was it not?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; the paper had started.
Maj. HUMES. The morning paper had started?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The morning paper had started.
Maj. HUMES. But the evening paper was started as a result of your financial assistance?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I had made some advances to him while the morning paper was in existence, and the evening paper required some more assistance.
Maj. HUMES. That is all the financing that you have done for that paper?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is all that I have done personally. I am interested in two other companies that have financed them to some extent.
Senator NELSON. What are those companies?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. One is the Oraton Investment Co., which is a holding company for the Christian Feigenspan Brewery, and the other company is the New Jersey Development Co., which is a small company of which I am the principal stockholder.
Senator NELSON. Is that mixed up in the brewing business also?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.
Senator NELSON. What is the New Jersey Development Co.?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. It is a company that I organized about four or five years ago to take over a small interest that I had in different things. I called it the Jersey Development Co.
Senator NELSON. How much have those two companies you have just named contributed to this newspaper?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. One has contributed $75,000, and the other $59,500.
Senator NELSON. What security have they got? Is it in the shape of a loan?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. In the shape of a loan—notes.
Senator NELSON. Who signed the notes?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The owner of the paper.
Senator WOLCOTT. That is a total of $150,000 which you and the concerns in which you are interested have advanced to this newspaper?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.
Senator OVERMAN. Have you any collateral?
Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Notes; that is all.
Senator OVERMAN. Just simply notes for the money?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is all; notes indorsed by the owner.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the understanding as to the repayment of those notes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To repay them as he can. The fact of the matter is that there would not have been as much money in it if I could have avoided it. The paper has not been successful, and has been rather expensive.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who controls the paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The owner has the stock interest.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who controls the policy of the paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. He does.

Senator WOLCOTT. You have no voice in it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. And never undertake to make any suggestions to him as to the policy?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. It is up to him to decide his own policy.

Senator WOLCOTT. And there was no understanding with him when the loans originated as to what should be the policy of the paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. With respect to the brewing interests?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I assumed that he was friendly to our interests, otherwise I probably would not have helped him along with the paper. He had been friendly, and he came to me and asked for assistance, and I gave it to him, and the result is that I have been helping him since—it is purely personal, a more or less friendly matter rather than anything else.

Senator WOLCOTT. It was a case where there was a newspaper that was friendly to your interests, and to save that newspaper from going out of business you came to its rescue?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is about what it amounts to.

Senator WOLCOTT. And of course your motive was that the paper might continue as an advocate of your ideas in connection with the business.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I was pleased to have it that way. There is no doubt about that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you at any time have any discussion with the publisher of this paper as to whether or not there should be secrecy maintained as to your connection with the paper or your financial obligations?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. That matter has been public for some time. As a matter of fact, he himself, I believe, gave it out. about six or eight months ago.

Maj. HUMES. In order to keep the record straight, I call the committee's attention to the following report of this newspaper, which does not appear to show these particular securities outstanding, which accounts for the inquiry as to secrecy.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the sworn statement by the newspaper?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; to the Post Office Department, and I place it in evidence.

(The paper was marked "Feigenspan Exhibit No. 1," and is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

FEIGENSPAN EXHIBIT No. 1.

[Copy.]

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for which such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date shown above is 28,744. (This information is required from daily publications only.)

F. T. RUSSEL.
(Signature of editor, publisher, business manager, or owner.)

Sworn to and subscribed before me this Second day of October, 1918.
[SEAL.] H. A. KABCENELL.
(My commission expires October 1920.)
Form 3526.—Ed. 1916.

NOTE.—This statement must be made in duplicate and both copies delivered by the publisher to the postmaster, who shall send one copy to the Third Assistant Postmaster General (Division of Classification), Washington, D. C. and retain the other in the files of the post office. The publisher must publish a copy of this statement in the second issue printed next after its filing.

Senator WOLCOTT. The notes which you hold as evidence of this indebtedness are the notes of the individual owner of the paper, or are they the notes of the corporation?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. They are the notes of the corporation indorsed by the individual.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to this corporation, this New Jersey Development Co., who are the stockholders?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. They are mostly relatives, and some of the employees of our brewery.

Maj. HUMES. Are there any other brewers or brewing concerns who are stockholders?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. I do not care who the individuals are.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; there are no brewing interests interested in that company in any way.

Maj. HUMES. What is the business of that corporation?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The history of it is that I grub-staked a man to South Africa, and he happened to bring home a little money, and I had bought some hops once for a lot of friends on a different speculation, and I made some money, and instead of dividing it up we thought we would put it into one pot and see if we could not make some more money, and that is how it came into existence.

Maj. HUMES. Has it been used in any way for newspaper purposes, to control or dominate the policy of any newspaper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Absolutely not.

Maj. HUMES. Except this one loan?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is all.

Maj. HUMES. When you made the loan or became an indorser for the loan to the Montgomery Advertiser, at whose solicitation did you do it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Mr. Edward Schmidt, I believe, presented that.

Maj. HUMES. He is the president of the E. Schmidt & Sons Brewery in Philadelphia?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And also is the president of the Northwestern National Bank?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And at his solicitation you became one of the gentlemen who were the signers of these indorsements?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What, if any, understanding or agreement was entered into at that time with reference to the cost of the paper?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know anything about that.

Maj. HUMES. You entered into it on the faith of Mr. Schmidt recommendation?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to the Washington Times, did you negotiate that loan, or did some one else negotiate it, the same as Mr. Schmidt negotiated the Montgomery Advertiser matter?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not remember how it began, but I probably had more to do with it—in fact had all to do with it, ultimately bringing that transaction to a conclusion.

Maj. HUMES. Who first solicited this financial support?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall. I do not know whether that matter came to me through Mr. Brisbane or not, but I am inclined to think it did. I think it did.

Maj. HUMES. Who else might possibly have initiated the negotiations?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think it was Mr. Brisbane. Mr. Crain might have suggested it, and that might have led on to Mr. Brisbane, but I do not recall exactly.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Crain?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You mean Mr. Crain of Washington?

Maj. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The general counsel for the Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever discuss that loan and the preliminary negotiations with anyone except Mr. Brisbane and Mr. Crain and the signers of the notes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I might have asked some people to sign who did not agree to go along with it.

Maj. HUMES. How long had you known Mr. Brisbane?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say for a few years—two or three years.

Maj. HUMES. How did you get acquainted with him?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not just recall now. I think I met him when I went over to see him at his office one day about a certain matter that I had in mind.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever meet him prior to that time?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Did you meet him as the result of business relations that you had with any of the New York papers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. I think I recall a newspaper in New Jersey, the Star-Eagle, which was in the hands of a receiver and which was offered for sale, and I went over there with the thought of trying to interest Mr. Brisbane in the purchase of that paper, but nothing came of it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you discuss the purchase of the Star-Eagle with Mr. Brisbane?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I tried to interest him in buying it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever try to interest anyone else in it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you talk with Mr. Hearst about it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I do not know Mr. Hearst.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Paul Block?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know what business Paul Block is in?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Have you not ever come in contact with Paul Block in your advertising campaigns, as an advertising man?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. And a press agent?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall him. With whom is he connected?

Maj. HUMES. With himself.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall him.

Maj. HUMES. I think under the name of Paul Block (Inc.).

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall him.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not remember the discussion in the Brewers Association of a million-dollar advertising campaign?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. You do not remember that at all?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I know that we have discussed advertising campaigns, but I do not recall that particular one.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how much you have expended in one year in advertising campaigns?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Not off-hand; no, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. About how much?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The only one that I might guess at would be this last one, and I think we have expended in this last campaign something in the neighborhood of $300,000.

Senator OVERMAN. What last campaign do you mean?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The campaign that has been running during the last year, but I am guessing at those figures because I have not them intimately in mind.

Maj. HUMES. The appropriation for 1915 was $100,000 for advertising, was it not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not remember, I do not recall the amount.

Maj. HUMES. And in all this advertising that you have done, you have never come in contact with Mr. Block?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall him. I may have met him, but do not remember him.

Maj. HUMES. Subsequent to your interview with Mr. Brisbane Mr. Block acquired control of the Star-Eagle, did he not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. I do not know whether there is a Mr. Block there.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Block is not there personally. Do not misunderstand me. Do you not know that he has acquired control of that paper, he and his associates?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I thought Mr. Thalheimer was the man who was practically in control of that paper. I am connected with a little company that is in the hands of a receiver, that is, I am merely there acting in behalf of the Federal Trust Co., and all of our negotiations for the lease of the building in which they are were made by a man named Thalheimer.

Maj. HUMES. Thalheimer or Talmage?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think he has changed his name, now that you have mentioned it. It used to be Thalheimer, and he has changed it to Talmage.

Maj. HUMES. Can you not refresh your recollection as to the negotiations undertaken to organize a million dollar advertising campaign?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not recall the particular campaign. There were some campaigns discussed, which would have involved a considerable sum of money, but any particular one involving a million dollars I do not recall.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how the $300,000 in the last campaign was expended?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe the secretary has the figures here, which would show just how it was expended.

Maj. HUMES. What are the present dues or assessments of the members of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The dues are a half cent a barrel and the assessments are simply levied from time to time as necessity demands, or as we need funds. If we need any money for any purpose, we levy an assessment.

Maj. HUMES. In 1913 at a meeting in Chicago there were contracts made covering additional assessments of three cents a barrel for a period of five years, were there not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that is correct.

Maj. HUMES. Have those contracts been kept in force during the full period of five years?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. Generally speaking, I think not. That was in connection with the Andreae program.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how much money that would raise?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. It would raise a very big amount.

Maj. HUMES. The estimate was that it would become operative when brewers representing 25,000,000 barrels had subscribed. The minimum amount, therefore, would have been $750,000. As a matter of fact, the contracts that were signed at that time exceeded the minimum estimate?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think that is correct, although I do not recall that.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by contracts signed at that time?

Maj. HUMES. They signed a regular contract agreeing to contribute this much every year, 3 cents a barrel.

Senator NELSON. The brewers did?

Senator OVERMAN. And the minimum would be $750,000?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. It was to become operative as soon as 25,000,000 barrels had subscribed, and the 25,000,000 barrels would make $750,000. Unless they equaled or exceeded that amount, none of the contracts became operative.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any proof to show the maximum amount collected?

Maj. HUMES. I think so; yes. In New Jersey, what is the assessment of the New Jersey State Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not think our assessment has ever been over 2 cents a barrel. It is generally 1 cent a barrel.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you mean to say that they would assess for a national campaign and then for a State campaign separtely?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The United States Brewers' Association is an organization which makes assessments according to their requirements.

Senator OVERMAN. And in addition to that, if a New Jersey corporation was a member of that association——

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. It would pay twice. It would pay to the national association and to the local or State association.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that so generally in all of the States?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe so; yes.

Senator OVERMAN. So they must have raised an enormous sum of money in that way, if the national raised $750,000 and then the State raised an additional amount?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. The actual collections of these amounts are not as large as they might seem to be. While the brewers, I believe, did contribute for a year, yet after a while they got tired of paying 3 cents a barrel, and it not so easy to collect it.

Maj. HUMES. What I wanted to get at was the way the State associations are related to the national association, and I speak of New Jersey now because of the fact that you come from that State. You have a New Jersey State Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you local brewery associations in small geographical divisions of the State?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. There is only one association in New Jersey, and that is the New Jersey Brewers' Association.

Maj. HUMES. Are you connected officially with that organization?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am a member of it.

Maj. HUMES. Are you an officer?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever been an officer of it?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Are you a director?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am one of the trustees.

Maj. HUMES. If you are a trustee, then you are an officer, are you not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. I presume I am in that sense.

Maj. HUMES. You say that the assessment in New Jersey is 2 cents a barrel?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No. I do not recall what our assessments were in a particular year. I think this last year it was 2 cents.

Maj. HUMES. The practice of these State associations is not to have regular dues, but when money is needed to make assessments?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; we have dues.

Maj. HUMES. But they make a special assessment if there is an emergency?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. And we have assessments for various matters.

Maj. HUMES. The 2 cents you speak of are the dues, are they not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; the dues of the New Jersey Association, I believe, are a half cent a barrel.

Maj. HUMES. Each State association has its own method of collecting funds?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Each State fixes its own dues and assessments.

Maj. HUMES. And you think your dues and assessment this year are 2 cents, but the assessment varies from year to year according to the necessity of the association, and each year they fix the assessment that is going to be collected, do they not?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. That is as I understand it; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is there a State wholesale liquor dealers' association in New Jersey?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Before you go into that, do I understand that your brewery, for instance, in Newark, N. J., would pay to the national association a half cent a barrel regular dues, and 3 cents a barrel assessment?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. In the years where the assessments were 3 cents.

Senator WOLCOTT. That would be 3½ cents to the national association and in the same year you would pay to the State association a half cent a barrel regular dues, and if the assessment that year was 2 cents, that would make 2½ cents, total; so that if you found a year where the assessment, national, was 3 cents, and local 2 cents, the total of your contributions to that fund would be 6 cents a barrel in that year?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes; that is correct.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to the State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, who are the officers of it in New Jersey?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Is there a working agreement similar to the working agreement that formerly existed between the national associations in New Jersey?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. To my knowledge there never has been a working agreement between the liquor dealers and the brewers in New Jersey.

Maj. HUMES. In campaigns did you not have your joint committees and cooperate?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know what the dues of the State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association are in New Jersey?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Did they have a local association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. What is the relation between your State brewers' association in New Jersey and the retail liquor dealers' association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. None.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not have a working agreement, a joint committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that a few years ago a joint harmony committee was organized between the National Brewers' Association and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association and the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, in order to coordinate the activities of the three associations and to get greater efficiency?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe there was some attempt at some such thing.

Maj. HUMES. Were you a member of that committee?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I was not. I do not believe I was.

Senator OVERMAN. How many barrels of beer are manufactured in New Jersey that had to pay this tax?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. At the present time?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; or when it was being paid last year.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I should say about 2,500,000. Between that and 3,000,000.

Senator KING. I suggest that we take a recess at this point.

Senator OVERMAN. How long will it take you with this witness?

Maj. HUMES. I think I am practically through so far as this witness is concerned. There are just one or two more questions. Can you give this committee from your records at home exactly what dues and assessments have been collected by the New Jersey State Brewers' Association during the last period of five years, by years?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think I can get that from the treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. The reason I am asking is this—to save the necessity of subpœnaing the treasurer. I think what the committee desires to know is the extent of these activities, and if you will furnish a schedule of the rates during a period of five years by the State association and the total amounts collected during that period——

Senator OVERMAN. National and State.

Maj. HUMES. The national records I assume we can get from another source.

Senator OVERMAN. That is true, but I assume that he would have some knowledge of it.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. You want the New Jersey State Association?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; the rates for a period of five years and the amount collected during that period of five years.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And if you will mail that to Senator Overman it will probably not be necessary to examine you on that subject any further.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I shall see that that is done.

Senator OVERMAN. You may send it to me as soon as you can.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I shall send it to you just as soon as I get back.

(A letter from the witness in response to the above request is here printed in the record, as follows:)

FEIGENSPAN EXHIBIT No. 2.

[Office of the president, C. W. Feigenspan, Christian Feigenspan, a corporation, brewers and bottlers of lager beer, ales, and porter.]

You asked for the five preceding years, but I am unable to give you the figures for the year 1914 because the former treasurer, who was in office during 1914, has since died and his records are not available.

Very truly yours,

C. W. FEIGENSPAN,
President.

Senator KING. Is there anything that you desire to interrogate this witness about relative to the papers he handed to you?

Maj. HUMES. I wanted a chance during the recess to look at those papers and see if there is anything that is not already in the record. I have not had a chance to look at them, they have been identified, and we will see that they are returned to you, or perhaps we can give them to Mr. Crain, who will return them to you.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I would like very much to take them back with me.

Senator WOLCOTT. When the payment on account of the Montgomery Advertiser notes was made, who made the payment?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I did. You mean——

Senator WOLCOTT. The original Montgomery Advertiser notes were for $50,000 each, and they have been reduced until they now stand at $45,000.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And some payments have been made on account of those two notes?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who made those two payments?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think I received a check from Mr. Schmidt, but I would have to look that up to be sure. Do you mean who sent me the money?

Senator WOLCOTT. No; who paid the bank—the Northwestern Bank?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know. That is between Mr. Schmidt and the Montgomery Advertiser.

Maj. HUMES. Do you say that Mr. Schmidt sent you the money?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I do not know whether he did or not. I understood the question to be who paid me. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that your share of the financing of the Montgomery Advertiser was a direct outlay of money by you?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. A loan by you through the bank?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. No; I indorsed the note.

Maj. HUMES. I thought so; and I wondered why the money would be paid to you.

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Oh, no; that is a misstatement. I got my dates mixed a little on that trip.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take a recess at this point until 2.30 o'clock p. m.

(Accordingly, at 1 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee stood in recess until 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m., Senator Lee S. Overman (chairman) presiding.

In response to an inquiry as to the whereabouts of Mr. Feigenspan, the witness on the stand at the time the recess was taken, it was stated that he had left the city, under the impression that the committee no longer desired his presence. Mr. Crain stated that Mr. Feigenspan had requested that the papers left by him with the committee might be turned over to Mr. Crain, and this was accordingly done.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HUGH F. FOX.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman).

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, you are the secretary of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time have you occupied that position?

Mr. Fox. Nearly 11 years.

Maj. HUMES. Where is the principal office of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. 50 Union Square, New York.

Maj. HUMES. Will you tell us briefly what the United States Brewers' Association was organized for, and in what practical purposes, either within or beyond the scope of the original purpose of the association, it is engaged—just a brief statement?

Mr. Fox. I will make it as brief as I can, sir.

The association was organized previous to the Civil War, about 56 or 57 years ago. I believe its inception arose in this way: At that time, of course, the brewing business was somewhat small; but, at a meeting of the National Democratic Convention, which was held in 1860, one of the delegates from Pennsylvania was a certain Frederick Lauer, of Reading, Pa. Mr. Lauer was a brewer. Mr. Lauer went to the convention, opposed secession, returned home, organized an infantry company, and interested a number of his colleagues on the Union side; and out of that, apparently, grew——

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "colleagues"?

Mr. Fox. Brewing colleagues. I understand that a good many such companies were organized by brewers. Most of the brewers at that time were of German origin or antecedents. Out of that grew the United States Brewers' Association, the original purpose of which was, I believe, to cooperate with the Government in establishing a fair and workable tax system. Either at the instance of the Government or in cooperation with the revenue officials, the brewers sent a commission abroad to study the revenue laws of other countries, and returned, making a suggestion which was highly commended, and was finally incorporated into the present internal-revenue-tax system—what is known as the barrel-tax system as applied to brewers.

Then, for a good many years, the association was developed along the technical side; and, then, came a movement to improve crop conditions; and, following that, a movement to establish fair labor conditions in the industry. The brewer was always very jealous of his reputation as a manufacturer, but he was a poor merchant. His merchandising methods were extremely careless and unfortunate.

Then, along, perhaps, 30 years ago—I think it was about that time—suddenly came the invention of artificial refrigeration, followed by an enormous increase in our immigration. The invention of artificial refrigeration practically doubled, or more, the capacity of the breweries, and the result was an enormous overcompetition, and a tremendous increase in the number of saloons. The result of that overcompetition was, as you gentlemen, of course, have observed, in all our large cities, a very much greater number of saloons than were needed for the reasonable convenience of the people.

Senator NELSON. And many of those saloons were financed by the brewers?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir; exactly.

Seantor NELSON. They were really agencies of the brewers.

Mr. Fox. Yes—well, I was just going to come to that, Senator. As the result of that overcompetition, the brewers very foolishly—and that is what I referred to in their merchandising methods—were induced to finance these saloons, to the extent at least of their licensing and their equipment. They financed them, however, without really controlling them, which was a foolish business proposition. At any rate, out of that overcompetition and out of the lax municipal methods in some States, and the combination of circumstances, the saloon evil, as we know it, arose, and saloon conditions, in a good many parts of the country, became notoriously bad.

What I am leading up to is this: That along about the beginning of the present century, or perhaps a few years later, the brewers realized that the prohibition wave was growing, that there was something brewing besides beer, and they realized that the point of attack was mainly the saloon; and for some years they bent their efforts in rather a futile way to the improvement of saloon conditions, in some States cooperating with civic organizations, and in others with lawmaking bodies, to try and establish licensing conditions that would amend the situation. They did not go deep enough, however. The situation did not amend itself except in a few States. Then, along about the time that I became associated with the United States Brewers' Association they had finally come to realize, I think, that what they really had to deal with was a great public sentiment which had been gradually growing by various ways, and at last had become organized.

They then had two problems before them. One was the conversion of their own members to the conditions for which they were more or less responsible, and to the necessity for the betterment of conditions; and incidentally the leaders of the industry felt very strongly that there must be a separation from the liquor interests, and that the real temperance method was what is popularly known as the preference to beer and light wines. Now, that was a work which lasted considerable time. In fact, I do not think up to quite recently we could say that we had put it over with the large bulk of the industry. There was always opposition to it. Then, coincident with that, began this effort to—what shall I say?—to stem the growing sentiment against them and to try and get leaders of thought interested in putting forward some kind of a program, no matter how drastic it might be, which, while developing a temperance method, might at the same time save the brewing industry.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you there? I think there is one thing that you have overlooked in this analysis which you have made, and that is the noninterference program which existed with reference to labor disputes. That is really part of the history of the development of the industry, and one of the purposes of the organization, one of the things in which they interested themselves. Will you just explain what that is, and when it was inaugurated, and to what extent it continues to be in operation?

Mr. Fox. I am not quite sure that I get your thought, Major. Do you mean in regard to labor conditions?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; the noninterference resolutions.

Mr. Fox. Oh, yes. The brewers were, I think, perhaps the first great industry to become, and perhaps they are to-day the only industry to be, 100 per cent unionized; and an agreement was made among the brewers that if a strike occurred in any one city competing brewers who were shipping beer in from other cities would agree not to ship their beer during the settlement of the difficulty. It was a gentleman's agreement, and it was, I suppose, a rough and ready way of providing that the parties to the conflict should fight it out among themselves. Out of that grew the establishment of working relations of a cordial character between the brewery workers and the United States Brewers' Association and the appointment of a national adjuster on our part.

Maj. HUMES. Go ahead. That is your general statement of it. I do not want to interrupt your statement of the activities and purposes of the association. Please go on where you left off.

Senator OVERMAN. You were talking about the effort to counteract this prohibition sentiment.

Mr. Fox. Then came up the question of a publicity department, a publicity system. The association had always published rather scholarly volumes and pamphlets, etc., which had reached a very small number of the people, and they floundered around for a long time trying to find what was the best way of reaching two classes of people: First, the class of people who lead public sentiment, and then the mass of the people. I think we made as many mistakes as anybody in such a predicament could make in trying to solve that problem, and I think we finally concluded that it was an utterly impossible task to reach the mass of the people directly, and therefore that the problem before us was to try to put the facts before the people of the country whom we believed to be the leaders of public sentiment.

I think that general statement covers the matter.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, have you responded fully to the subpœna duces tecum that was served?

Mr. Fox. I have everything that we have here, sir, in our possession.

Maj. HUMES. In order to save time, while we are going on with other matters, if I may take this and let Capt. Lester look it over it will save your time and the time of the committee.

Mr. Fox. I have made a very diligent search, and had my clerks make it, and I think we have everything here.

Maj. HUMES. While you are unwrapping that package I will ask you a question or two. Have you in with these papers the canceled checks and check books of the association or any of the financial records of the association?

Mr. FOX. I have the records of our receipts from dues, of the receipts from the advertising fund, of the expenditures for advertising, and the current month's expenditures, perhaps, and I have the pass books of the banks with which we deal, which the treasurer furnished me.

Maj. HUMES. Has the practice of the association during the last two years in handling the financial records of the association changed, or is the practice that seemed to be adhered to prior to February, 1916, still in vogue, namely, the destruction of check stubs and the destruction of canceled checks with each bank balance?

Mr. FOX. I believe that practice is still in vogue, but that is a matter about which the treasurer can tell you.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Fox, there has been some mention of the noninterference resolutions. You say that the brewers were 100 per cent union. Is it not a fact that the attitude of the brewing industry toward organized labor was a subject of much agitation and much discussion, and that it was finally decided for political reasons that in order to secure or endeavor to secure the help and cooperation of organized labor in political contests it was expedient to unionize the industry? Is not that a fact?

Mr. FOX. I do not think it is, sir. I do not recall any such discussion in my time. I think it is probable—this is somewhat conjecture—that the determining consideration was the fact that probably 90 per cent of the product is consumed by workingmen.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the United States Brewers' Association utilized or created a labor department in its political activities for the purpose of trying to dominate as far as possible the labor vote in its political contests?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge. It might have been to some extent the case without my knowing it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Fox, how long has the industry been 100 per cent unionized?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I have been associated with it for 11 years, and I should say before that time.

Senator WOLCOTT. When you say the industry has been 100 per cent unionized, do you mean by that only that portion of the industry that has joined the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. No; I think practically every brewery in the country was a union shop.

Senator NELSON. A closed shop?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that there were on the pay roll of the United States Brewers' Association certain members or officers of labor organizations whose activities in behalf of the association were purely political?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge, sir. To be specific, we had, in general, charge of what we call the labor department of the association a gentleman named Moffett, who was the former president of a labor organization. I presume that his connection with it has only been nominal since he was with us. We also had in the organization bureau a gentleman named Thompson, who, I believe, was the president of a national labor organization. Those are the only two of whom I have any personal knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. They were on the pay roll of the United States Brewers' Association, were they not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You did have a labor department?

Mr. FOX. We had a labor department. However, the understanding was that the labor department was for the purpose of adjusting labor difficulties within the industry. That was in the charge of the gentleman named Moffett.

Senator OVERMAN. If you were all unionized, why should there be any trouble?

Mr. FOX. Oh, constant difficulties were arising, and the labor adjuster of our organization and the officers of the International Brewery Workers' Union would be called by the locals to the spot to act as adjusters and conciliators.

Maj. HUMES. I will pass the labor matter for the present, until we find some data here.

Senator WOLCOTT. There were some breweries that manufactured what the union men called "scab" beer, were there not?

Mr. FOX. Oh, yes; occasionally, here and there; but in volume of output I should say that the industry was overwhelmingly union.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, you say that the brewing industry was unionized. Was there ever any national agreement made with the unions directly affected?

Mr. FOX. I do not think that would have been practicable.

Maj. HUMES. I am speaking of the fact, not the practicability of it. Was not that matter up, and did not the association refuse to recognize nationally or enter into any national agreement with organized labor at the executive sessions of the trustees and of the labor committee?

Mr. FOX. Let me say before I answer that question, if I may be allowed, that I am not speaking as much by the card on details of the labor matter as I might on some others, because I only have a general knowledge of it; but my recollection is that the employers were constantly urging the International Brewery Workers' Union to have such a national agreement, and that they said it was not feasible. I think the effort came from our side.

Senator NELSON. Did you have charge of the publicity bureau?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir. That was under my general supervision.

Senator NELSON. Will you go on and tell us the way in which you operated that bureau? What work did you do in the publicity department, whom did you employ, and how did you carry on your work?

Mr. FOX. It is so much of a story that I am a little puzzled how to begin, Senator. If you will let me do it in my own way, I will do the best I can.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Mr. FOX. For instance, Mr. Koren's name was mentioned this morning. When I came to the association I was immediately impressed by the constant mass of utterly misleading data which was being put before the public by the protagonists of the prohibition movement. It seemed to me that it was highly important for us, acting presumably selfishly on behalf of an industry, to make sure that everything in the nature of a statement of fact or a statistical nature that we sent out should be able to stand the light of he closest scrutiny. I had been associated in public work of other kinds for some time with Mr. John Koren, and was very much impressed not only with his ability as a statistician but with the remarkable work which he did as the secretary of the so-called committee of fifty which had conducted an investigation under Seth Low and a group of public men for a number of years into the various aspects of the liquor business. I was responsible for the retaining of Mr. Koren.

Senator NELSON. You hired him?

Mr. Fox. Yes. It was an annual retainer.

Senator NELSON. How much?

Mr. Fox. I have forgotten what it started at; in a rather modest way, but——

Senator NELSON. What did it culminate in?

Mr. Fox. It finally culminated in $5,000 a year.

Senator NELSON. Is he still employed?

Mr. Fox. No; he was until a few months ago.

Senator NELSON. He quit a few months ago?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. How long did you employ him?

Mr. Fox. As my recollection serves me, it ran for 9 or 10 years.

Senator NELSON. He was employed in writing for the magazines, was he not?

Mr. Fox. No, sir. The understanding I had with Mr. Koren, which was of a verbal nature, was that he was not to be called upon to write for us; that he was not to be called upon to submit to us anything that he did write; that he was to have an absolutely free hand to state his own views in any way he saw fit, but he was to furnish statistical advice, to furnish statistical tables where called upon, and to do a considerable amount of translating.

Senator NELSON. You know about his having articles published in the Atlantic Monthly, do you not?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir; but I did not see any of those articles until they were published.

Senator NELSON. Now, go on and tell us what agencies you employed and the methods in which you carried on your work.

Mr. Fox. First of all, we began by the publication of reprints of articles which appeared in the newspapers and magazines and wherever anything appealed to us as being accurate and valuable.

Senator NELSON. Was that in pamphlet form?

Mr. Fox. Yes; generally in pamphlet form.

Senator NELSON. And circulated through the mails?

Mr. Fox. Those were circulated in several ways. For instance, we made mailing lists, individual mailing lists, legislators, publicists; in a general way, the class of people that you would naturally think of as professional classes. Then we also furnished those pamphlets in bulk to the State and local associations for their use in any way they saw fit. The volume of it is indicated by the fact that in 1915 we distributed in these various channels something like 11,000,000 of these pamphlets.

Senator NELSON. What other activities in the publicity line did you engage in?

Mr. FOX. Then we also made an effort to see that any notable publications were put in the hands of libraries and higher institutions of learning, and in some cases——

Senator NELSON. You mean by "notable publications," notable publications in the interest of your business?

Mr. FOX. No; I would like to qualify that, Senator. For instance, the reports of the committee of fifty; the report recently of the British Board of Liquor Control Commission; some reports or volumes published by notable scientists on Scandinavian countries; some of the reports of the British Society for the Study of Inebriety. My own thought in the matter was that it would be an exceedingly unintelligent and futile thing to try to put over anything of that kind as a special plea; that unless there was some kind of a case for the light beverages, no matter under what conditions they were sold, whether under public control or any other way, we had better not send out anything at all.

Senator NELSON. The kind of publications that you have just described you did not attempt to circulate among the masses, but you distributed them among what you call the intellectuals?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator NELSON. To get them right?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Now, what other activities in the publication line did you engage in—what other methods?

Mr. FOX. We tried various experiments with press agencies.

Senator NELSON. Among others, with Louis Hammerling, did you not?

Mr. FOX. I never had any dealings with Louis Hammerling. I know nothing about that.

Senator NELSON. No; but your association. Now, mind here, Mr. Fox, we are not only after what you know individually or what you have done individually, but what your association, that you represent, has done.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator NELSON. So do not try to distinguish. We are after what your association has done, either through you or through others.

Mr. FOX. Senator, if I may be allowed to say so, I am before you in a spirit of perfect frankness and with a desire to cooperate in every possible way that I can.

Senator NELSON. I have not any doubt about that.

Mr. FOX. Perhaps I may say just what I know about this Hammerling matter, or at least what I believe I know.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FOX. It involves somewhat the history of this National Association of Commerce and Labor. That association, as I think was stated this morning, was practically an organization of allied industries whose business was largely or entirely dependent upon the brewers; and the feeling was, both on their part and on the part of the brewers, that they ought to be bearing a part of the expense of the educational work which was going on. I think they were just as willing to contribute as we were to have them contribute.

Senator NELSON. But how can you account for the fact that they gave that activity the high-sounding name of National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I think that was a piece of very poor judgment, myself, Senator. However, that association was started by a gentleman of ability, but to my mind somewhat visionary ideas, Mr. Andreae. Mr. Andreae's concept, as I have been able to gather it, was, differentiating his work from mine, that his particular scheme was to educate the voter for the vote. Now, among the various people who succeeded in beguiling Mr. Andreae was this Mr. Hammerling, the president of the Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers. My impression is that that association was orginally started as a sort of an advertising agency.

Senator NELSON. Was it not an association that would offer its services indiscriminately in each political campaign for either party?

Mr. FOX. That is the impression that I got, sir.

Senator NELSON. They were ready to sell out to the world, the flesh, and the devil at any time?

Mr. FOX. Well, I do not want to be responsible for anything of that kind; but, at any rate, I always felt that the Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers had done a very clever piece of business in persuading Mr. Andreae that their services were worth the large amount of money he paid them.

Senator NELSON. How much did he pay them?

Mr. FOX. I do not recollect, but I think Maj. Humes has the record. I think it was something over $200,000.

Senator NELSON. Altogether?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator NELSON. During what period was that paid?

Mr. FOX. I think that runs for about two years.

Senator NELSON. Two years.

Mr. FOX. Possibly two and a half years. They published a magazine of their own, which was called—I have forgotten what it was called.

Maj. HUMES. The "Hearthstone"? You mean the American Leader?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That was the official publication of the Association of American Foreign-Language Newspapers.

Senator NELSON. Will you let me interrupt you there a moment? I want to get my bearings. Now, can you give me a list of the names of the publications that you utilized in publishing what I call, for short, your propaganda, or publishing your side of the case? What papers, what publications, and what magazines did you utilize for that purpose?

Mr. FOX. I do not think I could answer that specifically, Senator. In that respect we were opportunists, and whenever we saw an article, for instance, which we thought would appeal to a certain class of the people or a certain class of readers, we fired it at them. Sometimes it landed and sometimes it did not. Sometimes men would come to us perfectly frankly and say that they had been assigned to write an article or thought that they had the facilities for getting a certain article published, and they would ask for the

Sometimes men would come to us perfectly frankly and say that they had been assigned to write an article or thought that they had the facilities for getting a certain article published, and they would ask for the facilities of our library. Incidentally, I will say that we have, I think, probably the most highly specialized library of its kind in the country.

Senator NELSON. Did you buy space in newspapers?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Senator NELSON. Never.

Mr. FOX. Except as advertising.

Senator NELSON. No; I mean space either for advertisements or for literary matter—for editorial matter?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall any arrangement of that kind, but a good many arrangements of this kind were made: It would come to our knowledge that a certain publication, we will say, was going to publish an article. Perhaps they would tell us, perfectly frankly. As a general rule we found that if we waited until an article was published in any newspaper or magazine the number of copies we could get of it was very small; so that, therefore, it was, I think, generally known that in advance we were in the market for as many copies as we thought we could distribute.

Senator NELSON. That was one way of inducing them to publish it, to have you take a large supply of copies, was it not?

Mr. FOX. I think so.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FOX. Perhaps I can illustrate——

Senator NELSON. Will you allow me to interrupt you a moment?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you do anything the reverse of that kind? Did you ever make any efforts to exclude hostile articles when you got wind of them in the papers?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Senator NELSON. Nothing of that kind?

Mr. FOX. No, sir. Just while I think of it, Senator, because this illustrates what you have been asking, mention was made this morning, for instance, of a committee on alcohol of—I think it is called—the International or the National Socialist Organization. Now, it was published somewhere or other, I do not remember where, that a committee had been appointed by the Socialist Party to make an investigation of this liquor problem, and it was quite an imposing committee. The impression that I got was that the committee, at least in its leadership, was antagonistic—that is, it had strong prohibition leanings. Now, I think we made a studied attempt to see that all the best-known books, like reports of the Committee of Fifty, and these other books I have referred to, were put in the hands of the members of that committee. I think we had some correspondence with them offering them the facilities of our library, and so forth. At any rate, we made an honest effort to get them to take this question up entirely impartially and with open minds.

Senator NELSON. Will you please tell me why you as brewers—I do not mean you personally, of course, yourself, but why your organization—as a brewers' organization are so interested in the other branch of the liquor business that you are concerned about having friendly matter published in reference to alcohol and whisky, outside of your own industry? That was because you operated in conjunction—were affiliated—in some manner?

Mr. Fox. Senator, there had been an inside difference of opinion, to put it mildly, between the leaders of our industry and the leaders of the liquor interests, and the effort of our leaders, of our publication committee, as I recall it, from the very inception of my regulation of that, was to prepare not only our people but the public for what seemed to us to be perfectly inevitable, and that was for the control—the social control, I mean—of all the ardent spirits, and the differentiation along some such lines as had been adopted in the Scandinavian and other countries, between liquors and beer. Now, the constant complaints that have been made——

Senator NELSON. Did you not have a suspicion that if the public were deprived of spirituous and alcoholic liquors, it might diminish their taste for beer and destroy your market in that way?

Mr. Fox. I think that was a debatable question, Senator.

Senator NELSON. How?

Mr. Fox. I think that was a debatable question, and I do not remember its being debated very seriously.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but was not that a consideration? Did you not have a feeling among you—you brewers—that if the whiskey interests, or if the alcoholic interests, or the distilling interests were wrecked it would be bad for you, would injure you, too?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall that having been expressed, Senator, but there was a very definite feeling on the part of a very large number of brewers that the saloon could not exist without the sale of whisky, and the brewer had put himself in a false position by financing the saloon. He had practically tied himself up with the liquor interests, and that was the position from which some of us were trying to extricate him.

Senator NELSON. Did they not reach a point where the brewers were financing saloons—you know how they did it?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And I know.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That they would get cheap fellows, anyone they could get, and establish a saloon, rent a building and furnish it, and furnish the equipment for him, with the understanding that he was to sell their beer, and then they would furnish him with the whisky, etc. Was not that the fact?

Mr. Fox. I do not think you have got that straight, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Well, pretty near it.

Mr. Fox. The feeling I had was that the brewer had been extremely shortsighted as a business man to let the liquor dealer get——

Senator NELSON. No; but you financed them. You say that was the feeling. I am asking you about the practice.

Mr. Fox. No; the general practice is just the reverse—the general practice is that the saloon keeper buys his whisky where he pleases; he paid cash for it and made what profit he could out of it, and also out of the other things he sold; and all that the brewer got out of his bargain was the furnishing of his particular brand of beer.

Senator NELSON. That may have been in some localities, but it has not been so in the country where I come from.

Mr. Fox. Possibly there may be men in your section of the country who are interested in both liquor and beer.

Senator NELSON. Yes. Did your organization make any effort to stop that financing of saloons by brewers?

Mr. FOX. I think if you were to—well, I have made here, a day or two ago, a memorandum of references to the subject in our yearbooks, the 9 or 10 yearbooks which we have published, and I find a continuous thread all the way through of appeals to the brewers and of resolutions and all sorts of things in the way of moral suasion.

Senator NELSON. Do you not know that that appeal has been noneffective; that it has not diminished the evil?

Mr. FOX. Absolutely.

Senator NELSON. What?

Mr. FOX. It has been absolutely noneffective.

Senator NELSON. I think you are right about that. Now, coming back to the publicity matter, you have described certain methods of publicity. What other methods did you resort to? Did you employ literary men, educated men, to write propaganda articles for you in publications—newspapers?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall. I have no doubt we did from time to time for some particular article, but I do not recall particulars at this moment.

Senator NELSON. I understood the gentleman who was on the stand here this morning admitted that, if I recall it right—I do not want to misrepresent it—you had had as many as five or six employed.

Mr. FOX. We had men on the staff of the association of that character, perfectly frankly.

Senator OVERMAN. How did you get these circulars you sent to the papers? You said you were sending circulars to papers from time to time. How did you get those circulars?

Mr. FOX. You mean these pamphlets?

Senator OVERMAN. Pamphlets and circulars that you sent out.

Mr. FOX. We did not attempt, ourselves, to reach the masses of the people in any direct way. Of course you will see in a second the utter impossibility of that. Your postage bill would almost swamp the National Treasury in six months. Our method—the only practical plan of accomplishing anything in that matter—was that we printed these pamphlets and distributed them by the local associations. They would distribute them. Of course, for years it has been a practice of brewers and distillers to send out a piece of some kind of literature with every bill and every circular that they send out. A great deal of that has been done.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever send anything to Members of Congress?

Mr. FOX. We sent Congress our yearbooks and various other things from time to time—anything that seemed to be advisable.

Senator KING. Apropos your yearbooks, did those yearbooks contain your minutes of your national association and a statement of the proceedings of your national association?

Mr. FOX. Part of the time they did, and part of the time they did not. I think we abandoned that practice several years ago. The book was getting too bulky, and it was really for the benefit of the public, and the public was not interested in the convention proceedings.

Senator KING. What were your yearbooks?

Mr. Fox. The yearbooks are a compendium of the notable publications of the year, a sort of a calendar of the year with, usually, a mass of statistical data and a report on the legislation of the year and judicial interpretations of the acts.

Senator KING. Were your meetings, your conventions, usually public; your annual conventions, if you had any?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator KING. And your association meetings?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator KING. Was anything hidden from the public, or were they in large halls, open to the newspaper reporters and to the public?

Mr. Fox. For the most part. The last few years we adopted the plan of having one or more executive sessions. I think the original reason for that policy was to give brewers an opportunity to wash their linen amongst themselves and to make their complaints to each other, etc.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you employ speakers to go out on the public platform and speak in behalf of the brewery side of the argument?

Mr. Fox. Yes. The organization bureau, I believe, employed speakers. That was a part of our organization, but was not under my direction.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Andreae, in charge of his National Association of Commerce and Labor, did use speakers, did he not, in his propaganda work?

Mr. Fox. I believe he did.

Senator WOLCOTT. And it was the money of the United States Brewers' Association that paid for it, through Mr. Andreae?

Mr. Fox. That, and the money that he raised from the allied trades.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes. By the way, were the responsible officers of the board acquainted with the work that Andreae was doing throughout the country?

Mr. Fox. I think there was some dissatisfaction because they were not closely enough in touch with it. It finally culminated in the contract being cancelled by mutual consent.

Senator NELSON. I think the hop raisers and barley raisers felt a little slighted by that organization, because Mr. Andreae did not look after their interests.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Was any effort made on your part by circularizing the newspapers for the purpose of beating or electing somebody in an election contest?

Mr. Fox. Not so far as the national association was concerned, to my knowledge.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was the national association aware of the fact that Mr. Andreae was doing that very sort of thing, and spending the money of this concern that he got up, for that very purpose?

Mr. Fox. I do not think so.

Senator WOLCOTT. To a large extent.

Mr. Fox. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that a subject matter of discussion in every meeting of the board of trustees, and did not Mr. Andreae personally attend and report to the meetings of the trustees as to his activities?

Mr. Fox. Major, I do not want to seem to be in any way evasive, but my memory does not serve me. Perhaps if you had anything that would refresh it—but I do not recall just that phase of it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not remember that action was taken by the trustees to the effect that Mr. Andreae should keep in close touch with the president of the United States Brewers' Association and keep him fully advised of all of his plans and of all of his activities, and that Mr. Andreae had to submit all of his activities to the president of the association before he finally acted?

Mr. Fox. Now it is beginning to come back to me. I think that was the culmination of the feeling of dissatisfaction that I have referred to that existed, that the officers of the association were not being advised by Mr. Andreae of his activities.

Maj. HUMES. And ultimately was there not an agreement made by which the activities of the National Association of Commerce and Labor should be conducted by a joint committee known as the finance committee?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Three members of which were trustees of the United States Brewers' Association, and three members of which were of the National Association of Commerce and Labor; and were not the affairs of that association conducted by that joint committee?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. Fox. That is the situation to-day.

Senator WALCOTT. You say that is the situation to-day?

Mr. Fox. That they have a joint finance committee of the allied industries and of the members of the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator WOLCOTT. The National Association of Commerce and Labor is still a going concern, then, is it?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. I would like to know why they named that an association of commerce and labor.

Maj. HUMES. I will show you that from the official minutes if you want to see it.

Senator KING. I think Mr. Fox is in error, or else Mr. Andreae's testimony before a former committee was erroneous. His testimony there was, as I recall, that this organization, this incorporation, of commerce and labor was dissolved; that it had ceased to function; and I am not sure whether he stated that an application had been made pursuant to law for the disincorporation of the organization or whether it had lapsed by nonuse, but he certainly gave the impression to my mind that the organization was defunct.

Mr. Fox. I think that is quite possible, but at the same time it is true that whether under charter or not the association is still in existence under other management.

Senator OVERMAN. Why did you name it "Commerce and Labor."

Mr. Fox. I think out of sheer foolishness.

Maj. HUMES. I show you what is marked "Exhibit No. 166–A." These are the minutes of the meeting of the National Association of Commerce and Labor in the Hotel Dennis in Atlantic City, where the National Association of Commerce and Labor was organized, are they not?

Mr. FOX. Yes; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. For the information of the committee, I should like to read from this. I read from page 38.

Senator KING. What year was that?

Maj. HUMES. It was organized October 3, 1913. Mr. Lilienthal had the floor and said:

If anybody has a name to suggest regarding the organization proper I would like to have it.

A VOICE. I think the natural name would be the United States Manufacturers and Dealers' League.

Mr. ANDREAE. The name is very important.

Mr. COOPER LYONS. I suggest the National League of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The National League of Commerce and Labor—that sounds something like a United States Government department.

A VOICE. That name seems very appropriate to my mind, and I second it.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It has been moved that the organization be named the National Association of Commerce and Labor, a suggestion made by Mr. Cooper Lyon, of Chicago.

The committee will notice that in stating the question Mr. Lilienthal changed one word. The suggestion was the National League of Commerce and Labor, but when he put the question he put it as the National Association of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. SHOONMAKER. It would seem that that would be conflicting names, to some extent, with the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is true that we are all laborers, I am sure of that, but I think it ought to be more clear cut and less meaningless than that would imply.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. What suggestion do you make?

Mr. SHOOMAKER. I have not any suggestion. I would rather hear some other suggestions before it is adopted, that is all. It might be all right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Well, the only suggestion that has been made is the National Association of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. COOPER LYON. I would leave it "Manufacturers." The name "Manufacturers" would not oftentimes be properly accepted by those whose votes we want, and I think we should eliminate that name absolutely.

Mr. ANDREAE. I think Mr. Lloyd is right, for this reason, that there is a possibility of this misconception, as there are employers' associations. We all have them, and one of the objects usually of an employers' association is protection against the organized actions of unions or others among the employees. Now, we do not want to create that impression that this organization is an organization for the purpose of the employers only, and if you have the word "labor" only, or "commerce" only, it would look as though it might be an organization for the purpose of antagonizing the workmen or protecting the employer against the workman. Now, there should be no question of one or the other in an organization of this kind, and to my mind that title is an excellent one.

A VOICE. I move that we close on that title.

Mr. COOPER LYON. May I make this suggestion, as an afterthought—the Merchants' & Dealers' League. Would not that be better?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the same thing.

Mr. COOPER LYON. It is synonymous in a measure, that is true. They have the same meaning, but at the same time they are euphonious.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The United States Association of Commerce and Labor—that would confound it with the Government.

Mr. VILTER. "National" is better.

Mr. ANDREAE. Do you think that that is any particular reason. You have not a Secretary and a Department of Commerce and Labor, but this is a National Association of Commerce and Labor. If it has a little taste of Governmental authority, why so much the better.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was a meeting of brewers to organize this association?

Maj. HUMES. This is all very interesting. There is a lot of very interesting material in this which I was going to submit to the committee. I can briefly say that this was a meeting held by persons connected with the allied trades, and Mr. Fox, I believe, was the secretary of the meeting.

Mr. Fox. No; I was not present. I may have been there at the opening of the meeting, but I do not think that I was there even then.

Senator NELSON. At any rate, this organization was made up by the brewers' association and the members of it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; it was arranged through them, and this meeting was called of the various allied trades. There was an organization throughout the United States prior to that time, associations known as manufacturers' and dealers' leagues and manufacturers' and dealers' clubs, representing the allied industries in a given local territory.

Senator OVERMAN. Allied with the brewing interests?

Maj. HUMES. This was a bringing together of all and similar allied organizations for the purpose of forming a national organization, and at the time this meeting was called Mr. Andreae was contracted with by the United States Brewers' Association, the contract being in writing—and it will be submitted later—by which he was to receive an annual salary of $40,000 a year for five years from the United States Brewers' Association for taking charge of this organization.

Senator NELSON. How much money has your organization expended for publicity purposes of all kinds while you have been connected with it?

Mr. Fox. I am afraid that I can not answer that.

Senator NELSON. As near as you can. You know that we have been in the habit of going into billions here lately in Congress.

Mr. Fox. Our receipts fluctuated very considerably. When I first was secretary of the association I think that the annual dues were a quarter of a cent a barrel on the output, and our receipts were, I think, perhaps $150,000; maybe less than that.

Senator NELSON. And they kept on growing?

Mr. Fox. Then they kept on increasing.

Senator NELSON. What was the maximum in any one year?

Mr. Fox. The maximum, to my recollection, in any one year was some $700,000 or $800,000.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you remember what year that was?

Mr. Fox. I think that was 1914 or 1915. I think Maj. Humes has that record.

Maj. HUMES. Which one?

Mr. Fox. The record of our receipts for one year when they ran up to some $800,000.

Maj. HUMES. Nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand dollars, I think it was. That is here, and will be presented in due time.

Mr. Fox. All of those records which were turned in at Pittsburgh, I understand, are still in Maj. Humes's possession. Our dues have been a cent a barrel, and for special purposes subscriptions have been raised. The term "assessment" was used, but it is a misnomer, because there never was an assessment in the sense that every subscription for advertising or publicity of any kind was purely voluntary. That is to say, if a man did not choose to subscribe, there was nothing which lapsed his membership thereby. For instance, we raised this last year a special sum of some $500,000 between October 1917, and a few months ago for advertising purposes, a special advertising and educational fund.

Senator NELSON. How much have you raised altogether from all sources during the last year?

Mr. FOX. We raised for dues in round figures $200,000 and advertising a little over $500,000. I turned those papers over.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you, as an officer of the National Association, had under your observation at any time the statement disclosing what had been raised by the brewers' associations in the various States?

Mr. FOX. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that you do not know, you are not prepared to state, the sum total of all contributions by the brewers in the United States to both national and State organizations?

Mr. FOX. I have not any such knowledge.

Senator WOLCOTT. How could we get at that? Do the State organizations make a report of any kind to any central body?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. We would have to go into each State and find it out?

Mr. FOX. Yes. I could furnish a list, I think, of the State organizations that are still alive. A number of them have died within the last two years.

Senator WOLCOTT. I suppose anyone who has acquaintance with the States that have gone dry could compile that list, could they not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. Maj. Humes, were you intending to examine this witness along any orderly way?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I have a lot of matters here that I was going to follow up to refresh his recollection, especially upon some of the matters that Senator Nelson has inquired about.

Senator NELSON. I want to ask you a few more questions, and you can make it very short if you will give me full answers. What I want to know is, what has been the activity of your organization or this branch organization of commerce and labor in respect to getting favorable action from public men, members of the State legislatures, candidates for the State legislatures, or candidates for Congress or other public men.

Mr. FOX. I have no knowledge about that, sir.

Senator NELSON. Do you not know that there has been some activity in that direction?

Mr. FOX. I have never had anything to do with the affairs of the association——

Senator NELSON. That does not answer it. You say that you never had, but do you not know there has been some activity in that direction?

Mr. FOX. I have no knowledge of it.

Senator NELSON. Who would be apt to have knowledge in your organization? Now, you may as well tell us, because we all know from the outside that there has been activity along that line.

Mr. FOX. Well, Senator, as far as——

Senator NELSON. Oh, you can not lay that activity to the immaculate conception.

Mr. FOX. As far as the State matters go, I imagine that would have to come from the State and local associations. As far as our association goes, if anybody has any knowledge of anything of that kind it would be the organization bureau.

Senator NELSON. Who is the head of that?

Mr. FOX. Mr. McDermott. I have not any knowledge of anything of that kind, and I do not know in the least whether the Association of Commerce and Labor has been active along that line.

Senator NELSON. I rather got the impression from some of your statements awhile ago that that organization had been active in that direction.

Senator KING. Mr. Fox, permit me to make an inquiry. I suppose you knew in a general way, if not through your own records, then through the newspapers, that there was a very strong educational campaign being conducted in many States, and in the Nation for that matter, in favor of temperance and in favor of the restriction of the use of intoxicating liquors, wines, and beers and liquors, and in favor of absolutely prohibiting?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. And you knew that those activities took the shape, in some places, of trying to secure members of the legislature who would enact prohibitory laws?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. For the purpose of combating that organization and its activities did not your organization, directly or through the instrumentality of the commerce and labor organization or other organizations or branches of a subsidiary character, attempt to secure the election of members to the legislatures in the various States who would be opposed to prohibition?

Mr. FOX. Senator King, personally I do not know. I can not answer your question either yes or no, but I think it is extremely likely that they have; but I have no personal knowledge of it.

Senator KING. At any rate you believed, and the members of your organization believed, that the manufacture and sale of beer was a legitimate business?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. And you believed that there were organizations that sought the destruction of that business?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. And they sought the destruction of that business by newspaper articles, by legislation, by church activity; and you attempted to combat the work that was being done by those anti-liquor organizations in every way which you deemed to be legitimate and proper?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. And if it was necessary to circularize the people, to send out articles that were favorable to the cause of the brewers and to the preservation of the business, you did so?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator KING. And so far as you know, efforts may have been made to secure the election to State positions, if not to national positions, of men who were not in favor of the destruction of the liquor business?

Mr. FOX. I should think it would have been very foolish and short-sighted if such efforts were not made, but I can not enlighten you as to any details.

Senator KING. Was there anything secret in your efforts to preserve your business?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge.

Senator KING. Was there anything secret in your efforts to combat the activities of those who sought to enforce State- wide and national prohibition?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge.

Senator KING. So that coming down to brass tacks, to use a common expression, you thought your business was being assailed, and that men were trying to destroy it, and you used whatever weapons were available for the purpose of resisting the efforts against you?

Mr. FOX. Exactly.

Senator KING. I think that is a matter of common knowledge. I have understood that for a long time.

Maj. HUMES. A moment ago, Mr. Fox, I asked you about the labor situation. I call your attention to Exhibit 122, which comes from the files of the United States Brewers' Association, "Skeleton of reorganization plan." Where did that come from and who was the author of it?

Mr. FOX. I am afraid that I can not absolutely swear to that, sir. Some part of it, undoubtedly, I think I must have written—the education part of it—but I am not sure.

Senator NELSON. You better tell us what that is.

Maj. HUMES. Skeleton of Reorganization Plan—a typewritten paper that came from the files of the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. And the date of it?

Maj. HUMES. It is not dated. Mr. Fox, can you tell about when that was written?

Mr. FOX. It must have been prior to 1915, but I can not identify the date.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the portion which relates to labor, wherein it is stated that the labor bureau should have two objects—namely, the assistance it can give to the members in adjusting contracts and adjusting differences and standardizing of labor, etc, keeping the members informed from week to week of all things in the field of brewery labor, such as new contracts, new conditions, local difficulties, etc., and in addition to this it is stated that the labor bureau might be of very great value—in our political organization by establishing a permanent working connection with the other labor bodies to make up the American Federation of Labor, and who have any direct or indirect relation with or to the brewing industry.

Does that refresh your recollection as to the reason for making the brewery industry a hundred per cent union?

Mr FOX. Oh, it was a hundred per cent union long before that.

Maj. HUMES. Was this plan of reorganization adopted by your association?

Mr. FOX. I do not think so. I have not a very strong recollection about it. My impression is that that was a suggestion that was made academically and was never adopted in any formal way.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the executive department and the organization bureau were running very largely separate and distinct. In other words, the executive department neither sought nor wanted knowledge as to the activities of the organization bureau?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And it ran absolutely independent of the executive work of the association?

Mr. Fox. I do not quite get that.

Maj. HUMES. It ran independently, except for being financed, and made no detailed reports to the executive officers of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. Substantially, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Why was that?

Mr. Fox. When you say the executive department, do you mean this publicity work?

Maj. HUMES. I mean the organization bureau.

Mr. Fox. Oh, that I do not know anything about.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this same plan of organization:

Executive department: The executive department should have the general oversight and direction of the work of all the other departments, except the political dpartment.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES [reading]:

This would require a force of about 15 employees in addition to the heads of departments, the field force staff and the men employed in the political department.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The political department was the organization bureau, was it not?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. It operated with great independence from the executive department of the association?

Mr. Fox. I judge so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And the political organization included State campaigns, congressional campaigns, the Washington bureau, and the organization of voters under this plan.

Mr. Fox. I do not recall that.

Maj. HUMES. You just read that.

Mr. Fox. That part of it is so unfamiliar to me that I can not swear to the identity of it. I am sure, of course, that it came from our files, but I do not think I was responsible for that, because it is so entirely unfamiliar.

Maj. HUMES. Senator Nelson asked you several questions with reference to the activities of this association along literary lines. Did your association have any relations with a Dr. E. H. Williams? Did it employ him to do any literary work for you?

Mr. Fox. My recollection is that we did not employ him in the sense that you mean; but we agreed to buy a considerable number of copies of a certain book which he got out. My recollection is that Dr. Williams wrote certain articles in medical papers, and those were assembled in the form of a book which he published himself, and we agreed to buy a considerable number. I think it was 20,000 copies of his book.

Maj. HUMES. Let me refresh your recollection there.

Mr. Fox. Let me just finish. I was going to say also that my recollection is also that we did employ him on at least one occasion to make an investigation for us.

Senator NELSON. Maj. Humes, what are you reading from?

Maj. HUMES. The records of the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. From minutes?

Maj. HUMES. From various documents that were a part of their files, not from minutes. I call your attention to a report dated January 6, 1915, addressed to the members of the publication committee and I call your attention to the following extract:

Among the important undertakings was the financing of special investigations for the Medical Record and other publications, by Dr. E. H. Williams, such as the drug habit menace in the South, and the conditions of the insane in Kansas and other States, which resulted in the publication of a series of most important articles in the leading medical journals, and also in the Survey, the National Monthly, the New York Tribune, and in a number of important newspapers in California, Washington, and Oregon, and several other States. These articles were assembled in book form and the book sent to all libraries and newspapers.

Does that refresh your recollection?

Mr. FOX. Yes; that was the investigation I referred to just now.

Maj. HUMES. I also call your attention to this:

We also financed a first-hand study of the temperance movement in Germany, by George S. Viereck, which resulted in the publication of several articles in the International.

Do you remember that?

Mr. FOX. I do not remember that particular instance. I remember that we were induced by Mr. Viereck to publish some articles in the International. That was undoubtedly one of them.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with George S. Viereck?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How long have you known Mr. Viereck?

Mr. FOX. Oh, I think for about 11 years. I think he had approached the association before that time.

Maj. HUMES. What have Mr. Viereck's activities in a literary line been in, recent years by way of editorship or publishing of periodicals?

Mr. FOX. I have had as little as possible to do with Mr. Viereck for some years, and I am not very familiar except in a general way that when the war broke out Mr. Viereck published a pro-German paper which I think he christened the Fatherland and subsequently rechristened 'Viereck's Weekly,' an exceedingly—well, I shall not undertake to characterize it.

Maj. HUMES. When the war broke out you mean in Europe, not when we entered the war?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That would be in 1914?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you had any connection in any way with him since that time?

Mr. FOX. I believe not.

Senator NELSON. Will you allow me to ask a question right there? Have you or your organization had any advertisements published in that paper or any other literary production of his?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection, sir. I believe not.

Senator NELSON. From first to last?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall any case of the kind.

Senator NELSON. That is, your organization has not patronized that paper?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Viereck also published a monthly known as the International?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is the same thing true of that?

Mr. FOX. I am not so sure of that.

Maj. HUMES. I show you some receipted bills from the International Monthly to the United States Brewers' Association, and receipted by that organization, and I ask you what contract existed between the United States Brewers' Association and Mr. Viereck or his periodicals?

Mr. FOX. These bills call for 600 copies of the January issue of the International, 1915, and apparently the same number, or approximately the same number for each month thereafter. My recollection is a little vague, but I think that Mr. Viereck induced us to subscribe to the International for a year for all our members, and 600 would about cover our membership. The International was a paper that had some vogue as a literary organ.

Senator NELSON. What is the total of those bills?

Maj. HUMES. Five hundred and seventy dollars to be the total. You knew, did you not, that during this period of time the father of George S. Viereck in Germany was writing the German articles that were being very largely printed in both the Fatherland and the International Monthly?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You saw the International Monthly, did you not?

Mr. FOX. Oh, I saw it as I saw a hundred other publications, but I do not believe I read it.

Maj. HUMES. The same material was being printed in the International Monthly as was being printed in the Fatherland, was it not?

Mr. FOX. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact and do you not know that the International as well as the Fatherland were two of the periodicals very largely used for German propaganda purposes in this country?

Mr. FOX. I certainly had no knowledge of it at the time, sir. I have had my suspicions, however, since.

Maj. HUMES. Then, without investigating the nature of the periodical, or at least without any investigation on your part, the association entered into a contract by which they contributed to that periodical by way of advertising contracts.

Mr. FOX. I have no general recollection of the matter, but you have refreshed my memory and you have shown me certain bills, altogether for $60 or $80 a month, for a certain number of copies of this paper. That speaks for itself. I never regarded the matter as being important or serious in any way.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know a man named Michael Monahan?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was Michael Monahan an employee of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. Michael Monahan was the literary editor of the association when I first became connected with it 11 years ago. He was an employee of the association, I suppose from perhaps 1906 or 1907 or possibly 1905 until, I think, about 3 years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Did he publish a magazine or periodical of his own?

Mr. FOX. He did during part of that time.

Maj. HUMES. He published the Phoenix, did he not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was the nature, if you know, of that periodical as to its being an instrument for German propaganda?

Mr. FOX. I have not any knowledge of that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever enter into any contract with Michael Monahan after the commencement of the war?

Mr. FOX. We have been paying him a pension right along.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever employ him for any purpose other than to pay him that pension? To refresh your recollection I show you some account for special educational work, $500, and several other such bills. What was that for?

Mr. FOX. I do not recollect, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Would that refresh your recollection? Can you answer whether or not you paid him money for services rendered to the association?

Mr. FOX. That seems to speak for itself. I do not recall the transaction.

Maj. HUMES. We offer in evidence six receipted bills to the United States Brewers' Association from the International Monthly, with the notice on the face of the bill to make the check payable to Mr. George Sylvester Viereck.

Maj. HUMES. To continue with this same report that has been used to refresh your recollection, I call your attention to the following:

The National Monthly has published a series of articles by J. G. Rice, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Cyrus W. Davis; Dr. E. H. Williams; I. T. Martin; and others, which have been very widely circulated. The National Monthly is one of the principal organs of the administration and goes to every Democratic Congressman and to every Democratic State legislature, besides having a bona fide list of nearly 100,000 copies.

I ask you this: Dr. Williams, referred to, you have testified about; he is in your employ. Who was I. T. Martin?

Mr. FOX. She was in our employ for some years.

Maj. HUMES. She was an employee of yours and was writing articles for a periodical?

Mr. FOX. Well, at one time I think she succeeded Mr. Monahan in the publishing department.

Maj. HUMES. Cyrus W. Davis was employed by your association?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Have you been told by other members of the association that he was?

Mr. FOX. It is possible that the organization bureau may have employed him, but not as far as I have any knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. You know that he actively cooperated with the association?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Whether it was for remuneration or not you are unable to state?

Mr. FOX. Yes. I am pretty sure that he spoke on occasions for the bureau.

Maj. HUMES. What about J. G. Rice?

Mr. FOX. J. G. Rice was until recently employed by the association for a period of, I guess, two years. J. G. Rice, I think, was originally employed for publicity for a campaign in Virginia, but we have employed him to conduct investigations and furnish informaton and write articles in some of the Southern States in the last year or two.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence at this point a number of bills to the United States Brewers' Association rendered by the National Monthly Co.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention further to the following:

The National Municipal Review published in July a most important article by John Koren, entitled "Some aspects of the liquor question," which has been widely distributed.

Was that prepared at the instance of your association?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. It was prepared by a man on the pay roll of your association?

Mr. FOX. A man under retainer; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Further:

Mr. A. J. Nock, of the American Magazine, has been helped to study saloon conditions in various States, and his articles will appear shortly.

How was that matter financed, how was he helped?

Mr. FOX. My recollection is that we agreed to pay the expenses of Mr. Nock in conducting these investigations on the chance that he might—I think we had two purposes: One was for our own information and the other was in the expectation that he would get these articles published in certain magazines, and I think we probably paid him a remuneration as well as expenses, but that I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. His standing as a literary man gave him the entrée to the periodicals of the country and made it possible for him to have his articles accepted by those magazines?

Mr. FOX. Certainly to have his articles receive consideration.

Maj. HUMES. I further read from the report:

We also financed a first-hand study of moonshining in the Appalachian Mountains, but the result of the investigation was not published, because the matter was adequately covered in Kephart's recent book, Our Southern Highlanders.

Who was the man financed in that first-hand study?

Mr. FOX. His name does not come to me for the moment, but it will presently. He was a young college man. I remember that he proposed to us that he should take a walking trip through the mountains, and we agreed to pay for his vacation. After he got through he told us perfectly frankly that his report coincided so closely with this book which had been published in the meantime that there was not really anything to add to it.

Maj. HUMES. I further call your attention to the following:

Under our direction Mr. E. B. Phelps made a study of the relation of alcohol to mortality and morbidity in rejoinder to the essay on this subject which was published by the American Museum of Safety.

Was that article of Mr. Phelps published in any of the periodicals of the country?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I know it was widely circulated. Mr Phelps, who is dead now and can not speak for himself, was an expert on certain phases of insurance statistics, and he was retained by us originally in connection with a very comprehensive scheme which we had for workmen's compensation and old-age pensions, and out of that grew this other thing.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this:

Mr. Gustave Meyer was retained to make an investigation of the relation of alcohol to industrial accidents and to industrial efficiency, and his report will be published shortly in the Journal of the American Statistical Society.

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was that financed by your association?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. By the way, as to the Journal of the American Statistical Society, did Mr. Koren have anything to do with that society?

Mr. FOX. He did for some years, as editor. I do not know whether he had at that time. I do not think he has now.

Maj. HUMES. You were also a member of that society, were you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I quote further:

The secretary's reply to William Allen White in the Saturday Evening Post was based in large part on the data supplied by Mr. John Koren.

I want to refresh your recollection. There was a good deal of discussion, was there not, as to how your association was going to get a hearing in the Saturday Evening Post, and some question has been raised here about reaching that paper and getting an article published.

Mr. FOX. I think so; yes. I remember some discussion about that.

Maj. HUMES. Was there not an arrangement made by Mr. Andreae with someone else whose standing was of a nature that might entitle him to a hearing in that periodical, by which he was to write an article and offer it to the Saturday Evening Post for publication.

Mr. FOX. For us?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. FOX. I am not positive about it, but I think they published such an article.

Maj. HUMES. I know they published your article. I was not sure about the other.

Mr. FOX. I think they did.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the author of that article which was published?

Mr. FOX. My recollection is that the author of that article was the former commissioner of internal revenue. I have forgotten his name: Capes, or some such name as that.

Maj. HUMES. I quote further:

Through the good offices of Mr. James R. Nicholson, of Boston, and Mr. ——— we have been able to get several good articles in the papers published by the Elks and the Eagles.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was that a part of your propaganda system?

Mr. FOX. To the extent that is mentioned; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And further:

Mr. Monahan has published several articles in his paper, the Phoenix, and a series of articles were run in the New England Traveler and Tourist.

That Mr. Monahan is the same Mr. Monahan we have been referring to?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Fox, is it not a fact that this method was adopted: Where the support of a periodical could not be secured if the source of the article was disclosed, in order to get the propaganda into these particular periodicals, when you could not approach them directly you sought a recognized authority to write an article, and made the agreement and contract with him, and he presented it as an original effort on his part?

Mr. Fox. Well, Major, that involves a rather large question of magazine and publicity methods. In the first place, regardless of any interests or not, an individual author would very soon wear himself out either with one publication or with a number of publications. The question of how to get articles in magazines is a very, very difficult one. Every magazine of any standing, of course, would regard any article on its merits, and at the same time undoubtedly there are certain men who have a vogue, either with certain magazines or with all magazines, and if an article was written by a man who had that vogue at least it would be sure to get the attention of the editor.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the author of the article known as the Hobson article?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall the article, sir. You will have to refresh my memory.

Maj. HUMES. Can you refresh it from the Kansas article? Do you know what that is?

Mr. Fox. There have been so many Kansas articles, I am afraid I can not.

Maj. HUMES. To refresh your recollection I show you this [handing witness paper].

Mr. Fox (after examining paper). No; I am afraid I should have to dig to find that.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Fox, if a matter of $500,000 was collected last year, has that all been paid out for publishing?

Mr. Fox. I believe not, sir. The advertising fund is in the hands of the chairman of the advertising committee, and I believe he still has some of that fund on hand.

Senator OVERMAN. About how much has been spent for publicity work in the last 12 months?

Mr. Fox. I can not answer that. I think we have conducted three big advertising campaigns, and I think probably they have spent—well, I am guessing at it; my guess would be $300,000, $350,000, or perhaps $400,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Has that been spent in the method that has been portrayed here—for magazine articles and——

Mr. Fox. No; that was direct articles.

Senator OVERMAN. Direct?

Mr. Fox. There were three advertising campaigns covering all the industrial papers of the country.

Senator OVERMAN. How did you get it in the papers—through paid advertising?

Mr. Fox. Yes; that was done through an advertising agency through the Seamen Advertising Agency.

Senator OVERMANN. What was the nature of that publicity?

Mr. Fox. One advertisement, as I recall it, was to correct an exceedingly false statement that had been published by our opponents as to the waste of food and feed material by the brewers and the enormous amount of it, and so on. That might have been termed as a rejoinder.

Then there was a series of advertisements dealing with the subject of national prohibition.

Then there was the last; an advertisement was called forth by the infamous attack that was made upon the patriotism and loyalty of the brewers, and the association, through its president, felt that the only way to meet that attack was the very expensive one of buying space in the papers and publishing a plain statement.

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever heard of the German literary defense committee of New York?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a letter signed by yourself and addressed to Mr. Andreae in reference to that organization. Will you kindly explain what connection your association had with that? [Handing witness letter.]

Mr. FOX (after examining letter). I do not recollect anything about it, but apparently we must have had an inquiry from Mr. Andreae as to what this was, and we got what appears to be a commercial report on it, and this is the report. I should not have recalled anything about it if you had not shown me this.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know why Mr. Andreae wanted that report?

Mr. FOX. No.

Maj. HUMES. What other activities did the United States Brewers' Association engage in in an effort to compel adherence to its cause by the business men of the country and by business concerns?

Mr. FOX. I do not think I get you, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Well, I will ask you the question direct: What method was adopted by your association to punish those who did not accept the cause that you were advocating in political campaigns and in the carrying on of your propaganda—in other words, by way of boycotts and unfair lists. Did you or did you not maintain an unfair list of business concerns in the country?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You did not?

Senator OVERMAN. Was there any attempt to boycott anybody because he did not support your association?

Mr. FOX. The only recollection I have which would give any color to that is this. The association of commerce and labor was financed, so far as the allied trades were concerned, by a very ingenious scheme known as the stamp plan. The association, I think, printed certain stamps. Now, every member of an allied industry who agreed to the proposition, affixed stamps in certain denominations, and as agreed upon, by the invoices, and there was so much discount; there was so much a bale on hops, and so much on barley, etc., and my recollection—well, no; perhaps that is too strong a term—my impression is that the Association of Commerce and Labor, and also certain of the manufacturers and dealers' leagues, published from time to time lists of those who contributed; and I do not know, they may have published a list of those who refused to contribute. In other words, they tried to show the brewers who their friends were among the people with whom they were doing business.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say that the United States Brewers' Association, or you as secretary of that association, had no connection with the activities of that kind?

Mr. FOX. Oh, I had some correspondence of that kind, but I do not think there was anything you could call a black list ever published.

Maj. HUMES. I did not say "published." I said "maintained."

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do not misunderstand my inquiry.

Mr. FOX. No.

Maj. HUMES. Was there one maintained?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it. They may have kept a list of the people who refused to buy the stamps.

Maj. HUMES. But if there was any list maintained, it was only a list of those who refused to join in the stamp plan?

Mr. FOX. I can not say that positively.

Mrj. HUMES. No.

Mr. FOX. I am a little uncertain about it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, what was the purpose of this [handing witness Exhibit No. 196]? I call your attention to Exhibit No. 196, which reads as follows:

EXHIBIT No. 196.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
109 AND 111 EAST FIFTEENTH STREET (TELEPHONE, 1957 STUYVESANT).
New York, March 15, 1910.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the President of the United States Brewers' Association to request that no letters be sent out criticizing the action of business concerns that are alleged to have opposed our interests, without first communicating with this office.

In several cases that have recently come to our attention, complications have arisen because of such action on the part of organizations that are affiliated with us, and in one or two instances, we have been seriously embarrassed thereby.

Requesting your co-operation, and promising that we will give any matter of this kind the most careful consideration when our attention is called to it, I remain,

Yours faithfully,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

That is a circular letter, I believe, Mr. Fox. What was the purpose of that letter and what occasioned it?

Mr. FOX (after examining letter). I do not recall that, sir. That is eight years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Subsequent to the writing of that letter, was it the custom of the members of your association to submit all of these matters to the association?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. It was not?

Senator OVERMAN. You have here on the black list John Wanamaker. Why was he put on the black list?

Maj. HUMES. Senator, I have the file here.

Senator OVERMAN. You have gone into that?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. FOX. May I qualify my last answer to you, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOX. My memory works a little slowly.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. We are ready to refresh it in any way we can, Mr. Fox.

Mr. FOX. Yes. I recall now, just for example, a visit that I received from a certain important concern in New York State, who complained that there was unfair prejudice against them, and they asked me if I would do anything I could to allay it.

Senator NELSON. Please talk a little louder.

Mr. FOX. I have had two or three concerns of that kind coming to me and telling me that in some way or other there was unfair prejudice against them and asking me if I would not do anything I could to put them in a favorable light before the trade. Now, whenever anything of that kind has occurred, I have done anything I could.

Senator KING. Did they state the reason of the unfair prejudice?

Mr. FOX. Yes; largely—well, for instance, one particular concern that I have in mind stated that they had opposed most vigorously the licensing of the saloons in their locality and invited me to investigate conditions there, and told me that if I had done so they were quite sure I would agree that they had taken the right position.

Senator KING. They contended that by reason of their opposition to the licensing of saloons the saloons in that particular locality were hostile to them?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir; not only in that particular locality, but others were using that particular thing against them by saying that the brewers did so and so. I looked into that and concluded that they were right; that the saloon conditions in their locality were so bad as to justify them in the action they had taken.

Senator KING. What did you do?

Mr. FOX. I do not know whether I notified the trade as a whole. I think I wrote them a letter and told them they could use it in any way they saw fit.

Maj. HUMES. May I ask you what concern that was?

Mr. FOX. That was the Solvay Process.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you compelled the Solvay Process Co. to write you a letter approving of the brewing business before you would notify the trade that their name was off the black list, and did you not prepare the form of the letter that they had to sign and submit it to them, and after it was returned accept the letter and then notify the trade that they were now fair in business?

Mr. FOX. My recollection is that their representative asked me to dictate that letter, and I think I dictated it in his presence. That is my recollection of it.

Maj. HUMES. I want to get to that in just a minute, if I can get it in an orderly way.

Senator KING. Yes; excuse my interruption.

Maj. HUMES. I want to introduce, for the information of the committee, Exhibit No. 432, and I want to call attention now to a paragraph, it being headed "Copy—War on merchants aiding prohibition begun by brewers—Head of Everard Co. urges employees to put ban on purchases." I want to read this paragraph from his remarks:

The brewery workers, their families, and their friends will refrain from purchasing any of the products sold, manufactured, or handled in any way by any of the men or concerns that are aiding the prohibitionists.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 432.

COPY—WAR ON MERCHANTS AIDING PROHIBITION BEGUN BY BREWERS—HEAD OF EVERARD COMPANY URGES EMPLOYEES TO PUT BAN ON PURCHASES.

An attack upon the business interests of the men who are contributing in any way toward the prohibitionist movement was made yesterday afternoon by David M. Neuberger, president of the James Everard Breweries, in an address before the International Union of Brewery Employes at Palace Casino, No. 14 East 135th Street.

Mr. Neuberger urged his hearers to refrain from purchasing any article manufactured or sold by the individual or the concern with which the person was connected, and he promised that within three months he would have enlisted in this campaign of "direct attack by lawful means of persuasion" every brewer, trades union and every real estate organization in the country.

On the stage with Mr. Neuberger were representatives of most of the New York breweries, he declared afterward, among them being Henry Vollmer, of Ehret's Brewery, Jacob Loewer, of the Valentine Loewer Brewery, and Norman S. Goldberger, president of the H. K. Koehler Brewing Company.

"The brewery workers, their families and their friends will refrain from purchasing any of the products sold, manufactured or handled in any way by any of the men or concerns that are aiding the prohibitionists," he declared.

"This is an attack; the biggest and most forceful attack ever attempted. It is not defense. We are going out after these men, confident that when their purses are hit they will quit like dogs. We intend to see whether these men who are crucifying one of the greatest industries in the country can live if the persons they are crucifying retaliate. Within a month I will have 100,000 men on my side, and then we will see these chaps begging off."

BAN ON AUTOMOBILE TIRE MAKERS.

As an instance of the effect of "legal persuasion," Mr. Neuberger declared that a rubber company had sent circulars to its employees urging them to vote for prohibition.

"They can't sell a tire to the brewers in this city today," he said, "and I am going to see to it that they sell few to any brewers outside the city, and the brewers use sixty per cent of the solid rubber tires used in the country."

Another mass meeting will be held within a week or so in Brooklyn, Mr. Neuberger said, at which he would urge his hearers to follow the example to be immediately set by the brewery workers in Manhattan. Eventually, he added, he hoped to have a mass meeting in this city at Madison Square Garden, preceded by a parade.

"How would you like to see a parade of 10,000,000 voters in every part of the country on the same day?" he asked. "Well, the prohibitionists is the greatest enemy to organized labor in the world. He is worse than the 'scab' employer, for the scab employer at least produces, while the prohibitionists tears down and does not replace."

The forces contributing to the aid of the Rev. "Billy" Sunday and the Anti-Saloon League, including prominent merchants and manufacturers, were mentioned by Mr. Neuberger.

"We'll see what happens to the sales of these men who are fostering abuses of public interests," he said.

CHALLENGE TO "BILLY" SUNDAY.

"I dare 'Billy' Sunday to meet me on the platform in any debate on prohibition, either from an economic, ethical or religious standpoint. I will rent Madison Square Garden, present him with half the tickets of admission, give the other half to charity and then post $5,000 forfeit for defeat, to be given to any charity, a committee of business men may name," he said. "I will prove he is a fake, a bunk and a hyprocrite, working his own game for his pocket.

"This is no half-way measure. These fellows, trying to disrupt a great economic structure, have never been given battle. When we enlist the cigar makers, grocers, real estate organizations, clothing dealers and organized labor we will be prepared to fight to a finish."

Mr. Neuberger laid stress upon the fact that the movement was begun by him, but that he had received assurances from brewers and many allied labor organizations that they would aid him in the fight against the men who are financing and morally aiding the prohibition movement.

He declared drunkeness was a disease of the liver, to be treated by a physician and not by legislation, and he defied the religious element to show him where the Bible countenances restriction of personal right.

"They fake the Koran," he said. "They cry, 'Oh, true believers, wine is verily an abomination of the Devil,' and say it is Biblical when it comes for the Mohammedan Bible." (New York Herald, April 19, 1915.)

Maj. HUMES. I also want to submit an office copy from the files of the United States Brewers' Association, it being marked "Exhibit No. 293," it being a list dated April 1, 1915, entitled "List of firms who are unfriendly to our interests."

Senator NELSON. Put that into the record too.

Maj. HUMES. I will not take the time to read that. The committee has it before them, and some additional matter.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

Senator KING. You say that was taken from the records of the United States Brewers' Association?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator KING. Do you know by whom it was prepared?

Maj. HUMES. I do not. You can ask Mr. Fox about that.

Senator KING. Mr. Fox, do you know by whom that was prepared?

Mr. FOX. I do not recollect it at all, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you just look at it?

Senator KING. Were you the custodian of those records at any time?

Mr. FOX. We have as records, sir, in our library files, several hundred thousand pieces of information. Everything that is of any interest, whether for or against us, goes into the hopper and is indexed in those files. Now, this, I presume, was very likely taken from those files. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. That is your office stamp on it, is it not?

Mr. FOX. That is our office stamp. There is no doubt this came from our files, but I mean I have no personal recollection of it.

Senator KING. Whose duty would it be, under your organization, to prepare that document?

Mr. FOX. I do not think it would be anybody's duty, sir. This may have been prepared in our office, or it may have come to us from some correspondent.

Senator KING. Would some local correspondent take the trouble to furnish you with a list of companies, corporations, and individuals throughout the country that were deemed to be unfair?

Mr. FOX. When I say a correspondent I mean some organization such as the Merchants' and Manufacturers' League, or National Association of Commerce and Labor, etc. I do not recall this document myself, sir.

Senator KING. Do you understand that your organization, directly or indirectly, or any of its subsidiary companies or organizations, prepared or caused to be prepared at any time and for any purpose a list of companies or individuals or business concerns that were deemed to be antagonistic to the continuance of the sale of intoxicating liquors or beers?

Mr. Fox. I am afraid I can not be specific about that, sir. I think it is extremely likely, but I can not recall any specific act.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether there was such a thing as a blacklist or unfair list in your organization?

Mr. Fox. I do not think in any organized way; no, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. In any way?

Mr. Fox. There have been lists prepared or names mentioned from time to time of people who were unfair. Those have undoubtedly been collected. I do not know whether they were collected in our office at any time; I think possibly they were, for our own information.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not your practice to send out a bulletin to all members of your association giving them information from time to time of business concerns that you deemed unfair?

Mr. Fox. I think that some years ago we sent out a bulletin giving any information that we had, one way or the other, about business concerns for the information of our members.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say "some years ago"—how long ago?

Mr. Fox. I do not think anything of that kind has been done for three years.

Senator OVERMAN. I see here "Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, because of the observance of Sunday-closing laws." Was the Blackstone Hotel put on the unfair list because of observing the Sunday-closing laws of Chicago, and closing up on that day?

Mr. Fox. That sounds like a Chicago document, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. It is from your records, though.

Maj. HUMES. I have the exhibits here showing that transaction. Because they accepted the Sunday-closing ruling, this concern took offense.

Senator NELSON. Because the hotel was opposed to the flow of beer on Sunday.

Maj. HUMES. To further refresh your recollection, Mr. Fox, I want to call your attention to the correspondence in the Solvay Process matter; and if the committee will bear with me, I think the easiest way to refresh his recollection is to read these letters into the record, because it is a very interesting file. It will explain the whole transaction better than we can probably do in a more haphazard way.

First, I wish you would look over those letters and see if this is correspondence from the files of the United States Brewers' Association.

Mr. Fox (after examining letters). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That is from the files of the association, is it?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. What is it?

Maj. HUMES. This is correspondence from the files of the United States Brewers' Association with relation to the Solvay Process Co., regarding which Mr. Fox has testified.

The first letter is dated November 11, 1913, addressed to Mr. Fox and signed by Sam E. Brewer, on the letterhead of the New York State Brewers' Association:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 4.

NEW YORK STATE BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
109 AND 111 EAST FIFTEENTH STREET,
New York, November 11, 1913.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX, Secretary,
50 Union Square, New York City, New York.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Your letter of inquiry regarding Mr. McWilliams of Solvay, New York, was received this morning. I did not hear Mr. McWilliams' name mentioned in connection with the fight at Solvay, but the Solvay Process Company, headed by Mr. Hazzard, President, and his son-in-law, Mr. Knapp, financed and led the dry forces. We won out however by a large majority.

This same Mr. Hazzard, some months ago, spent about $40,000 to "clean up" Syracuse. The Syracuse brewers have had several conferences with representatives of the Solvay Company and at the request of the latter the brewers eliminated about eight places in Solvay and in return the Process Company promised not to fight license. This occurred a year ago. This year however the Company came up and with a Committee of 100 citizens demanded that the brewers close about twenty more places, and when the brewers declined to do this Mr. Hazzard began his fight.

Yours very truly,

SAM E. BREWER.

The second letter is dated June 16, 1915. You will notice that was almost two years afterwards. It is addressed to Mr. Hugh F. Fox and signed by the American Bottle Co.

FOX EXHIBIT No. 5.

THE AMERICAN BOTTLE COMPANY,
FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING,
Chicago, Ill., June 16, 1915.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX, Secy.,
United States Brewers' Assn., New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: This letter will introduce to you Mr. Martin H. Knapp, representing the Solvay Process Co.

The product of this company we have purchased through Messrs. Wing & Evans, of your city, for what might be called a life time. In all our relations with the Solvay Process Company, as well as the firm of Messrs. Wing & Evans, we have found them to be high class honorable people in the full sense of the word.

Mr. Knapp desires an interview with you in connection with a matter of interest to the Solvay Process Co. We earnestly bespeak for Mr. Knapp your kind consideration and attention.

Would further say that last year when the question of national prohibition was up before Congress. it was our pleasure and privilege to request Messrs. Wing & Evans, among others, to address telegrams and letters to their Congressmen, protesting against the passage of the Prohibition Bill, and am pleased to be able to say that among the first replies we received was one from Messrs. Wing & Evans of New York City, stating that the matter would have their personal attention.

Assuring you that any courtesies extended to Mr. Knapp will be very much appreciated by our company, we are,

Very sincerely yours,

THE AMERICAN BOTTLE COMPANY,
M. W. JACK, President.

The next letter is dated June 23, 1915, from M. H. Knapp, of the Solvay Process Co., to Mr. Fox, and is as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 6.

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., June 23, 1915.

HUGH E. FOX, Secretary,
United States Brewing Assn., 50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR SIR: On June 18th last I called at your office in the hope of having a short interview with you on a subject which is of considerable importance to me and to this Company. I was informed that you were engaged for the afternoon, and I therefore left with your stenographer a letter of introduction from Mr. M. W. Jack, who, I believe, is well known to you.

Also, your office informed me that you would not be available for some little time, as you were entirely engaged this week and were then to be away until about the second week in July.

I regret that I was not able to see you, but, if agreeable, I will keep in touch with your office, and on your return in July will endeavor to come to New York and call at sometime convenient to you.

Yours very truly,

M. H. KNAPP.

The next letter, from Mr. Fox to Mr. Edwin C. Hall, of the Haberle-Crystal Spring Brewing Co., Syracuse, N. Y., reads as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 7.

[Confidential.]

JULY 1, 1915.

MR. EDWIN C. HALL,
Haberle-Crystal Spring Brewing Co., Syracuse, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. HALL: I have just had a conference with Mr. M. H. Knapp, Secretary of the Solvay Process Company of your city, who has told me very frankly the whole history of his connection with the no-license fight in the town of Solvay, and his efforts to secure the co-operation of the brewers of Syracuse at that time in the betterment of saloon conditions. I judge from what he says that there are more saloons in Solvay than are required to meet the reasonable convenience of the people there, and that as is usual in cases of over-competition, some of the saloons were open to serious question because of the way in which they were conducted.

However, Mr. Knapp and his company evidently realize that they made a mistake in allowing themselves to be drawn into the fight, and now that it is all over, and the town of Solvay is still in the license column, the Solvay people will not re-open the question or do anything to promote no-license. I sincerely trust, however, that the Syracuse brewers will get together in regard to the saloon conditions in Solvay and so adjust matters that there will be no real ground for further criticism.

However, what I am writing to you for especially is to say that we are anxious to win the friendship of all important business interests such as the Solvay Process Company, and from my conversation with Mr. Knapp, I judge that the company would be willing to write us a letter setting forth their attitude on the saloon question generally, and on the proper attitude of employing corporations towards their men in regard to the alcohol question. I think that such a letter would be extremely helpful to us especially in view of the adverse attitude of so many of the large industrial concerns, and also in view of the large and varied interests of importance as the Solvay Process Company.

We had a meeting here a few days ago of what is known as our interstate commerce committee, consisting of a representative from each State. The representatives from the State of Washington and from Michigan tell us that the reason we have lost so heavily in those States lately is because of the pressure exercised by industrial corporations upon their men. We held our own in the rural districts, but were licked in the manufacturing centers.

I am going to write to Mr. Knapp suggesting that he call on you to talk the matter over, and I am enclosing draft of letter that I am going to suggest that his Company write to us.

Requesting your co-operation, I am,

Very truly yours,

——— ———, Secretary.

To refresh your recollection now, Mr. Fox, you will notice that in that letter you expressed the belief that they would sign a letter.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. There was no volunteer suggestion on their part, apparently, from that letter, was there?

Mr. Fox. Apparently not. I think I must have confused that with some other case.

Maj. HUMES. Again, here is a letter addressed to Mr. Knapp from Mr. Fox, dated July 1, 1915:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 8.

Mr. M. H. KNAPP,
The Solvay Process Co., Syracuse, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. KNAPP: I have written to Mr. Hall along the line of our conversation, and have told him that you would get in touch with him.

I am enclosing draft of a letter such as I would suggest, and have sent a copy of it to Mr. Hall also.

Very truly yours,

——— ———, Secy.

And the copy of the suggested letter is attached, as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 9.

SUGGESTED LETTER TO THE U. S. B. A.

GENTLEMEN: In response to your query as to the attitude of the Solvay Process Company on the license question, we beg to say that we are thoroughly in accord with the suggestions made by the National Committee representing the various branches of the liquor interests as reported in the Associated Press dispatches which were published on July 1st. We believe in well-regulated saloons under responsible and intelligent management, and are in favor of the license system.

We feel that the attempt on the part of employers to dictate to their men as to their private conduct and personal habits during their leisure time is absolutely mischievous and unwarranted. The employer has the right to insist upon the sobriety and efficiency of his men and to make rules for their conduct during the time that they are at work, but this is as far as he should go.

Trusting that this is satisfactory, we are,

Very truly yours,

———— ————.

On July 2 the Solvay Process Co. addressed the following letter to Mr. Fox:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 10.

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., July 2, 1915.

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary,
United States Brewing Assn., 50 Union Square, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I beg to acknowledge your favor of July 1st, enclosing form of letter suggested in our conversation yesterday.

Under separate cover, we are writing you today a letter following this form. The President, I note, has made a slight change in the wording of the second paragraph, to conform to his own ideas, but I do not think it changes the meaning conveyed in any way. If you feel that it does change your suggestion, we should be glad to have you take the matter up with us again.

I have already endeavored to see Mr. Hall, of the Haberle Crystal Spring Brewing Co., but I am informed by his office that he is out of town until next Wednesday at which time I will endeavor to see him.

I omitted to say to you yesterday that Mr. Jack suggested that, in addition to seeing you in this matter, I see Mr. Percy Andreae of Chicago, head of the National Association of Commerce and Labor for the Western States. I shall probably see Mr. Andreae in the near future, and wished to call the fact your attention, as you might hear of it and think I was shopping around in rather an odd fashion. You and Mr. Andreae are the only gentlemen whom Mr. Jack suggested that I see, and I shall of course only follow his suggestion.

If you should care for a statement of the facts which I went over with you yesterday, in regard to our campaign here in the Village, I should be very glad to send you a brief outline of the matter, but unless this will be of some use to you for future reference, I will not cumber your files.

I wish again to thank you for your courtesy, and trust that we have now satisfactorily cleared up this matter.

Yours very truly,

M. H. KNAPP,
Asst. to President.

On July 9, again, Mr. Knapp writes to Mr. Fox:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 11.

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., July 9, 1915.

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary,
United States Brewers' Ass'n, 50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Yesterday I saw Mr. Hall, of the Haberle Crystal Springs Brewing Co., as you suggested, and had a very pleasant talk with him.

He says that he has never heard locally any criticism against this Company, and can not believe that the reports which have been circulated about us emanated from Syracuse. He said some very nice things about the fairness and broadmindedness of this Company and our President, Mr. F. R. Hazzard.

In regard to the campaign which I carried on two years ago here, he entirely understood the conditions and agreed with me that they were very bad and that we were within our rights in trying to improve them.

I showed to him the letter which we addressed to you on July 2nd, and he thought that that entirely covered the matter, and said he would submit it to the local Association and ask for their approval.

If there is anything further which we can do in this matter, I should be grateful if you would advise us.

Yours very truly,

M. H. KNAPP.

And Mr. Hall, under date of July 10, writes to the United States Brewers' Association, attention H. F. Fox, secretary, as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 12.

HABERLE BREWING COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., July 10th, 1915.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
50 Union Square, New York City.

Attention of H. F. Fox, Secretary.

MY DEAR FOX: Relative to yours of July 1st wish to advise that Mr. M. H. Knapp of the Solvay Process Company called at our office and I assure you was pleased with the result of his visit.

I enclose a copy of his letter to me under date of July 9th which coupled with the letter which he sent you on July 2nd, fully explains his Company's attitude toward our business. I consider it a triumph to have a concern of its magnitude favoring the license system.

At a local option campaign of two years ago, they were very bitter against the liquor traffic and if you called at Solvay, you would say that they were justified in taking such a stand. Nearly all of the stores on the principal street of Solvay are occupied as saloons—in reality "dumps". This condition came about through the greed of one of our competitors who controls eighty-five per cent of the places, and refuses to eliminate any of them.

Mr. Knapp seemed a bit nervous when discussing the issue with me. I concluded that someone had gotten after them. I hope their views will cause other large manufacturers, who are wavering, to think likewise.

The officers of the Solvay Process Company are fair, liberal men and all enjoy their beverage.

Congratulating you upon this achievement, I remain,

Yours cordially,

EDWIN C. HALL.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the business of the Solvay Co.?

Maj. HUMES. The chemical business.

Senator KING. Chemicals, soda.

Maj. HUMES. Then there is a letter on July 9 from Mr. Knapp to Mr. Hall. That is a part of the file, but it has been referred to so fully that unless the committee desires it I will not take the time to read it in full.

Mr. Fox, under date of July 16, writes to Mr. Knapp:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 13.

JULY 16TH, 1915.

Mr. M. H. KNAPP,
Solvay Process Co., Syracuse, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. KNAPP: Your letter of the 9th came during my absence from the city.

The letter from your company to us of July 2nd is perfectly satisfactory, and I will have it reproduced and sent to all of the brewers.

Thanking you, I am,
Very truly yours,

——— ———, Secretary.

Then the Official Confidential Bulletin of the United States Brewers' Association, dated July 22, 1915, addressed to the members of the United States Brewers' Association, is a reproduction of the letter; and in order to show the difference, the modification that was made, I will read the second paragraph:

We feel that any attempt on the part of the employers to dictate to their men as to the private conduct and personal habits during their leisure time is not warranted, and may become mischievous. The employer, has the right to choose as employees those men who will best perform their work, with safety to themselves and their coemployees. The employer has the right to insist on the sobriety and efficiency of his men and to make rules for their conduct during working hours.

The clause "but he has no right to go further than this" was eliminated from the letter that the president wrote.

Under date of October 23, 1915, Mr. Knapp again wrote to Mr. Fox:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 14.

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., October 23, 1915.

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary,
United States Brewers' Association, 50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR SIR: We are still meeting with some opposition from brewers along the lines suggested at our conference early in July.

Your letter of July 16, saying that ours of the 2nd is satisfactory, is before me. If it is proper, I should like to ask if we might have a copy of the letter which you sent to the brewers saying that the statement of our position was satisfactory to your association. If we had a copy of that letter we could show it to the brewers when the question was raised, and it would go a long way in backing up our statement that our position is satisfactory to the brewer trade.

If there is anything improper in what I ask, or if you have any reason why you do not wish to furnish a copy of your letter, I know you will not hesitate to say so, and we shall quite understand your position. However, if you can deem it proper to furnish us with such a copy, we should be very much obliged.

Yours, very truly,

M. H. KNAPP,
Ass't to the President.

And Mr. Fox, under date of October 25, replied as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 15.

OCTOBER 25, 1915.

SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your letter of October 23rd, I beg to say that on July 22nd I sent a confidential communication to our members in which I quoted your letter of July 2nd to me. I may add that we are thoroughly satisfied with your attitude, which seems to me to be exactly the position that an employer ought to take, and I believe that you are entitled to the friendly consideration of all the brewers.

Yours, very truly,

——— ———, Secretary.

Under date of November 3, 1915, Mr. Oswald, on a letterhead of the Haberle Brewing Co., addressed Mr. Fox as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 16.

HABERLE BREWING COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., November 3, 1915.

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary,
United States Brewers' Association, 50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR MR. FOX: Referring to your communication of November 1, which was accompanied by a copy of the letter from the Solvay Process Co.'s president, whose sincerity we may not doubt, but information contained in letter—Parsons to Conway (the latter president of the Bartels Brewing Company) a copy of which is sent herein, shows conclusively that influential employees of the Solvay Process Co. were actively opposed to our cause from the very beginning because of their having signed a petition calling for a vote on the license question; nevertheless we are pleased to announce that election results of yesterday, show the issue carried in our favor.

We think it advisable that you again take up the matter with Mr. Knapp, calling his attention to the persons in his employ who openly opposed us, which naturally involves his attitude upon the question.

Yours respectfully,

EDWARD OSWALD.

And the inclosure is as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 17.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
COMMISSIONERS OF HIGHWAYS,
Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1915.

Mr. JOHN S. CONWAY,
City.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a list of the signers on the Dry Proposition arising in the Town of Geddes. You will note that Charles S. Glenn, Supt., Harvey Curtis, Chief of the Solvay Process Police Force, 12 Patrolmen, who I believe are deputy-sheriffs, 12 foremen, 17 carpenters, 2 gardeners for Mr. Hazard have signed the same. This to my mind shows that Solvay Process Company are back of the movement. I might add that an undertaker has also signed it.

Yours respectfully,

EDWIN W. PARSONS.

The next letter, November 4, 1915, addressed to the Solvay Process Co., from Mr. Fox, is as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 18.

NOVEMBER 4, 1915.

SOLVAY PROCESS CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Attention, Mr. Knapp.

GENTLEMEN: I have a letter from one of our people in Syracuse, stating that while they have no doubt whatever as to your sincerity and that of your associates, they think it proper to call your attention to the fact that the Superintendent and Chief of the Solvay Police Force and a number of the men employed in positions of responsibility, signed the "dry" petition.

Yours very truly,

——— ———, Secretary.

And Mr. Knapp's reply of November 5, 1915, to Mr. Fox is as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 19.

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y., November 5, 1915.

H. F. Fox, Secretary,
United States Brewers' Association,
50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR SIR: We beg to acknowledge yours of November 4th, and thank you for the information contained therein. Of course the Chief of our Patrol Department is rather a subordinate position, but we shall try to keep an eye on the matter hereafter and advise our men to keep out of movements of this kind.

The town went for license by a large majority, which we assume adjusts the matter satisfactorily for the present.

Yours very truly,

THE SOLVAY PROCESS COMPANY,
M. H. KNAPP, Ass't to Presdt.

Now, Mr. Fox, with your recollection refreshed by that file, is it not a fact that the Solvay Process Co., because of having been boycotted or considered unfair, came to you and sought a correction of their position, and asked you to straighten out the matter for them?

Mr. Fox. Evidently.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, is it not a fact that the Solvay Process Co. was boycotted by the members of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. That I do not know, sir. I think, though, that that is capable of two interpretations. It has come to my knowledge from time to time, as I have said before, that competitors would try to create a prejudice against certain people, and the effect would be the same whether we were responsible for it or the competitors were responsible for it.

Maj. HUMES. Is that the only case that you remember where there was correspondence of a similar nature?

Mr. Fox. I recall that I had some other correspondence, but I do not recall the specific concerns. I know I have had some correspondence.

Senator OVERMAN. Had you not better put in the record the names of these people who were boycotted?

Senator KING. There is no proof that they were boycotted, yet Senator.

Maj. HUMES. That is only a summary for the information of the committee. I have the records to show the facts. That is simply a summary for the convenience of the committee.

(Thereupon a discussion was held between members of the subcommittee as to the time of the next meeting.)

Mr. LEVI COOKE. If it please the committee, the committee has summoned by subpœna duces tecum two distillers for examination Mr. Dieterle, of Cincinnati, and Mr. Sunstein, of Pittsburgh. They are present. Apparently this hearing may continue for several days along the line of investigation now being followed. Without further subpœnas those gentlemen will attend on the committee at any time that Maj. Humes suggests; and I pray the indulgence of having those men simply excused until they are called by word of mouth or telegram from Mr. Humes, if it is agreeable to him and to the committee. I dare say the committee will have to take a recess between now and the conclusion of its investigation, and possibly——

Senator NELSON. Let them leave their files they have brought with them.

Mr. COOKE. Yes; I was going to suggest that we call them for the purpose of having them respond to the subpœna duces tecum, so as to save time when they are called.

Senator NELSON. Call them up and have them submit the documents and leave them.

Mr. COOKE. There is only one of them that brought anything.

Senator KING. If they are represented by counsel, perhaps we had better just take counsel's word for it.

Mr. COOKE. I will hold the papers.

Senator KING. I imagine Maj. Humes would like to see the papers in advance of the next hearing.

Maj. HUMES. It will save a lot of time if they can leave the documents.

Mr. COOKE. I will turn them over to Maj. Humes for his inspection.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that the only papers are those of Mr. Dieterle?

Mr. COOKE. Mr. Dieterle was the only one that had papers stated in the subpœna.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Sunstein has not any papers?

Mr. COOKE. So he states to me, and he will so state, I suppose, when he is examined.

Maj. HUMES. I think under the circumstances we ought to have an opportunity to make some little inquiry about that. If he has not got papers that would be properly in his possession, I think before he is excused we ought to get some information as to where they are.

Mr. COOKE. May I make this accommodating suggestion: That Mr. Sunstein will talk with you at length and give you any information he has?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Sunstein is not in any way responsible to me for a response to that subpœna. He is responsible only to the committee.

Mr. COOKE. I am simply stating that as a matter of accommodation.

Senator OVERMAN. You might bring him up if you want to examine him. He can be sworn.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. J. SUNSTEIN.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. You were subpœnaed to produce certain bank accounts and your bank pass books, canceled checks, and check stubs?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you produced them?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I have not.

Maj. HUMES. Why have you not?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. You subpœnaed me as the chairman of the protective bureau, and as the treasurer of the protective bureau committee, and I have not been the treasurer of that committee since the early spring of 1916, and the papers that I had some time during the summer of 1916 I consigned to the waste basket because I had no further use for them.

Maj. HUMES. Did you destroy your bank pass books and your canceled checks and check stubs?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes; I always did that from year to year.

Maj. HUMES. At the time you retired as treasurer of the protective bureau of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association was there an audit made of your accounts?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who made the audit?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. A committee was appointed at the convention of the association before I retired, and that committee went over those accounts, and I do not know if I took those papers with me or not, but it is my impression that I did.

Maj. HUMES. Did that committee make a formal report of the result of the audit?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. That I could not say. I presume they did to the convention.

Maj. HUMES. Is a copy of that auditor's report available?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. That I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. If it is available, who has it?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. If it is available, it must be in the archives of the committee's organization.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean in the archives of the protective bureau or in the archives of the national association?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. The national association.

Maj. HUMES. And Mr. De Bar would have custody of that?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. The national association and protective bureau were two distinct organizations.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not make your report to the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No.

Maj. HUMES. What body did these auditors report to that audited your accounts?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. There is a committee in existence, which is the protective bureau committee, and this protective committee would appoint auditors—two men out of the committee or out of the members of the organization—and they would go over my vouchers and accounts, and then they would go to work and sign a paper that they found them correct; or sometimes I would make a report as treasurer as to the amount received and expended and the balance and where the balance existed, and they would simply O. K. it, and that ended it.

Maj. HUMES. They made no further record than of the activities of the committee.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No.

Maj. HUMES. And they satisfied themselves and that was all. Is that correct?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. They would make a report to a meeting of the committee stating that they found the accounts correct.

Maj. HUMES. Are you an officer of the Pennsylvania Association

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the present treasurer of the Protective Bureau?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I do not think the Protective Bureau is in existence, and it has not been since November, 1917.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all.

Senator KING. You sought to prove by this witness, Maj. Humes, that the organization with which he was indentified received certain contributions of assessments from year to year and disbursed the same?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator KING. And those contributions were made by the liquor men of Ohio?

Maj. HUMES. Oh, no; of the United States.

Senator WOLCOTT. This witness may have some recollection of that.

Maj. HUMES. I have a lot of records. I want more than simply the documents, but I was simply wanting to inquire if the documents were in existence.

Senator KING. Do I understand you that this witness is the only one who was treasurer during the period to which he refers?

Maj. HUMES. He was the treasurer up until 1916.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Senator KING. For how long a period were you the treasurer?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I was the treasurer of the organization from its organization.

Senator KING. When was that?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. If my recollection serves me right, it was some time in 1907 or 1905.

Senator KING. Then would all of the contributions to which reference was made by other witnesses, this half cent a barrel and 3 cents and so——

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Oh, we had nothing to do with that.

Senator WOLCOTT. This is the Liquor Dealers' Association.

Senator KING. Were all of the contributions made by the liquor interests made to you?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No; they were sent to a secretary, and then they were sent to me in a lump sum.

Senator KING. They finally came to you?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Senator KING. Do I understand you that all the contributions made by the liquor interests—

Mr. SUNSTEIN. That is for the protective bureau.

Senator KING. I mean to exclude the brewery interests.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. They came to me and I deposited them.

Senator KING. During all these years?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Senator KING. And you paid them out at the order of the committee?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And you have no record of the amount?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No.

Senator NELSON. Can you tell in the aggregate as near as may be how much you handled in those years?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. If my recollection serves me right, when it was first organized and for many years thereafter the amount received was very, very small, not sufficient in many years to pay the actual expense of organization, and for a period of some years thereafter they increased by reason of the fact that instead of allowing each man to give a voluntary sum based upon nothing, they fixed a certain manner of subscription, and they endeavored to get people to volunteer, to give accordingly, and that increased the amount, but that was only for a few years.

Maj. HUMES. From the time that you became treasurer of this association, did you deposit all of the funds of the protective bureau in the Farmers' Deposit National Bank of Pittsburgh?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No. My first account was with the Freehold Bank of Pittsburgh.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time did you bank there—a reasonably short period, was it not?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No; for quite a while. I deposited there until such time as it was merged with the Colonial Trust Co.

Maj. HUMES. You commenced doing business with the Farmers' Deposit National Bank before 1912, did you not?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I could not say as to that.

Maj. HUMES. From the time you first opened your account as treasurer of the bureau with the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, did you deposit all of the funds in your possession as treasurer in that account?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. In the Farmers' Deposit?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I believe I had taken out an account with the Guaranty Title & Trust Co. of Pittsburgh.

Maj. HUMES. About when was that?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I deposited there for some years until they merged in the Iron City National, or the Duquesne, I do not remember which, and then I changed to the Farmers' Deposit.

Maj. HUMES. To get back to my question again, from the time you commenced doing business with the Farmers' Deposit, did you do all of your business there?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. The Farmers' Deposit?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I believe I had for a short time an account with the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh.

Maj. HUMES. Between 1912 and 1916?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. About what period?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. That was the last two years I was treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. In what name was that deposit?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. In my name as treasurer of the protective bureau.

Maj. HUMES. You had the whole title, treasurer of the protective bureau?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. From 1912 up until you ceased to be treasurer were all of your funds as treasurer deposited in one of those two banks?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. All that I received.

Maj. HUMES. Did you receive all of the funds of the protective bureau?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. I believe I did, as far as I know.

Maj. HUMES. On the 6th day of May, 1916, you withdrew your account from the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, did you not?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. If I did then I must have closed the account when my treasurership expired.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not close the account simultaneously with a subpœna having been served on Mr. De Bar?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. No. I did not withdraw either of the accounts until my term of office expired, and I turned the money over to another treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. Then we distinctly understand that your bank accounts in the Farmers' Deposit National Bank and in the Union Trust Co. include all of the funds that came into your hands as treasurer?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. During the period covered by those two accounts?

Mr. SUNSTEIN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Sunstein gave me to understand, when I talked with him in Pittsburgh a number of days ago, that all of the funds were in one bank. I have the record of that bank, but he gave me no information as to the other bank record, so that I have not a complete record.

Mr. SUNSTEIN. You asked me where I had my deposit, and I told you at the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, and I did not think of the Union. I had no purpose of hiding anything.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, I am not questioning your motives at all.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will stand adjourned at this point until to-morrow morning at 10.30 o'clock.

(Accordingly, at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the committee adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 20, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, and Nelson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HUGH F. FOX—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, with your recollection refreshed from the Solvay Process file, what do you now say as to the common practice of the United States Brewers' Association, through you as the secretary, boycotting and reporting as unfair, for purposes of trade discrimination, business concerns over the country at various times during the last 10 years, or continuously during the last 10 years?

Mr. FOX. Major, the records you have there speak for themselves. My memory is somewhat faulty, but my recollection of the general practice and principle is this: My own position was more that of an intermediary—a mediator—than anything else, as I think the correspondence bears out. Our records may contain memoranda such as that alleged blacklist that you spoke of. I do not recall the matter at all. Of course, you understand that we have a large number of clersk and——

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Fox, could you not tell us whether it was the system to boycott people who did not agree with them?

Mr. FOX. I do not think that——

Senator OVERMAN. Was it not a part of the system of the Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. I think that is a question of interpretation, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, I want your interpretation of it. Now, you know what has been done; not of your own knowledge, but what was the general system as to boycotting. Now, was not that a part of the system?

Mr. FOX. As far as my recollection goes, and my present attitude, it was to furnish information which came to us, either favorable or unfavorable——

Senator OVERMAN. Well, that was not my question.

Mr. FOX (continuing). And give it to our members.

Senator OVERMAN. I wanted to know as a general thing whether that was not a part of the system. Was it or not? You had some correspondence about it, and while you may not have known of your own personal knowledge about it, you knew as an officer of that association. Was it not a part of the system to boycott?

Mr. Fox. I think the intention was rather to give preference to those who were our friends. Perhaps I can sum it all up in this way. The thing with a great many of the brewers was this. We were engaged in what was practically a war. They did not feel that it was good business for them to be throwing business to men who were using the profits from their business to fight them.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand that. That might be so. You are arguing now. I wanted to know it is was not the system of the brewers to boycott people who had fought for prohibition?

Mr. Fox. I do not think that we ever had any formal action taken which would bear that out.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, you are a very intelligent man, and are generally frank. I want to know this. I did not ask you whether they had ever passed any resolutions or anything of that kind. I ask you if that was not a part of their system, as shown from these records?

Mr. Fox. I think that is rather a strained interpretation, Senator. Personally, I always felt that it was a very dubious thing.

Senator OVERMAN. The fact is that they did boycott people?

Mr. Fox. I do not know whether it had the effect of a boycott.

Senator OVERMAN. Have not these records offered here shown that this Solvay Co. was boycotted, and has it not shown that they lost trade by reason of the fact that they were boycotted by your association?

Mr. Fox. They were not boycotted by the association, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. By the brewers, then?

Mr. Fox. We had not uttered a word about the Solvay Process Co. until they came to us.

Senator OVERMAN. Why did you write this letter, then? They came to you complaining that you had boycotted them, and you wrote for them a letter to your people saying that they were now fair.

Mr. Fox. Senator, I think that the correspondence shows this. Pardon me for differing with you. It shows that we had, as a matter of fact, no knowledge whatever of the Solvay Process Co. until their representative came to me and complained. My recollection is that he complained that his competitors were making use of this information, and that it was injuring him in a business way.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. Fox. And I then acted as a sort of intermediary to try to straighten it out.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; after they had changed and gone on the other side, then you wrote this letter. But now I want to ask you this. You had among your files numerous names of firms and business men, among them John Wanamaker and the Cadillac Co. and other automobile concerns, some of the biggest firms in the country?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Showing that they were boycotted because they had differed with you on this question. If that was not the system, why did you have all of these names there in your files?

Mr. Fox. It is perfectly clear that we were being importuned by brewers for information as to certain people and as to their standing, and we were exceedingly guarded in the information we gave them. Now, so far as Wanamaker is concerned, I personally traded with him up until within the last month. The Cadillac Co., of course, is an extreme case, because the officers of the Cadillac Co. were actually leading the fight against us in their community, as I understand it, and were contributing considerable sums to the fight. That, of course, is an extreme case.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; that is an extreme case.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And then they were, because of their action, boycotted?

Mr. FOX. I should think that the effect of that was very likely to boycott.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What about the H. J. Heinz Co.? Did you not boycott them? Did you not cause a boycott to be instituted against them, and did you not send detectives out over the country following up the activities of the H. J. Heinz Co.?

Mr. FOX. I have no knowledge of that, sir—no recollection of it, at least.

May I just say this, Senator, possibly to save time; I will not have the slightest hesitation in identifying any of this material, but we had a large force of clerks; I had a great deal to do; my memory is not particularly good, anyway; and on this matter, that if it is necessary to refresh my memory for the sake of getting it in the record, all right; but if I can save time by identifying a lot of this material I will be very glad to do it.

Maj. HUMES. Did not your boycott of the Heinz Co. grow out of the fact that Heinz was elected president of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, and the Sabbath School Association passed a temperance resolution? Is not that the fact?

Mr. FOX. I remember, now, something about it, but I do not remember what action, if any, was taken.

Maj. HUMES. I show you this file, leading up to the publication of a confidential circular on October 30, 1914. This circular reads as follows:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 20.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
50 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK,
New York, October 30, 1914.

Confidential

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN: The 52nd Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association met in Scranton, October 5th–9th, with an attendance of 1,500 delegates and 1,000 visitors. The Philadelphia North American of October 10th publishes an account by its Special Correspondent, W. C. Sprout, from which the following is taken:

"With true consistency, the fifty-second annual convention of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association ended its four days' sessions here to-day as it began, with a blow at the licensed saloon.

"The 1,500 delegates and the 1,000 visitors who attended the sessions will take back home to the State's vast Sunday School population of more than 2,000,000 the message that if Pennsylvania wants to clean up, remove the State from the shadow of rum's blight and let in the sunshine of righteous government, now is the time to do it.

"At the closing session this afternoon, which re-elected H. J. Heinz, of Pittsburgh, president for the ninth consecutive term and picked Erie for the convention city in 1915, resolutions were passed emphatically indorsing local option and national prohibition.

"This indorsement put into concrete form the sentiment which has permeated the convention since Tuesday. In point of deep religious fervor, combined with zeal for active Christian citizenship, the convention made Sunday school history."

REJOICE IN PROGRESS.

"Recognizing the blighting effect of the liquor traffic," the resolutions assert, "we rejoice in the aggressive temperance education of the State Association and to the end that we may have local option for the State or Nation-wide prohibition and to overthrow the saloon and the abolition of the liquor traffic.

"We recognize the legislative petition put forward by our State department as a great epoch in educational, practical, effective temperance work, and recommend that the various schools follow carefully the plan suggested for this most commendable effort."

Mr. Heinz is the President of the H. J. Heinz Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., which maintains branches in all the large cities.

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) HUGH F. FOX,
Secretary.

Will you look at the rest of that file and see if that is a correct file of the correspondence between you and various other persons connected with the business affairs of the Heinz Pickle Co., or of H. J. Heinz?

Senator OVERMAN. Is this the man with "57 varieties"?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fox (after examining file). All right, sir; that is correct.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a correct file?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Fox, Maj. Humes has read the bulletin showing that you sent that out yourself.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you not think that was part of a system of boycotting?

Mr. Fox. Certainly part of a system of information, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; as to a man who had voted for a resolution like that in regard to the Sabbath schools of the country; your men ought not to trade with him for that reason?

Mr. Fox. Of course, the matter was sent out for the information of whom it might concern.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the purpose of the information?

Mr. Fox. I should say that the purpose of the information was to tell them, as far as possible, who their friends and who their enemies were.

Senator OVERMAN. With the idea that they would trade with their friends and not trade with their enemies?

Mr. Fox. That they would give the preference to their friends, I should think, sir.

Senator NELSON. You could hardly expect a Sunday school to deal in beer, could you?

Mr. Fox. No; but I think probably Mr. Heinz was doing a large business with saloons.

Senator OVERMAN. They were buying his pickles; and, inasmuch as he took an interest in the Sunday schools in favor of prohibition, the brewers ought not to buy his pickles, but buy somebody's else pickles, and not the pickles made by their enemies. Is that the idea?

Mr. Fox. I should think that would be the way in which they would look at it.

Maj. HUMES. I will just offer in evidence that file.

Senator NELSON. Will you put it all in evidence?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. I assume that the exhibits that are not read into the record will be carried in an appendix of some kind; will they not?

Senator NELSON. Those important letters ought to be read into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. The letter you read there ought to be in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Then if we can treat all the rest of them as though they were read into the record——

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I should be very glad to read them all for the information of the committee, if you want to take the time.

Senator OVERMAN. We do not want to do that. The question is Are those letters important? If so, we want them to go into the record.

Maj. HUMES. It is the chain in the Heinz boycott.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in the record.

Maj. HUMES. And from this file I culled out the unimportant, surplus stuff, so as just to show the important steps in the transaction.

(The additional documents in the file referred to are here printed in full in the record as follows:)

EXHIBIT FILE B.

[Hamm Brewing Company asked for this information. Todd. Confidential file. Confidential.]

Nov. 13, 1915.

Mr. HERMAN STRAUB,
Oliver Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. STRAUB: On October 30th, 1914 we sent a confidential circular letter to the Members of our Association regarding the meeting of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association at Scranton, Pa. At this meeting Mr. H. J. Heinz, President of the H. J. Heinz Company, Pittsburg, Pa., was reelected President for his ninth consecutive term. The convention went on record against our industry in a resolution beginning with the phrase—"Recognizing the blighting effect of the liquor traffic, etc."

Recently we have had two inquiries as to the Heinz Company in which our correspondents have stated that it was their impression that Mr. Heinz was not unfriendly to our business and that letters to that effect had been written by various members of the Company.

We would greatly appreciate your good offices in obtaining information to substantiate or refute this statement. Anything you may send us will, of course, be treated in confidence.

Very truly yours,

MW. Secretary.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
50 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK,
New York, October 30, 1914.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN: The 52nd Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association met in Scranton, October 5th–9th, with an attendance of 1,500 delegates and 1,000 visitors. The Philadelphia North American of October 10th publishes an account by its Special Correspondent, W. C. Sprout, from which the following is taken:

"With true consistency, the fifty-second annual convention of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association ended its four days' sessions here today as it began, with a blow at the licensed saloon.

"The 1,500 delegates and the 1,000 visitors who attended the sessions will take back home to the State's vast Sunday School population of more than 2,000,000 the message that if Pennsylvania wants to clean up, remove the State from the shadow of rum's blight and let in the sunshine of righteous government, now is the time to do it.

"At the closing session this afternoon, which re-elected H. J. Heinz, of Pittsburgh, president for the ninth consecutive term and picked Erie for the convention city in 1915, resolutions were passed emphatically indorsing local option and national prohibition.

"This indorsement put into concrete form the sentiment which has permeated the convention since Tuesday. In point of deep religious ferver, combined with zeal for active Christian citizenship, the convention made Sunday School history."

REJOICE IN PROGRESS.

"'Recognizing the blighting effect of the liquor traffic,' the resolutions assert, 'we rejoice in the aggressive temperance education of the State Association and to the end that we may have local option for the State or Nation-wide prohibition and to overthrow the saloon and the abolition of the liquor traffic.

"'We recognize the legislative petition put forward by our State department as a great epoch in educational, practical, effective temperance work, and recommend that the various schools follow carefully the plan suggested for this most commendable effort.'"

Mr. Heinz is the President of the H. J. Heinz Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., which maintains branches in all the large cities.

Yours very truly,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

NATIONAL RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE, 109 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago, Ill., Mar. 5, 1905.

MR. EDWARD L. JORDAN,
Pres. National Liquor League, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—You will remember that at our recent Annual Convention held at St. Louis, October 11, 12 and 13, it was rumored that Mr. H. J. Heinz of the H. J. Heinz Company of Pittsburg had contributed $10,000 to the Anti-Saloon League of Pennsylvania and the question being brought to the attention of the Convention, a resolution was adopted instructing me to investigate the truthfulness of the same and report the result to the trade.

In conformity with this resolution I beg to report to you that I wrote to Mr. Heinz regarding the rumored contribution and in reply I received, December 16th, a personal letter from Mr. Heinz, a copy of which I attach to this report. Therein you will note that Mr. Heinz states most emphatically that:

"You have every opportunity to ascertain from people in Pittsburg, liquor men included, who have known me personally or by reputation for many years, how my word is regarded among those who know me best. I am asked a direct question. I answer it and reiterate that neither myself, my firm or any member of it has given or promised to give any amount to the Anti-Saloon League or any similar organization and this answer goes to the substance of the whole matter."

Shortly after the receipt of this letter, I visited Pittsburg and interviewed Mr. Frauenheim of the Pittsburg Brewing Company and Mr. Wertheimer of A. Guckenheimer & Bros., Distillers of Pittsburg. Both declared that they knew Mr. Heinz well and that he is a fair-mined man of broad principles and both express entire disbelief in the rumor.

I also learned that the story originated from an individual connected with the Anti-Saloon League, who in an effort to secure for himself, some political recognition, quoted Mr. Heinz among other prominent men as being friends and supporters to the extent of a large amount of money. Investigation of this person's record proves him to be mendacious unreliable and entirely unworthy of confidence.

This is briefly my report on this question and I leave it to you to decide as to whether Mr. Heinz is deserving of censure. In my humble opinion, he is not. His denial is most positive and his standing as a business man should be a guarantee of its truthfulness.

Respectfully,

H. J. HEINZ COMPANY,

GENTLEMEN: In response to your advice that the old false rumor about a contribution by Mr. Heinz to the Anti-Saloon League is still in circulation, I beg to send you a copy of my report upon the subject, made to our then President, in 1905.

You are at liberty to use this as you deem best, and I hope it will speedily enable you to put an end to a story which does Mr. Heinz and your Company so great an injustice.

Respectfully,

PITTSBURGH, U. S. A., March 21, 1908.

Mr. JOHN A. MCDERMOTT,
Manager, Organization Bureau,
United States Brewers' Association, Chicago, Illinois.

DEAR SIR: We have in our hands a pamphlet purporting to contain a verbatim copy of an address delivered by you at a Meeting of the Manufacturers & Dealers Club in Chicago, on November 26th, 1907, in which it is stated that among others "Heinz, the Pickle Manufacturers" had made large contributions to the Anti-Saloon League.

Such a statement being entirely without foundation of truth, causes us some surprise, coming from a man prominently and officially identified with a great business association. It would not seem that a man in your position would assume to make an unauthorized statement of this character without any effort to ascertain the truth of it. Neither Mr. Heinz nor our Company, directly or indirectly, have given any sum of money to the Anti-Saloon League or to the Prohibition Party, and we feel that you should contradict this statement in positive terms and in a manner as public as you made it. Furthermore, that you should furnish us with a letter stating in effect the source of your information and the fact that you were misinformed—if you find that you were misinformed—and we may say to you frankly that it would be our purpose to have your letter reproduced and copies of it sent to such of our customers as have been prejudiced by the statement made in your address referred to above.

As a result of your statement and others of similar character made by less responsible persons, our hotel and restaurant trade is being injured. When the story first originated several years ago, an investigation was instituted by the National Liquor Dealers' Association, Mr. Robert J. Halle of Chicago, Secretary, having been delegated by the Convention of this Association at St. Louis, to make the investigation. Mr. Halle found the story to be without foundation and so reported to his Organization, as per enclosed copy of a letter issued by him at that time.

We hope it may not become necessary for us to institute proceedings designed to place definite responsibility upon persons making false statements to the injury of our business.

Yours very truly,

H. J. HEINZ COMPANY,
W. H. ROBINSON, Treasurer.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of March 21st at hand and contents carefully noted. In reference to my remarks in the speech before the Manufacturers and Dealers Club of Chicago, would say that I was, as I supposed, reliably informed that you were one of the large contributors to the Anti-Saloon League.

I shall take it up with the parties who informed me, as I supposed reliably, and ask them for proofs in the matter, and if they are not forthcoming will cheerfully write you the letter which you request.

In the meantime will you kindly send me a short letter, stating in substance that you have not and are not contributing to the Anti-Saloon League in any way. Shall give your denial and my reply as wide publicity as they may warrant.

Yours very truly,

MANAGER, ORGANIZATION BUREAU,
U. S. BREWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. J. A. MCDERMOTT,
Manager, Organization Bureau, U. S. Brewers' Association,
Chicago, Illinois.

DEAR SIR: We have your letter of the 23rd inst., expressing an intention to investigate the rumor to which you have given public utterance as a fact, and note that if you cannot now prove its truth, you are willing to retract your statement. The propriety of ascertaining the truth of such a story, in advance of its use for presumable stage effect, seems not to have occurred to you.

We have not only already sent you a plain and complete denial of the story, but evidence in support of its falsity—although not feeling especially called upon to do this, because when a man of responsibility makes a statement, deliberately calculated to injure the business of another, the burden of proof rests upon the man making the statement.

We beg, Mr. McDermott, that you will not therefore, inconvenience yourself in the least, to publish a denial for us. If you desire to retract your own statement as publicly as it was originally made, we shall be very glad to have you do that immediately and without equivocation, and to be furnished with evidence to the effect that you have done it. Otherwise, we are forced to proceed at once, with such measures against you as will vindicate our position and incidentally, determine your responsibility.

Anticipating your further advices by return mail, we are,

Yours truly,

GENTLEMEN: You evidently misunderstood my letter of March 23rd. Am not going to investigate any rumors, but am going to demand proofs of the authorities who stated that you were contributors to the Anti-Saloon League fund. I made this statement on good authority and if they do not substantiate it, shall cheerfully write you the letter, which you can use publicly.

The only thing we wanted was a note from you containing in substance your position in the matter, which we would be glad to publish with our letter, so that all of our friends shall understand your position.

Yours very truly,

MANAGER, ORGANIZATION BUREAU,

ROBERT CRAIN, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CRAIN: I am enclosing correspondence between the H. J. Heintz Company of Pittsburg and our Mr. McDermott, with reference to a statement which Mr. McDermott made at a public meeting to the effect that Heintz, the pickle manufacturer, was a contributor to the Anti-Saloon League. The Heintz Company, as you will see, absolutely deny the truth of the statement, and while some of our people are skeptical as to Heintz's denial, Mr. McDermott is unable to prove in any way that Heintz ever has contributed to the Anti-Saloon League. Under the circumstances, the only thing to be done is to back down as gracefully as possible; and in view of the implied threat in Heintz's letter of March 25th, Mr. Liebmann has instructed me to refer the matter to you, so that you may draw up for us a letter to the Heintz Company which will settle the business satisfactorily. I have not kept copies of this correspondence, and will ask you, therefore, to be kind enough to return it to me; and I trust that you can find time to give the matter prompt attention.

I revised McDermott's speech in this office and cut out the reference to Heintz and other individuals, as you will see in the enclosed leaflet, but this, of course, was after the Chicago address had been made. I understand that preparations for a suit against McDermott and the members of the Organization Committee have already been started.

Very truly yours,

SECRETARY.

DEAR MR. FOX: I have read carefully the correspondence between the H. J. Heinz Company of Pittsburgh, Pa. and Mr. McDermott, enclosed with your letter of April 13th. I do not deem it advisable for the United States Brewers' Association or Mr. McDermott, professing to act for the Association, to write any formal letter to the Heinz people until they have agreed not to institute proceedings against the Association, in case Mr. McDermott accedes to their demand to publish a retraction of the statement which he seems to have recklessly made. I would advise that Mr. McDermott make a personal visit to the Heinz Company at Pittsburgh and talk the situation over with them. If they will agree not to institute legal proceedings, he can, while in Pittsburgh, write them an informal letter under his own name, in which he can set forth the fact that he had been misinformed at the time he made the charges against them, and the Heinz people, with Mr. McDermott present, can give

DEAR SIR: A publication in The Philadelphia North American, under date of October 10th, 1914, has recently come to the notice of The Maryland Hotel Men's Association, wherein it is stated that you have been re-elected President of The Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association which in a recent Convention in Philadelphia adopted resolutions emphatically indorsing Local Option and National Prohibition.

On behalf of The Maryland Hotel Men's Association I as President thereof and under their instructions am now writing to inquire whether or not, the publication referred to, correctly states the two matters herein related, viz,—your re-election and the adoption of the resolutions recited.

I shall thank you for a prompt reply to this inquiry so I may report to my Association.

Mr. E. W. DAVIS,

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry of December 9th, we may say that it is a well-known fact that Mr. Heinz is an active church member and greatly interested in Sunday School Work. He is now and for several years has been President of the Pennsylvania State Sunday School Association and actively engaged in the extension and development of its organization. This is purely a personal matter with him and one with which the Company has no connection.

This Company has never made any attempt to control the views of its stockholders, directors or employees upon the subject of religion or politics. Every one is free to exercise his own volition in these matters, and the Company does not feel that it has either the right or power to control Mr. Heinz' action in this direction.

We appreciate your bringing this matter to our attention, which has given us an opportunity of stating the position of our Company in this connection.

MY DEAR MR. WEHR: I am not sure whether your letter of December 18th regarding Heinz, was acknowledged.

The item to which you refer was sent out from this office to our members, and also to the National Hotel Association, and I judge that the latter have followed it up as I have seen several references to it in hotel journals. Of course the reply made by the President of the Heinz Company to the President of the Hotel Men's Association is completely evasive and unsatisfactory.

Thanking you for your interest in the matter, I am,

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember any activity against the Packard Motor Car Co. on the part of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. I remember there was some correspondence about it. I do not remember exactly what the result of it was.

Maj. HUMES. It was due to the fact that one of their sales managers or advertising men made a speech was it not—Mr. Estep.

Mr. FOX. I do not recall that, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And one of the things considered was whether you would force the Packard Motor Car Co. to discharge this man or whether you would accept their promise of future noninterference as sufficient and restore them to favor with the brewing industry. Is not that a fact?

Mr. FOX. If you will refresh my memory, I shall be glad.

Maj. HUMES. I read a circular letter upon the letterhead of the United States Brewers' Association, dated December 8, 1909:

FOX EXHIBIT No. 21.

To the members of the United States Brewers Association.

GENTLEMEN: By direction of President Hoster, I beg to call your attention to the following facts:

On October 23rd ult., at a meeting of advertising men in Cleveland, Ohio, some remarks derogatory to our industry and highly offensive in character were made by Ralph E. Estep, advertising manager for the Packard Motor Car Company of Detroit, Mich. Said remarks found their way into a section of the daily press and were extensively copied and commented upon by our trade papers.

In view of the natural resentment of our members and friends at an attack so wanton and uncalled for, President Hoster deems it advisable that you should be informed that the Packard Company have made ample apology for the act of their representative, and are taking every means to prevent the further circulation of the injurious statements above referred to. President Joy of the Packard Company has written us unreservedly to this effect, and the offending party, Mr. Estep, has placed in the hands of our President a letter in which he acknowledges his error and asks that it be not laid up to his employers (the Packard Motor Car Company).

It would, therefore, seem best on all sides to let the matter drop, as our President suggests, and this notice is sent out to our members in order that any prejudice affecting the Packard Company may be removed.

Respectfully yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

Did you send out that letter?

Mr. FOX. I have no doubt of it, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And is that a file of correspondence from the Brewers' Association files?

Mr. FOX. It is.

EXHIBIT FILE C.

[Copy.]

1002-2-3-4 FORD BUILDING,
Detroit, Michigan, November 15, 1909.

Mr. HENRY B. JOY,
Pres. Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit, Mich.

DEAR SIR: An article which has been quite widely published and quoted as a portion of an address given by Mr. Ralph E. Estep, Advertising Manager Packard Motor Car Company of Detroit, delivered at the Advertising Affiliation First Ad-Fest, Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, October 23, 1909, has been called to my attention. The words attributed to Mr. Estep are as follows:

"We write articles for Printer's Ink about ethics in business. Then we go out and become the hired megaphones of brewing interests, which run all the dives in this country and successfully conduct the business of drunken darkies' orgies and white slavery."

This statement is a lie, and one which I as general counsel for the Michigan State Brewers' Association not only personally resent, but also on behalf of my clients. I know that the brewers of the State of Michigan and other States are not responsible for and have been making an effort to eliminate the very things that Mr. Estep charges to them. I call this matter to your attention not only from a personal standpoint and as a representative of the Brewers' Association, realizing that such statements do them an injustice, but also for the reason that this statement does your firm an injustice. At the present time your vehicles are being used by some of my clients and others are contemplating purchases of your machines. This being true, it is only fair that this matter be brought to your attention. There is no more truth in this statement than there is in the one which I have often heard repeated to the effect that the automobile industry is one of the most corrupting influences of modern life and that the automobile is one of the chief sources through which the white slave traffic is augmented.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) WILLIAM C. MANCHESTER,
General Counsel Michl State Brewers' Ass'n.

WCM/LMW

HBJ-B-2640 NOVEMBER 16, 1909.

Mr. WILLIAM C. MANCHESTER,
1004 Ford Building, Detroit, Michigan.

DEAR SIR:—Your esteemed favor of November 15, at hand.

I appreciate very much the work that the Brewers' Association and the Liquor Dealers' Association is doing in this State to meet the views of the public and control the liquor traffic in a more decent and proper manner. I feel that to a large extent the prejudice to the liquor interests could be and will be removed by the good judgment of the brewing and liquor interests themselves by the proper conduct of proper establishments.

The competitive campaign between the brewing and liquor interests, which creates a pressure to sell through the various kinds of establishments, objectionable and unobjectionable, is a thing which ought to be eliminated, and the brewing interests would conserve their business by seeking to do an amount of trade for which there was a natural demand instead of pressing the goods through methods which lead to the establishment of objectionable retail methods.

I think the campaign of the brewers to improve the conditions has done a great deal of good.

As to the words attributed to Mr. E. R. Estep, to which you refer, your letter calls them to my attention for the first time. I know nothing about the facts. Of course, as you well know, the brewing companies have in the past "staked" very unscrupulous men in the saloon business and it is probably in this way that the condemnation gets back to the brewing interests which is of course unfortunate, as among the brewers of Detroit I personally have a number of friends whose interest in the welfare of the community is second to none.

Your parallel that the automobile industry is regarded as a corrupting influence is not quite a legitimate line of thought, however, because we do not "stake" people in the business of operating automobiles for "joy-riding" purposes.

I am not a bigot on the liquor traffic, as you may be aware, but I think if any brewing company "stakes" an unscrupulous and irresponsible retail saloon keeper, whose business is run in such a way that it acquires the name of a dive where questionable business may be conducted, that that brewer is committing a crime against his fellow manufacturers of a perfectly legitimate article of commerce; but there is no way for the brewing interests to escape the responsibility for the practice of one of their number. They all have to suffer for the bad judgment of any one of them.

If any breweries use Packard vehicles they will use them because they believe they are the best vehicles on the market for the purpose, and we intend to try to make them the best on the market. I should not be influenced in my line of thought by whether or not a brewing company would or would not use Packard vehicles, and if I could be so influenced it would not make any difference in the general situation.

If the words attributable to Mr. Estep, as quoted in your letter, are correct, he might possibly justly set up the fact that some of the brewing interests run some of the dives, etc, etc, and it is unquestionably true that in the minds of the public the brewing interests as a whole are regarded as standing for what is done by one. It is the old doctrine that "all must suffer for the evil acts of a few." How that can be avoided is more than I can tell you, except by the few being controlled by the many, and I believe the brewing interests can do and will do that and will overcome the existing prejudices by doing the great good which it is completely within their power to do as I believe.

Yours, very truly,

HENRY B. JOY, President.

LET US BE LOYAL TO OUR MICHIGAN INDUSTRIES.

NOVEMBER 16, 1909.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: You will be interested in the inclosed attack upon brewing, theatrical, distilling, revolver making, medicine and similar industries, made by Ralph E. Estep, advertising manager of the Packard Motor Car Co., in an address before the advertising clubs of Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo, in Cleveland on October 23rd, 1909. You will at once see the vital interest to various firms in the suggestion made by Mr. Estep to eliminate liquor, medicine brewery, revolver, theatrical and other advertisements from the newspapers magazines, etc., of the country by a system of boycotting to be carried on by, presumably, Mr. Estep's employers and such other automobile advertisers as he can convert to his theory of reforming the business men of this country.

Do you not think that any of the members of the U. S. B. A., who have been solicited and purchased a Packard Touring Car, Runabout or Truck, ought to at once vigorously protest in writing to Henry B. Joy, president of the Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit, against such an attack by their advertising manager? Such an attack comes with particularly bad grace from an industry to which is charged up, whether rightfully or not, the financial ruin of many persons who have mortgaged their homes to purchase automobiles, and which is charged with being one of the chief sources by which the white slave traffic is augmented.

If you see any danger in this suggestion of Mr. Estep's will you not take the matter up at once with the members of the Association, suggesting such a letter of protest to Mr. Joy?

It would be a good idea to have the local agents for the Packard people, in every town, seen and urged to protest to their head office.

Very truly yours,

A. E. GORDON.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. FOX,—Probably you will have received my letter of November 16th, with refence to the Packard Motor Car Company's advertising agent and his attack on the brewing industry, as soon as you receive this letter. I write this to advise you that Mr. Manchester will appear before the Adcraft Club, in Detroit, on Friday evening to answer Mr. Estep's attack and I think that if you sent a letter to Mr. Henry B. Joy along the lines indicated and sent it by special delivery so that Mr. Joy will get it early Friday morning, perhaps Mr. Estep may hear something drop which will incline him to repent his ill-advised and utterly unjustifiable criticism. I hope also that you will be able to get the matter before patent medicine manufacturers, the whiskey people, makers of fire arms, and the theatrical interests in New York City in order that as many influences as possible be brought to bear upon the Packard Motor Car Company.

It seems to me that this proposition of Mr. Estep's is so dangerous to our interests that we should leave no stone unturned in the effort to find means with which to put a quick and complete stopper upon his apparently upbridled mouth.

Your letter to Joy should be addressed to Mr. Henry B. Joy, President of the Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit.

I am enclosing you a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Joy by Mr. Manchester.

By the way, I find that considerable of my mail goes to Mr. Manchester's office, as it is addressed care of the Michigan State Brewers Association. It would be very much better if the clerks in your various departments could be instructed to address all of my mail as follows: A. E. GORDON, 26 Equity Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE CHRIST. DIEHL BREWING COMPANY,

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of November 17, at hand and noted.

Unfortunate remarks are sometimes made and the remarks to which you refer are in that class. We are very sorry any such thing has occurred. Of course we are very sorry the remarks have been made. They do not reflect the sentiment of this Company.

We have many friends in the brewing business whom we know are just as thoroughly interested in the welfare of the community as anyone else can possible be.

Our Mr. Estep fully appreciates the mistake he has made. We are very sorry for it. Most everyone makes mistakes that they wish they could correct, and this is one of them.

Yours very truly,

HENRY B. JOY, President.

HBJ-B-2667 NOVEMBER 18th, 1909.

Mr. A. GOEBEL, Jr.,
Gen'l. Mgr., The Goebel Brewing Company, Ltd., Detroit, Michigan.

Dear Sir:—

I thank you for your esteemed favor of November 16, calling the address of Mr. E. R. Estep to my attention.

Mr. Estep realizes that he made a mistake and the phraseology of his assertion of course cannot be substantiated and is not true. I appreciate and so do all your fellow citizens the efforts that all brewers are making and have made to correct many of the evils of the liquor traffic and I have many friends in the brewery industry who are so much interested in the welfare of our city and state, as I am myself, and I am not at all surprised that you write me as you have on the subject of Mr. Estep's address.

I think you will appreciate that in a measure the competitive methods of the marketing of alcoholic beverages have induced some producers their goods in retail establishments of very questionable character, or even about whose character there was no question, and the reaction from those retail establishments of this objectionable nature has reflected upon the entire brewing industry because the public mind does not differentiate. It simply regards a retail saloon which is backed by some brewing company as having the sanction of all the brewers and this is to blame no doubt to a large extent for the prejudice in the minds of some against the brewing industry.

I appreciate to the fullest extent the co-operative efforts the brewers have made to elmiinate objectionable retail saloons and to bring the saloon into a sphere of respectability instead of allowing them to run at hap-hazard and become disgraces to the neighborhood and entire community. In this work the brewers have accomplished and are accomplished untold good.

Of course it goes without saying that I am sorry an official of this Company should have made the remarks to which you very justly take exception, and Mr. Estep fully appreciates the error he made in his sweeping denunciation of the brewing interests. It is quite probable, as you will doubtless recognize, that he could have hunted up a specific saloon, probably even a number of individual saloons backed by same brewing interests to which you would take exception as well as he himself, but of course his sweeping assertions are exceedingly unjust to the brewing interests who are diligently endeavoring to market in proper and respectable methods a perfectly legitimate article of commerce.

The incident is exceedingly unfortunate and our Company regrets it very much, as I do personally, and as does Mr. Estep.

Yours very truly,

HENRY B. JOY, President.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,

Mr. HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of November 18, at hand and noted.

The remarks of Mr. E. R. Estep, who is employed by this Company in our Advertising Department, had already been called to my attention by some of my friends in the brewing industry in Detroit.

The remarks by Mr. Estep would never have been made if we had known of his intent to make them, if we could have prevented it. His sweeping statements cannot be substantiated by facts. I enclose to you herewith a copy of a letter which I have written to Mr. A. Goebel, Jr., General Manager of the Goebel Brewing Company, in reply to his letter to me on this subject.

I have a large number of friends in the brewing business in Detroit, and I know of their personal efforts to aid in the stamping out of objectionable places and I know of the diligent campaign made by the brewers throughout the country in that direction, as set forth in your letter.

It of course goes without saying that generally the brewers as a whole, in this country, are as much interested in the welfare of the people as you or I.

The prominence given to the remarks of Mr. Estep is exceedingly unfortunate. The fact that his name is coupled with that of the Packard Motor Car Company is to a large extent responsible for the extensive publicity and this is a matter of sincere regret to me. I enclose you copies of letters which I have written in reply to brewers who have written to me on the subject.

It is exceedingly unfortunate I think that the Brewers' Bulletin in Chicago is engaged in giving wide publicity to Mr. Estep's remarks. If the subject had been let drop, it probably would have passed unnoticed, as the wider the publicity the greater the harm, not only to the brewing interests but to this company.

We are very sorry the address was made. There are no persons connected with this company but what will feel the same way. We are all well-known in Detroit, as you can find upon inquiry and we certainly are not bigoted on the liquor question.

Most of the brewers' letters include in their correspondence the statement that those remarks of Mr. Estep cut out the possibility of their buying Packard vehicles. If the address of Mr. Estep was one which we could stand behind, and was based on facts and was true, and could be substantiated by facts, we would stand behind our guns, even if we lost the business of some of the brewers, but I do not think it is the intention of the brewers to seek to secure from this company a denial of the responsibility for Mr. Estep's remarks, by threats. Whether this company gets all of the brewers' business or none of it, makes no difference in our desire to repudiate all responsibility for the remarks of Mr. Estep and to express our sincere regret that such remarks were made which reflect upon the diligent efforts and good intent of many of my friends in the brewing business to correct the evils and stamp out the disreputable places which they are making such a diligent effort to do and at great expense.

Yours very truly,

HENRY B. JOY, President.

MY DEAR MR. FOX,—I have your letter of November 18th, enclosing the copy of your letter to Mr. Joy. It gives me great pleasure to tell you that a very brilliant illumination has burst upon Mr. Joy. Mr. Goebel has received a letter from him in which he apologizes not fewer than three times for his Mr. Estep's silly attack. In view of this Mr. Goebel thinks, and I heartily agree with him, that it would be just as well not to send out those circulars at once. Perhaps we can do better by sending out the circular letter with a reproduction of Mr. Joy's letter. I will write you again, within a day or so, in this connection.

DEAR SIRS:—A number of the brewers write rather undiplomatic letters, for which I do not know as I can criticise them, to the effect that they cannot buy any more Packard cars if those are the views held by this Company.

We are repudiating this matter, not because of threats on the part of various people, but because of the fact that it's a rank injustice, no only to the brewers and others, but to this company and we shall still repudiate it and stamp it out to the best of our ability if no brewer ever buys another Packard car, because it is an injustice and a wrong.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: After discussing the speech of Mr. Estep, Advertising Manager of the Packard Motor Car Company, with others locally interested, it seems to me that the unanimous opinion is that the matter has been carried about as far as it should be. Mr. Goebel said you suggested having a retraction in the local papers. I do not deem this advisable, inasmuch as the only paper that published Mr. Estep's remarks was the Detroit Saturday Night, which is a weekly paper of minor importance. Both Mr. Joy and Mr. Estep have acted the part of gentlemen, apologized, retracted, and acknowledged the mistake.

In my opinion the U. S. B. A. and the different state associations should now do everything possible to overcome the effect of the publicity given Mr. Estep's speech.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 29th ultimo, enclosing copy of your letter addressed to Mr. Hoster regarding The Packard Motor Car Company controversy. I am thoroughly satisfied in my own mind that Mr. Joy, Mr. Walden the General Manager and all of the Directors of The Packard Motor Car Company have done everything that anyone could do to correct the unfortunate error made by their employee. Their letter to the trade and the retraction of Mr. Estep personally, I believe, is all that we have any right to ask of them. I have in my possession enough correspondence to hold them for all time to come and believe that we have made sincere friends and that through their influence many muzzles will be clasped on tight. I placed an order yesterday for another Packard truck, and believe the proper thing for us to do now would be to send a circular to the trade that would convince all concerned of the true position of the Packard people. Mr. Estep's resignation was demanded by the company, but upon my advice was not accepted, as I thought best to hold a person with such a tongue where he could be controlled rather than be turned loose and given an opportunity to continue his talk and attempt to justify the same, as well as damage the company who discharged him.

Very truly yours

DECEMBER 8, 1909.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association.

GENTLEMEN: By direction of President Hoster, I beg to call your attention to the following facts:

On October 23rd ult., at a meeting of advertising men in Cleveland, Ohio, some remarks derogatory to our industry and highly offensive in character were made by Ralph E. Estep, advertising manager for the Packard Motor Car Company of Detroit, Mich. Said remarks found their way into a section of the daily press and were extensively copied and commented upon by our trade papers.

In view of the natural resentment of our members and friends at an attack so wanton and uncalled for, President Hoster deems it advisable that you should be informed that the Packard Company have made ample apology for the act of their representative, and are taking every means to prevent the further circulation of the injurious statements above referred to. President Joy of the Packard Company has written us unreservedly to this effect, and the offending party, Mr. Estep, has placed in the hands of our President a letter in which he acknowledges his error and asks that it be not laid up to his employers (the Packard Motor Car Company).

It would therefore, seem best on all sides to let the matter drop, as our President suggests, and this notice is sent out to our members in order that any prejudice affecting the Packard Company may be removed.

Respectfully yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

Maj. HUMES. You also put on your unfair or boycott list the Reo Motor Car Co., did you not?

Mr. FOX. You would have to refresh my memory on that, too, sir. These things are long ago. I have not any doubt about them, but——

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, under date of November 28, 1911, send out a confidential circular to the members of the United States Brewers' Association, in which, after referring first to the Fox Typewriter Co. you then made the following statement:

Mr. R. H. Scott, Manager of the Reo Automobile Factory, of Lansing, Michigan, is also a strong opponent, which is constantly quoted by the Anti-Saloon League.

The letter then refers to two other men who were on the boycott list, and the letter is signed by yourself. [Exhibiting letter to witness.]

Mr. FOX. Correct, sir.

Senator NELSON. Have the letter go in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; I am going to put the whole file into the record, only to save the time of the committee I will not read all of it.

Then, after some further correspondence, on December 5, 1913, you sent another confidential letter to the members of the association with reference to Mr. Scott's activities, did you not?

Mr. Fox (after examination). It speaks for itself. It says that he is now president of the Michigan Anti-Saloon League.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. The exhibits in that matter are submitted as part of the record.

DEAR SIRS: This is to advise you that Mr. R. H. Scott, Manager of the Reo Motor Car Company of Lansing, Michigan, is now the President of the Michigan Anti-Saloon League. The President of the Reo Motor Car Company is Mr. R. E. Olds, who is a large contributor to the Anti-Saloon League.

The American Issue of September 6, 1912, published a letter from Mr. Scott, in which he said:

"Two years ago on the first of April last, we voted the saloons out of Ingham county. The work was done under the direction of the Anti-Saloon League of Michigan and through a local committee of which I was chairman. This brought me prominently before the liquor element who did everything possible to get Mr. Olds, who is president of our company, and myself to discontinue backing the temperance movement. This we flatly refused to do and openly defied them through public meetings and through letters in answer to theirs when they threatened to boycott us. While they attempted to carry out their threats it had no effect on our business and the past year we were not able to fill one-half the orders and at the present time agents and customers are clamoring for Reo cars.

"We believe that the attitude of the liquor element towards our car only stimulated the other class of people to buy and instead of its being a detriment we believe it has been a benefit to our business and as Mr. Olds states, as long as they wish to continue free advertising for us, we do not object."

GENTLEMEN: I wish to call your attention to the results of the local option election in Ingram County wherein is located the City of Lansing. This city gave a majority of 1740 wet two years ago, last April it gave a majority of 236 dry. The cause of this was the Reo Auto Company, employing 4500 men who were told that they must vote dry or lose their jobs, and before election their employer Mr. Scott, personally asked how they would vote and those stating that they would vote wet were discharged and the following Saturday night, the company also had detectives working among their men prior to the election in the shops and at the polls and the results were that men of families voted dry to save their jobs and the change of the wet majority is directed to this concern. Also this company gave $5,000 toward the dry fund of the county.

I have written to the Michigan State Brewing Association this morning the same as I write you. Four liquor men in the City of Kalamazoo bought the Reo autos since this election; they perhaps did not know of this at all. The liquor business throughout the country should be put on to this and if this was done they would feel their actions toward us.

As a rule liquor men usually patronize their enemies and its time that they should be lectured to and brought into line and told something.

It is, I believe, perfectly true that the employees of the Reo Company in Ingram County, Michigan, were intimidated into voting "dry" at the recent local option election, and it does not make any particular difference, therefore, whether they did so under pressure from the corporation itself, or from one of its directors.

GENTLEMEN: In your July 18th issue of "Current Thought" you state that it is said that the Reo Company, through their Mr. Scott, intimidated their employees and threatened to discharge them in case they were found to vote in favor of the saloon. This information has reached this office many times before and each time it was denied by Mr. Olds with the statement that he was absolutely opposed to Prohibition, but that Mr. Scott was a Prohibitionist.

However, he would not allow Scott to exercise any of his Prohibition ideas in the business. There are several people in Milwaukee who are connected either directly or indirectly with the brewing and liquor business who are owners of Reo cars and who have come to me for definite information. Should matters be as you state in your issue of July 18th, they would all be willing to sell their cars at a sacrifice in order to show them up. Mr. HANS A. KOENIG, Secretary,
The Manufacturers & Dealers Club, 305 Watkins Bldg.,
Milwaukee, Wis.

DEAR SIR: The Manufacturers & Dealers Association of Chicago has referred to me your letter of the 27th ult., with reference to the Reo Company.

The Sales Manager of the Reo Motor Car Company wrote last June to their Newark office stating:

I note that you claim to have lost the sale of quite a number of REO cars in your city because of the fact that the Board of Control of the Wholesale Car Dealers' Ass'n., are under the impression that this company is taking an active part on the prohibition side of the liquor question. I am in a position to assure you that this positively is not the case. This company has not contributed financially or otherwise any movement either for or against the liquor question, feeling that this is not a proper matter for a commercial organization to take up. But one of our five Directors has taken an active interest in the local option question. He has done this in a purely personal manner, and we must of course concede to him the right to follow the dictates of his conscience as far as his personal actions are concerned."

I referred this to the Secretary of the Michigan Brewers' Association, who replied under date of July 8th as per copy herewith.

It is, I believe, true that the employees of the Reo Company in Lansing, Michigan were urged, if not intimidated, into voting "dry" at the recent local option election. It seems to me that it does not make any particular difference whether they did so under pressure of the corporation itself, or through one or more of its directors or managers. The County went dry, and it is generally credited to the influence of the Reo Company.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not boycott Proctor & Gamble?

Senator OVERMAN. Who are Proctor & Gamble?

Maj. HUMES. The Ivory soap people.

Senator OVERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOX. I remember that there was some correspondence about it, but I do not remember the details.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not in a confidential circular, under date of February 27, 1915, over your signature in this bulletin, advise the trade with reference to the activities of Proctor & Gamble? [Exhibiting letter to witness.]

Mr. FOX (after examining letter). Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in each one of these instances, when these matters were called to your attention, you personally took up the matter with friends and acquaintances and officials of the brewers' association in the various communities to check the information and verify it in every particular, in order that you might have that to reinforce you in placing these individuals or these concerns on your boycott list?

Mr. Fox. I should think it was extremely probable that I took such a course. That would be a matter of common precaution. I recall some cases, but I can not swear that I did so in every case.

THE OHIO BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
New York City.

DEAR MR. FOX: Replying to your recent inquiry as to the attitude of the Proctor & Gamble Company on the liquor question.

Mr. James N. Gamble, the Vice President of the Proctor & Gamble Company, has been reported from time to time in the daily press as a heavy contributor to the Anti-Saloon League, and was very active in the recent campaign for State-wide prohibition. I have no knowledge of any contribution having been made by the Proctor & Gamble Company.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. WM. F. HESS, SECY.,

MY DEAR MR. HESS: I beg to acknowledge with thanks receipt of your favor of the 22nd with the information about the Proctor & Gamble Company.

Appreciating your cooperation, I am,

Yours, very truly,

Secretary.

HFF/ED

THE PROCTOR & GAMBLE CO.,
SOAP MANUFACTURERS,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Vice-President of this Company, Mr. James N. Gamble, took an active part in the recent campaign for State-wide prohibition, and we are informed that he is a liberal contributor to the Anti-Saloon League, but we have no knowledge of any contribution having been made by the Proctor & Gamble Company.

Senator OVERMAN. What was your purpose in sending out these confidential letters? Since your memory has been refreshed, I will repeat the question. Was it not part of your system to have the brewing trade not trade with people who were fighting in behalf of the cause of prohibition?

Mr. Fox. I do not think the purpose was ever clearly defined Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. What was your purpose in sending out these confidential letters?

Mr. Fox. There was a constant stream of inquiries on this line as the correspondence shows. Some of these men quoted were contributing large sums and were leading the fight against us. It was perfectly natural that we should be asked for this information and that we should supply it. I think any brewer would have been foolish to have given business to a man who was fighting him, if he could have avoided it.

Senator OVERMAN. If it would have been foolish, then it was your purpose to see that they did not trade with them?

Mr. FOX. Well, we gave him the information, for his own judgment, upon which he could use his own intelligence. That was as far as we could go.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not a common experience to have members of your association, or the officers of the State brewers' association, request that a certain concern be blacklisted or boycotted from time to time, and to use those expressions "boycott" or "blacklist"; and did you not reply to them in each instance that "we do not boycott, we can not boycott, but give me the definite information, and I will notify the trade"; and were you not very careful to avoid the use of the word "boycott" in this correspondence, although your members, who were not as familiar with the law as you were, frequently used it?

Mr. FOX. I think very probably, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I show you the file of the Osborn Manufacturing Co., and ask you if that is not a file from the United States Brewers' Association records, and if the trade was not notified with reference to this concern?

Mr. FOX. I identify that, sir.

(Attention: Mr. A. Feuchtwanger.)

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 1st involves a matter of policy, and has merited the writer's personal attention.

We appreciate the situation in Lawrence County, to which you refer, and beg to assure you that because of our personal esteem for your company, and the thoroughly satisfactory relations we have had with you during a considerable term of years, we would like very much to comply.

Your request brings us face to face with a question of principle, and compels us to say to you frankly that while we are glad to do business with such good concerns as yours, and furnish such brushes and brooms as will contribute to cleanliness and general good conditions, we cannot support the liquor traffic,—because we feel that the American saloon is detrimental to the best interests of the American people, and the American home.

We believe you will appreciate the sincerety of our position, and our inability to comply with the request you have made.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also take exception and place the Western Union Telegraph Co. on your unfair list because they required their employees to be total abstainers?

Mr. FOX. I have no recollection of that.

Maj. HUMES. They were on the unfair list that came from your records that I showed you yesterday, were they not?

Mr. FOX. I did not notice it, but if they are it speaks for itself.

Maj. HUMES. They are on that list.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; they are on that list.

Maj. HUMES. I show you this letter, addressed to the Western Union Telegraph Co. [Handing letter to witness.]

Mr. FOX. That is a perfectly proper letter, I should say, sir. It does not, however, bear the interpretation which you seem to put upon it. I think that letter ought to be read.

Maj. HUMES. I want to be perfectly fair with you, Mr. Fox. This is the only letter on the subject that appears to be in your file, and the name is on the unfair list that was in the office of the company. The letter is dated January 18, 1915:

EXHIBIT FILE G.

JAN. 18, 1915

Mr. NEWCOMB CARLTON, President,
Western Union Telegraph Company,
195 Broadway, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: The Chicago Evening Post of January 11th, reports an address made by the Rev. Wilbur F. Sheridan, General Secretary of the Epworth League of the Methodist-Episcopal Church, in which he intimated that the Western Union Telegraph Company requires its employees to be total abstainers. I am taking the liberty of writing to ask if this is a fact?

We feel that the employer has a perfect right to make rigid rules with regard to the conduct of his employees during the time that he pays for, and that of course he should not employ any man whose habits are such as to interfere with his efficiency, and that drunkenness is at all times a proper cause for discharge. The Western Union Telegraph Company should, and must insist upon its employees being thoroughly temperate, but we question whether any employer has the right to go beyond this.

Yours respectfully,

———— ————,

HFF/W. Secretary.

Mr. Fox. The matter had escaped my recollection, but——

Maj. HUMES. Was there ever a reply from that letter?

Mr. Fox. That I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. The fact remains, however—this was on January 18—that on an unfair list dated April 1, 1915, their name appears as unfair: does it not?

Mr. Fox. I do not know. If you say it is in the records, I will take your word for it.

Maj. HUMES. It is on that list you identified yesterday. Assuming that it is on that list——

Mr. Fox. Then it is correct.

Maj. HUMES. What other interpretation than the one which I have placed on the transaction is it susceptible of?

Mr. Fox. Was the correspondence given in that transaction, sir?

Maj. HUMES. That is the only letter that I find in the files on that particular subject.

Mr. Fox. I do not think I can answer that question without seeing the record to which you refer. I have no recollection of it.

(At this point the list heretofore referred to as an unfair list, and introduced in evidence on yesterday, was produced and shown to the witness.)

Maj. HUMES. This is the exhibit to which I refer, Exhibit 293. I call your attention to the second name on the second page, "Western Union Telegraph Co."

Mr. Fox. Major, this is a list which evidently was in our files as of April 1, 1915, headed "List of firms who are unfriendly to our interests." Now, I have no recollection who got that up, where we got it from, or anything else. I am perfectly sure it was never sent out. I do not know who compiled it, or from whom we received it.

Maj. HUMES. But the fact remains——

Mr. Fox. The fact remains that it was in our files. Now, that is all I can tell you about it.

Maj. HUMES. In view of the fact that I have here the correspondence in practically everyone of those cases, including a bulletin that you sent out to all of the trade, what other purpose could there have been in maintaining that list?

Mr. Fox. It is a question of what you mean by "maintaining the list." The fact that that list was found in our library of files does not necessarily mean that we were maintaining an unfair list. As I say, we had hundreds of thousands of documents. How we got it, I do not know; but I do not believe there is any evidence to show that we ever made any use of it, or that we ever did anything except such as you have in these bulletins.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the clerk that handled these matters?

Mr. Fox. We had a librarian and an assistant.

Maj. HUMES. A librarian and an assistant?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did they sign your name to official bulletins and official confidential communications to the members of the association without your consent?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Or without your knowledge?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. These bulletins and confidential communications all bear your signature, do they not?

Mr. Fox. That is a very different thing from this list that you are speaking of.

Maj. HUMES. Then, as I understand it, your contention is that there are a few concerns on this list that were not actually boycotted?

Mr. Fox. My contention is that I have no recollection about that list, and I do not know how it originated, or what use was made of it, if any.

Maj. HUMES. I show you correspondence with reference to the Maryland Casualty Co., of which Mr. John T. Stone is president, and ask if you did not cause a boycott to be instituted against that company because of Mr. Stone?

Mr. Fox. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be evasive, and I do not want to fence with counsel on this matter; but the interpretation which he has put on it, of "boycott," may have more of a significance than the facts warrant; and I do not feel that I should commit myself or my association to a statement that we boycotted anybody, at any rate without consultation with my counsel. If the counsel of this committee is going to persist in trying to commit us to a technical boycott, I think before I answer that question I should confer with my counsel on the matter.

Senator OVERMAN. You can answer the question in your own way and you can confer with your counsel, if you want to.

(Thereupon the witness conferred with his counsel, after which the following occurred:)

Mr. Fox. The correspondence speaks for itself, sir. I identify it and the interpretation is yours.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not the purpose of your association in sending out that circular to induce and persuade the members of your association and those affiliated with them to withhold their business from the Maryland Casualty Co.?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall it, but I think it is very likely.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of the 15th instant relative to present attitude of the Maryland Casualty Company, and particularly its president, on the prohibition question, would say, that I do not know whether or not the Company as a company has taken any stand on this question, but I do not believe it has, because the personnel of its Board of Directors, so far as I know it, would not undertake to inject any question of this sort into the company's policies. As for Mr. Stone, its president, it is well known he is a strong advocate of prohibition, but it seems to me his activity has in recent years been less marked than formerly. The only public position taken by Mr. Stone, was when he was selected by the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland to preside at a joint debate held between the superintendent of the league and a candid te for our State Legislature last fall.

I think Mr. Crain can give you more detailed information relating to Mr. Stone's attitude than anybody else. We feel, however, that this attitude is sufficiently unfriendly to justify us in not giving any of our company's business to the Maryland Casualty Company.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,

DEAR SIR: You may find by referring to your January 1911 reference sheets that Jno. T. Stone, President of Maryland Casualty Company, Baltimore, Md. acted as Chairman in the Lyric Hall, Baltimore, for State-wide Prohibition in Maryland and introduced the principal Speaker of the evening.

Mr. Stone we understand had not changed his ideas on Prohibition. We recently resigned as General Agents for the Maryland Casualty Company partly on this account, and are now in receipt of the enclosed circular emphasizing his opinions or fanaticism in connection with Personal Accident Insurance.

As the Company also writes Liability, Automobile, Workmen's Compensation, Plate Glass, Steam Boiler, Fly Wheel, Sprinkler Leakage and Burglary Insurance for brewers, etc., it occurs to us your Bureau should be advised of the new circular he has published and we accordingly took up the same with Mr. Ferd. Gast, Secretary of the Independent Breweries Company of this city, who requested us to send same to you.

This circular if issued by a disinterested person might pass the censor, but emanating from Jno. T. Stone, President Maryland Casualty Company would show he is still opposed to your interests.

Please note and lay particular emphasis on the second "don't" viz. "Habitual drinkers." In this and every other city many men and women use beverages at lunch or dinner as a habit, but Mr. Stone notifies each agent of his Company throughout the United States, Canada and Mexico to write no Personal Accident Insurance on such persons.

We are having our own troubles with the Maryland Casualty Company and request you do not use our name in any bulletin you may use in connection with his circular letter of August 22nd, and hope you will send us an acknowledgement of this letter with the information that you will not use our names. Also send us copy of the bulletin if you use this information.

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your letter of August 27th. I enclose copy of our circular letter of Feb. 14th, 1911, which speaks for itself. Mr. John T. Stone, President of the Maryland Casualty Company states that his action is personal, and does not imply that the Company has taken any position on the prohibition question. However, he has recently sent a printed notice on behalf of the company, to its agents, saying, among other things, that they must not submit as prospective risks, any "habitual drinkers."

MR. ROBERT CRAIN, Baltimore, Md.

MY DEAR MR. CRAIN: I am enclosing copy of a circular which was sent out by the Interstate Executives Association on February 14, 1911, in regard to Mr. John T. Jones, President of the Maryland Casualty Company. Shortly after this, Mr. Stone wrote to the Maitland Moritz Agency Company of Denver, stating in substance, that he had acted personally, and that his action did not commit the Maryland Casualty Company in any way. I am now in receipt of a printed notice to the agents of the Maryland Casualty Company, issued officially by its President, instructing them, amongst other things, not to insure, or submit as a risk, any man who is an "habitual drinker."

I also have letters from some of our members, asking for further information about the attitude of the Company, which I believe, does an important business with brewers.

Do you think that we had better get out another confidential letter giving the correspondence and the facts in the matter? Or would you advise that we write to the Company first, and ask what it means by "habitual drinkers"—whether it includes in this class the men who use beer and other drinks regularly in moderation?

Thanks for your letter of the 31st ult!

It is a well known fact that Mr. Stone is very much of a Prohibitionist, and is an active member of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League. DEAR MR. FOX: Enclosed you will find a page of one of our daily newspapers, and you will notice the leading figures in the Methodist Convention, to be held here in Columbus soon.

By looking over the faces you will observe one John T. Stone, president of the Baltimore Casualty company of Baltimore, Maryland. Of course, being identified as he is with these other men it is taken for granted he is dry and against our business.

No doubt many brewers throughout the country do business with The Baltimore Casualty Company, and no doubt they would not appreciate the fact that Mr. Stone preaches against their business, if that is the case that he is dry.

You might please let writer know whether or not Mr. Stone is antagonistic against our business in order that I may not in any manner, form or shape patronize his company, as I surely would not like to do business with someone who is against me in my business.

No doubt this would be a good National Point to take up.

"I have your letter of the 28th ult., referring to the report made by Mr. Jol Schlintz concerning our attitude toward the breweries. I wish to again assu you that we have absolutely no quarrel with the breweries, nor have we ev posted in our factories any such circulars as the Brewers' Association of Cincinnati Ohio claim were posted.

The only posters that we put up in our buildings were posters referring the evils of drunkenness, as you well know, we have no rule in our compa that says our employees shall be total abstainers, and there are undoubtedly many of our employees who use beer as a beverage, but we are absolutely opposed to intemperance, and as you know intemperance is something that the brewers themselves condemn.

In the case of any of our employees who are guilty of intemperance our policy is first to warn them and then if they do not become temperate in their habits we are forced to discharge them, and I am sure that this is the policy that is followed by all brewers who are really interested in building up their business on a sound, legitimate basis.

I am sorry that untrue reports have been circulated regarding our company, and I trust that this explanation will enable you to correct any reports that may reach you."

Mr. GEORGE F. GUND,

MY DEAR MR. GUND: One of our Wisconsin friends writes as follows:

"Enclosed we hand you a letter from the Asher Cooperage Company of Sandusky, Ohio.

"We have been informed by competitors of these people that Mr. Asher is not at all favorable to the brewing business, and that he has contributed to the other side.

"Can you find out just how these people stand as we are in the need of cooperage, and if their stand should be unfavorable, do not care to send money through that channel."

Can you give us any information, in confidence, in the matter?

Very truly yours,

HFF/W

THE U. S. BREWERS ASSOCIATION,
Mr. Hugh F. Fox, Secy., 50 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 26th inst. in regard to The Asher Cooperage Co. of Sandusky, would say that it seems a few years ago I heard other cooperage people make remarks as though Mr. Asher, while in Kentucky, had contributed to the other side, but, of course, do not know whether that was a fair accusation or not. If such, however, was the case no doubt the Louisville brewers would be best qualified to give the facts. I would not know where to make inquiries as to that. I have met Mr. Asher but once, when he called here last July.

Yours very truly,

GEO. F. GUND.

MY DEAR MR. FEHR: We are trying to get a line on the Asher Cooperage Co. of Sandusky, and it is rumored that Mr. Asher while in Kentucky made a contribution to our opponents. If you can throw any light upon the matter I shall appreciate it.

Yours very truly,

NEW YORK, February 27, 1915.

To the Members of the United Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN: The following is submitted for the information of our members:

* * * * * * *

THE ASHER COOPERAGE WORKS,
Sandusky, Ohio.

Mr. Asher writes that he is not a prohibitionist, and has never supported the movement or contributed one cent towards its support. In this connection, the Manager of the New South Brewery & Ice Company, of Middlesborough, Ky., writes under date of February 16, 1915: "We have known Mr. A. J. Asher for the last twenty years and have always found him to be a true, loyal and faithful friend of the liberal element, ready at all times to defend its principles and business interests, both morally and financially. During our recent 'wet' and 'dry' election in Bell County (held September 28, 1914) he took a personal interest in the fight, and not only devoted his time, but assisted us financially."

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that a complaint was made with reference to Apperson Bros., and that you investigated this concern, and then notified the trade, under date of February 27, 1915, as follows:

APPERSON BROTHERS,
Kokomo, Indiana.

This is a concern that makes motor cars, and we are informed that their attitude is very friendly.

Did you not send that out?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it, but I identify the correspondence. I am not disputing any of these things, sir. I am accepting them as the records show.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever hear of the American Rolling Mill Co.?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that when a concern was to your mind unfriendly to your interests, and when you could not hurt that concern by means of a boycott or by the withholding of patronage, you sought to interfere with their business in other ways?

Mr. FOX. I have no recollection of anything of the kind.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in the case of the American Rolling Mill Co. you discovered that there was no way by which your membership could interfere with the business of this concern, and consequently you referred it to architects in an effort to prevent the specification of their material in the preparation of contracts and specifications.

Mr. Fox. I have absolutely no recollection of that.

Maj. HUMES. I ask you to refresh your recollection from the file which I show you, marked "Exhibit File L," and then answer the question.

Mr. Fox. The file shows a letter from the Ohio Brewers' Association calling our attention to the bulletin issued by the American Rolling Mill Co. of Middletown, Ohio, and reads as follows:

EXHIBIT FILE L.

OCTOBER 14, 1914.

Chr. Hafers Iron Works, New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: This is to call your attention to the "Armco Bulletin" of September 1914, published by the American Rolling Mill Company of Middletown, Ohio, in which is reprinted the posters used in Massachusetts against alcohol, together with a statement issued by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, which is a very strong indictment of "the man who manufactures alcohol."

No discrimination is made in the five pages of matter on this subject between spirits and mild beverages.

It is suggested that the matter may be of interest to brewery architects and engineers who specify structural iron work in the construction of brewery buildings.

Very truly, yours,

It has been suggested by one of our brewers that I send this to you with a view of having you bring it to the attention of the brewery architects of the United States, since many of these gentlemen have been in the habit of specify-

Maj. HUMES. I now call your attention to the correspondence with relation to the Sommers Motor Car Company, which is a branch of the Allen Motor Car Co., of Fostoria, Ohio, and ask you if you did not send a confidential circular to the members of your association calling attention to that concern, with a view of having your membership withhold patronage?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall the transaction, but I identify the correspondence.

Maj. HUMES. I ask you to refresh your recollection from the file and then answer the question.

Mr. FOX (after examing file). Mr. Chairman, I think this correspondence bears another interpretation than the one put upon it by counsel.

Senator OVERMAN. Does it bear the interpretation that counsel puts upon it?

Mr. FOX. Counsel has asked me a question in respect to it.

Senator OVERMAN. Does it bear the interpretation put upon it by counsel?

Mr. FOX. Yes, I think so; but, as I recall it, there was a constant effort being made naturally by our people, both locally and otherwise, to win friends particularly among important business interests. I think some of this correspondence clearly shows that. The correspondence was opened up with such concerns and a discussion ensued, and a common understanding was reached. I think that that was just as much a motive of it as anything else.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the common understanding—that they would not fight the brewers' interests?

Mr. FOX. In some cases that it was perfectly recognized that their position was sound on local conditions or upon saloons or something of that kind, but that on the question of State-wide or national prohibition they had gone too far.

Senator NELSON. Did you not start the matter by calling them to task for their views on prohibition?

Mr. FOX. I think in most cases, sir.

Senator NELSON. You called their attention to the fact that you regarded them as hostile, and you aimed to convert them. Was that it?

Mr. FOX. I should say in most cases, although I think in some cases they came to me first.

Senator NELSON. Your view is that this whole propaganda was simply moral suasion on the part of the brewers?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

The American Art Works, formerly The Meek Company, of Coshocton, Ohio. This concern manufactures metal signs, and does a large business with brewers. A man named Meek was formerly at the head of it, but was fired out after having shown his sympathy for the prohibition movement. The concern is now in good standing, and has done valuable work for the cause in Ohio, and is strongly endorsed by the Ohio Brewers' Association.

[The above is the only document constituting Exhibit File N.]

For what purpose was that record maintained?

Mr. Fox. I have no recollection of that at all.

Senator NELSON. Maj. Humes, you ought to say that the purpose of that was to give them a clean bill of health.

Maj. HUMES. I was asking for Mr. Fox's interpretation of it.

Mr. Fox. This does not appear to have been sent out in any way. This is an original unsigned document which got into the files.

Mr. Fox. As a matter of information, I should think.

Maj. HUMES. I did not want to misstate it.

Did you ever hear of the Shenango Pottery Co.?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall it.

Mr. FOX. If I was a hotel man and had that information, I should want an explanation and should try to find out.

Maj. HUMES. Your purpose was to get that information, through your membership, to the hotel men?

Mr. FOX. Apparently.

FEBRUARY 21, 1912.

To the members of the United States Brewers' Association.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. James Horton, of Horton's Ice Cream Company, has been elected 2nd Vice-president of the New York Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. James M. Smith of the Shenango Pottery Company of New Castle, Pa., who make hotel china, has been very active in the campaign against licenses.

Mr. M. F. Crass, Superintendent of the Graselli Chemical Company, of New Castle, Beaver Falls and Uniontown, Pa., also assisted the Anti-Saloon League in the no-license campaign.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Crass are said to have been responsible for inducing Billy Sunday to go to New Castle last fall.

Mr. Shumacher, President of the Cumberland Glass Company, of Bridgetown, N. J., is reported to be responsible for keeping Vineland, N. J. "dry," and has been antagonistic to our interests in South Jersey.

Mr. W. C. Leland, of the Cadillac Motor Company is also aggressively antagonistic, and the entire corporation is reported by the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association to be aiding and abetting the Anti-Saloon League.

On October 14th, 1910, we sent out a confidential letter of warning in regard to the Rev. Leonard W. Snyder, "The Boys' Minister." By a misunderstanding, Mr. Snyder recently secured credentials from the Secretary of the Wisconsin Brewers' Association, who write me expressing his regret at the occurrence. Our letter of October 14th, 1910 still stands, therefore.

Very truly yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

Maj. HUMES. I now show you file marked "Exhibit File P," which is the Wanamaker file, from your records.

Mr. FOX. There is not any denunciation in this. There is a perfectly frank statement of certain correspondence that took place between Mr. Wanamaker and a concern named Myers.

Maj. HUMES. That is not the first time that the trade was notified by you in reference to Mr. Wanamaker, was it? That was the last announcement that went to the trade. Then I see an announcement on November 28, 1911, to this effect:

Mr. John Wanamaker has come out in active support of the temperance organizations, and has stated that he means to devote his closing days to the destruction of the saloon.

The purpose of that was to have patronage withheld from Mr. Wanamaker, I take it.

Mr. FOX. The correspondence speaks for itself.

If I have been correctly informed, you may be as unwilling to accept money that has been earned in the liquor traffic as I am to pay it to those who are endeavoring to confiscate the business in which I am engaged.

I have indicated my position in this matter by printing on my checks, "A Check Against Prohibition," many of which have been received by your company in settlement of my charge account with you.

Thanking you in advance for any attention, I remain,

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 17 of February comes before me as I am leaving on the next train for the South.

I thank you for its frankness, but regret its narrowness. You only buy of me what you want and I give you value for it. I think I do you good service.

As in one sense a father to from 10,000 to 14,000 employés, for many years I have suffered and lost so much from employés that killed themselves and ruined their families I could not and can not be in favor [of the use] of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and with nothing but good will to you as a gentleman, I will say that personal [interest] to serve my business can never bribe me to change my principles.

Yours very truly,

DEAR SIR: Enclosed please find copy of an article, which appeared in several New York papers on Nov. 14th.

I call your attention to the same, because several of my friends to whom I have spoken since, never read the article, and I believe an article of this kind, should be called to the attention of every member and that suitable steps should be taken by everybody.

I, personally had no account at the Wanamaker store, but a member of our family had an account there, and upon my request the same was closed, and a letter written to Mr. Wanamaker, giving the reason for doing so.

Yours very truly,

Drinking women are a menace.—Wanamaker.

"A pity that they could not get liquor in a Drug store or a Dry Goods Store" He Adds.

Philadelphia, Nov. 13.—The increasing number of women in this country who are both drinking and smoking in private and public, according to John Wanamaker, is a menace to the nation. He took advantage of "Temperance Day" celebration at the John Chambers Memorial Presbyterian Church last night, to make an impassioned appeal for the total abolition of the liquor traffic.

"I am a republican, and love the old party of Lincoln, Harrison, Grant, Garfield, and McKinley, but I realize that the grand old party cannot be kept up to its standard until it excludes the liquor business.

"It was very difficult for me when I lived in Washington as Postmaster-General to entertain foreign officials without serving them with strong drinks, but none of them ever got anything to drink at my house. I have been a teetotaler since 1877.

"I have never found that I missed anything by not drinking.

"The greatest sorrow of intemperance is that women are now drinking and smoking, not only in private, but in public. It's a sad time when those we consider morally above us are heading for the drunkards grave.

"Isn't it a pity, too, that women can get strong drink in a drug store or dry goods store? They are tempted to buy it there, because nobody will find it out."

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the transactions with reference to the Graselli Chemical Co., at New Castle, Pa.?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall the name at all.

Maj. HUMES. I show you file marked "Exhibit File R." Under date of February 21, 1912, you sent a confidential letter to the membership containing the following:

Mr. M. F. Crass, Superintendent of the Graselli Chemical Company, of New Castle, Beaver Falls and Uniontown, Pa., also assisted the Anti-Saloon League in the no-license campaign.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Crass are said to have been responsible for inducing Billy Sunday to go to New Castle last fall.

You sent out that circular, did you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was there not a question of compelling the Graselli Chemical Co. to discharge Mr. Crass, and was not that one of the subject matters of the correspondence in that case?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it. I shall refresh my memory, but I do not remember even the name. The correspondence I identify. Is it necessary for me to read it all through? There is a greal deal of it.

Maj. HUMES. Can you not discover enough there very promptly to answer in regard to the question of whether the matter of discharging Mr. Crass was one of the things considered?

Mr. FOX. I have not come to that yet.

Maj. HUMES. Nor the securing of a pledge from him as to his future good conduct?

Mr. Fox. Apparently the correspondence indicates some controversy over the facts. Here is a letter that I wrote the Standard Brewing Co., of New Castle, Pa., under date of April 11, 1912:

I am now writing Mr. Gund—

a Cleveland man—

to suggest that he try and get the Graselli Company to secure a letter from Mr. Crass, expressing his regret at his unwarranted action, and stating his belief that he has acted hastily, etc.

Maj. HUMES. And in that same letter you go on to say:

In other words, I think it is worth while, before we let up on the Graselli Company, to try to get the kind of a letter from Mr. Crass that would be helpful to you in the future. We were able to do this in a similar case a year or so ago in New York State. At any rate, it is worth trying!

That was the letter, was it not?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The case in New York State to which you refer was the Solvay Process Co., was it not?

Mr. Fox. I think it is extremely likely. You would have to compare the dates.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, to withdraw the blacklist of this concern you were trying to exact a letter from them that you could use for your propaganda purposes in the future?

Mr. Fox. I have no recollection at all of that.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you were not satisfied with neutrality, but you were even demanding active, open support.

Senator NELSON. Is it that part of the letter that is in controversy?

Maj. HUMES. I think I better read the whole letter so that you can understand it. It is as follows:

APRIL 11, 1912.

Mr. M. FEUCHTWANGER,
Treas. the Standard Brewing Co.,
New Castle, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. FEUCHTWANGER: I appreciate your letter of the 10th inst. very much indeed; not only because of the very clear and complete statement of facts which it contains, but also because of the spirit which you show.

Mr. Gund of the Gund Brewing Co., Cleveland, has suggested to the Graselli Company that they ask their attorney, Mr. Cashman, to call on me when he is in New York, and Mr. Gund states that the Grasselli Chemical Company have called Mr. Crass to Cleveland, and have made him realize the position he has put his firm in.

I am now writing Mr. Gund to suggest that he try and get the Grasselli Company to secure a letter from Mr. Crass, expressing his regret at his unwarranted action, and stating his belief that he has acted hastily, etc. In other words, I think it is worth while, before we let up on the Grasselli Company, to try to get the kind of a letter from Mr. Crass that would be helpful to you in the future. We were able to do this in a similar case a year or so ago in New York State. At any rate, it is worth trying.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

There is another letter on that line that I think is important, and there is also a letter from Mr. Fox, dated April 1, 1912, addressed to Mr. George F. Gund, which I shall read in this connection:

APRIL 1, 1912.

Mr. GEORGE F. GUND,
No. 5 Davenport Street,
Cleveland, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. GUND: I have your letter of March 30th with reference to the Grasselli Chemical Company, and may say for your confidential information that our action was based, primarily, on a complaint sent on December 8, 1911, by a Pennsylvania brewer, whose plant had been closed down because the County Judge had refused all licenses. His action was said to have been influenced by a campaign conducted under the direction of Billy Sunday. The information is in substance as follows: "Mr. James M. Smith, Treasurer of the Shenango Pottery Company has been and is very active in the campaign against licenses. In fact he is the man who induced that (faker) 'Billy Sunday' to come to our city, in this he was assisted very materially by an active Anti-Saloon Leaguist, Mr. F. Crass, Supt. of the Grasselli Chemical Company, who have a chain of plants at New Castle, Beaver Falls, Uniontown and other cities and cater to our Brewers. The results of efforts largely induced the Judge to act as he did. We believe the Brewers should be apprised of these facts in a letter similar to yours of the 28th ult. We ask this of you for the good of our industry."

After receiving this complaint, I took it up with the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, who recommended the action which we took in our circular letter of February 21st, thereby, of course, endorsing the complaint.

I have written to both the brewer who made the complaint and to the Pennsylvania Association to ask them for any further light that they may throw upon the matter, and have informed them that I think we have gained our point, and that it is high time to make friends with the Grasselli Chemical Company.

While the explanation given in the letter of the Company's attorney to you of March 30th, 1912, is very satisfactory as far as it goes, I notice that the Company does not make any promise of using its influence with the Superintendent of its New Castle Plant, and I think it is up to them to give us some assurance in this respect. You must remember that under the Pennsylvania law if the County Judge refuses to grant licenses it not only puts the saloons out of business, but every brewer in the County has to stop manufacturing and selling. It is even worse than Prohibition in its actual effect, so that the complainant has a very real and serious grievance.

Of course you will make it clear to the Grasselli Company that we do not indulge in boycotts, but we think our people are entitled to know who are their friends and who are not, and that if they do not have the active cooperation of men in the allied trades at least such men not directly antagonize them.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

EXTRACT FROM NEW CASTLE (PA.) HERALD OF FEBRUARY 16, 1912.

Maurice Crass, superintendent and general manager of the Grasselli Chemical Company, was the first witness called in the afternoon. Mr. Crass said the difference at the chemical works under no-license is very marked, and has changed the morals of the men in a great degree. The company used to have much trouble on account of drinking among the men, but now it has a force, the witness said, that will compare with the men of any industrial institution.

Mr. Crass said when he came here a few years ago, drunkenness was very common, but now he notices a vast improvement. Business men, he said, found collections much better according to statements made by them.

MARCH 30TH, 1912.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX, Sec'y,
The United States Brewers Ass'n,
109 East 15th St., New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I was requested this morning by Mr. W. T. Cashman, to call at the offices of The Graselli Chemical Co., of this city, whose headquarters are here with branches in many of the larger cities throughout the country.

It seems they received a letter from their manager at New Orleans, of which I herewith enclose you a copy, which please carefully note. I do not know if a circular was issued by our association against this firm as being unfair, at least my attention has not been called to it heretofore; for had it, I certainly would have taken up the matter with you at once.

I have known Mr. C. A. Graselli the president of this company for over twelve years and meet with him as well as other officers of that company very frequently in other business relations. I can assure you that Mr. Grasselli as well as all of the officers here, are as liberal in their views and practice on our subject as you or I are.

You realize this company employs thousands of men and it would not be strange that there may occasionally be one who may be biased or prejudiced against the liquor interest, and act accordingly in a personal capacity; and certainly it would be most unjust under such circumstances, that this firm should suffer in the least.

I would suggest that you at once personally write the brewers of New Orleans explaining the situation, and if a circular was sent that you please correct this and have it mailed to every brewing concern in the country; for you can take my personal assurance that I know fully in this case whereof I speak.

With best wishes,

Yours respectfully,

GEO. F. GUND.

[The Grasselli Chemical Co. Please address your reply to Legal Department.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, March 30, 1912.

GEO. F. GUND, Esq.,
Care The Gund Brewing Co., Cleveland, O.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to our conversation this morning I am herewith enclosing copy of letter received from the Manager of our New Orleans office. For your information would advise that Mr. M. F. Crass is Superintendent of our New Castle, Pa., plant. He is not Superintendent at Beaver Falls, as stated in the letter, and we have no plant at Uniontown.

Mr. Crass states that about two months ago when the question came up regarding the necessity of issuing licenses for the year 1912–1913 the Anti-Saloon League people circulated remonstrances for presentation to the Judge. He was asked to sign one of these remonstrances, which he did, in his personal capacity. Without solicitation or any action on his part, he was subpœnaed by the Court regarding the necessity for granting licenses. During the testimony, and replying to a direct question, he stated that he was Superintendent of the New Castle Plant of The Grasselli Chemical Co. This was the only reference or connection that the company has had in any way with his personal views.

Mr. Crass further states that he is not an officer, nor has he any official connection with the Anti-Saloon League of Lawrence County, nor did he during the past campaign circulate, or have anything to do with the circulating of petitions which were gotten out by the said League.

The Grasselli Chemical Co. had no knowledge of Mr. Crass' personal action in this respect, nor has it at any time officially taken any position in regard to the saloon question.

We have many plants all over the country and selling agencies in all the large cities. Our plant at New Castle employs not more than fifty men, whereas our plants in the larger cities, such as Cleveland, Chicago, and in New Jersey, employ many thousands of men.

We think it is unfair that the Brewer's Association should place our name on the black list because of this personal action of one of the superintendents of our smaller plants. Mr. Crass is not an official of this company.

Will you please take this matter up with Mr. Hugh Fox to the end that our name shall be removed from the black list, especially in the City of New Orleans.

Will you please let me know what has been done, treating this matter as between us, of course, confidentially.

Yours very truly,

THE GRASSELLI CHEMICAL CO.
W. T. CASHMAN, Attorney.

"We have been gradually building up a rather nice business on Anhydrous Ammonia with the local breweries. For some little time our Mr. Harris, who has been working up this trade locally, noticed that for some reason or other this business was beginning to wean itself away from us. It behooved us, therefore, to watch matters very closely and find out why such a condition existed when absolutely no complaint had been made regarding the quality of the Anhydrous Ammonia with which we were supply the breweries.

"The matter has finally been solved and it seems that a boycott has been declared against The Grasselli Chemical Co. because one of our representatives in Pennsylvania affiliated himself with, and in fact is considered a leader of, a prohibition movement in that State and we have been black listed by the Brewer's Association with headquarters at Chicago, Ill., which headquarters are in charge of Mr. Hugh Fox, Secretary.

"The party above referred to as being part and parcel of a prohibition movement is a Mr. M. F. Crass, who we are told is our Superintendent at New Castle, Beaver Falls and Uniontown, Pa. (I did not know that we had a works at Uniontown, Pa.) Just so long as this boycott exists against The Grasselli Chemical Co. we will not get a pound of business from the breweries. This information was given to Harris with a view of assisting us in clearing ourselves, but we are informed that unless we do clear ourselves no brewery who is a member of the Brewer's Association (and we believe all of them are members

[illegible] will favor us with any of its business. You will see, there-
[illegible] against it.'

[illegible] that The Grasselli Chemical Co. of Pa. were not doing business in [illegible] and that we certainly felt that we were being discriminated [illegible] matter because one of the employes of The Grasselli Chemical [illegible] was leader of a prohibition movement.

[illegible] that it was absolutely necessary that something be done by [illegible] to protect themselves and that there were millions of dollars in-[illegible] in this country and that this prohibition movement had cost [illegible] worlds of money and on this account certainly something should [illegible] encourage the movement.

[illegible] with this party in all he said but still maintained that a cor-[illegible] should not be held liable for the personal views of one of its employes; [illegible] neither knew, nor had we ever heard of Mr. M. F. Crass, and [illegible] by no means concerned in his personal views.

[illegible] know what you propose doing about this, but the facts are as [illegible] above and it is certainly going to materially decrease our present [illegible] Anhydrous Ammonia in this field and cut us out of the brewery [illegible] business entirely.

As I understand it, the matter would have to be taken up with Mr. Hugh [illegible] Secretary of the Brewer's Association at Chicago. I am of the opinion [illegible] party were personally approached and informed that Mr. M. F. [illegible] had nothing at all to do with the management of this company and was [illegible] employee that perhaps this would arrange matters. It may be that [illegible] looked upon as an officer of the company."

MY DEAR MR. FEUCHTWANGER: I enclose for your consideration correspondence received from the Gund Brewing Company, of Cleveland, regarding the [illegible] Chemical Company. Before replying thereto, I should like to have your comments on the correspondence. Of course, you will understand that it is not our intention to be in any way vindictive. We must always be absolutely fair in such matters. After all, when an offender shows a proper spirit of regret for past occurrences and expresses a desire to cooperate in the future, we feel that we have gained our point and that it is time to make friends.

NEW CASTLE, PA., April 10, 1912.

"CONFIDENTIAL."

HUGH F. FOX, Esq.,
Sec'y U. S. Brewers' Assn.,
109 E. 15th St., New York.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Yours of the 1st inst. handed to me on my return from Chicago. Replying would say that in just one thing in this whole matter we may possibly be wrong, viz. that Mr. M. F. Crass is not an officer in the Gaselli Chemical Co., and this we do not know. We at no time try to be vindictive, just the contrary, often times too lenient. This man represents himself as being in full control of the Gaselli Chemical Co. here, and when his concern located here and were ready for the Assessors, the plant was assessed at $70,000.00. Having a friendly feeling for any new manufacturing concern locating in our city, especially so, as it was close to our plant, and in going back and forth each day on the cars with Mr. Crass became acquainted with him, who stated the above fact regarding the assessment to me. I at once took the matter up with our President, Mr. Geo. W. Lamoree, who said let us see what can be done for him. At once we called upon the then Chairman of the Board of Appeals, Mr. Thos. Dickson, (now Chairman of Select Council,) who agreed to reduce the above to $50,000.00 to please us, notwithstanding he had expressed his antagonism to our business at that time.

Shortly thereafter he took up with the Billy Sunday movement and remained one of his staunch supporters, and even to this day assists in revival meetings and visits neighboring cities in behalf of the Personal Workers League. At our last license court, he being identified with the Anti-Saloon League, was subpœnaed to appear as a remonstrating manufacturing concern, as against such petitioners for, as the general managers of the Carnegie Steel Co., American Tin Plate Co., the furnaces and Stove Manufacturers, these combined employing about 11,000 men, as against Mr. Crass' concern of 50 or 60 men. When on the stand he stated he was against the granting of licenses anywhere and the morality of the business. We took the pains of clipping from one of our papers of Feb'y 16, 1912, his statement, herewith enclosed, which explains itself. We know he did not circulate remonstrances, but we know from experience that the men back of a movement of this kind never do, but always employ some weaklings for this purpose. Had he kept his concern out of it we might have taken a different view. He is a dangerous man for the Brewing and Distilling interests, and if the Gaselli Chemical Co., in sincere with our interests they ought to place Mr. Crass where they could control such actions. This is a sad condition and more than a purely local affair and to show that we, like all brewers, always aim to be fair, and considering to Gaselli Chemical Co. to show the proper spirit, with the Associations permission, withdraw our objection and place them again amongst our friends.

We set out these facts to you fully in explanation of our action and hope to the satisfaction of the Association.

Very truly yours,

Mr. GEORGE F. GUND,
The Gund Brewing Co.,
Cleveland, Ohio.,

MY DEAR MR. GUND: I enclose copy of confidential letter from the treasurer of the Standard Brewing Company of New Castle, together with an extract from the New Castle Herald of Feb. 16th, 1912, which confirms what he says. Do you not think that the Grasselli Chemical Company might get a letter from Mr. Crass, which would express his regret at his unwarranted action, etc.? I enclose by way of suggestion, copy of a letter which was written under similar circumstances.

I appreciate very much the assistance you have given in this matter, and the trouble you have taken, and hate to ask you to go to any further trouble. However, the matter may have far-reaching value, and I think that it would be worth while to let the Grasselli Company know just what our New Castle people say. Of course, as their letter is confidential, we cannot send a copy of it to the Grasselli Company.

I shall be very glad indeed to meet Mr. Cashman at any time.

P. S.—By the way, the letter from Mr. Crass should not merely express his regret in embarrassing his firm, but if possible, should indicate the change of heart, based on a more careful study of the situation, which would indicate that he had become converted to more reasonable views, because of his broader study of the whole license question.

Yours very truly,

Mr. M. FEUCHTWANGER, Treas.,
The Standard Brewing Co.,
New Castle, Pa.,

MY DEAR MR. FEUCHTWANGER: I appreciate your letter of the 10th inst., very much indeed: not only because of the very clear and complete statement of facts which it contains, but also because of the spirit which you show.

Mr. Gund of the Gund Brewing Co., Cleveland, has suggested to the Grasselli Company that they ask their attorney, Mr. Cashman, to call on me when he is in New York, and Mr. Gund, states that the Grasselli Chemical Company have called Mr. Crass to Cleveland, and have made him realize the position he has put his firm in.

I am now writing to Mr. Gund to suggest that he try and get the Grasselli Company to secure a letter from Mr. Crass, expressing his regret at his unwarranted action, and stating his belief that he has acted hastily, etc. In other words, I think it is worth while, before we let up on the Grasselli Company, to try to get the kind of a letter from Mr. Crass that would be helpful to you in the future. We were able to do this in a similar case a year or so ago in New York State. At any rate, it is worth trying!

Yours very truly,

HFF/ED. Secretary.

APRIL 12, 1912.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association.

GENTLEMEN: This is to inform you that the Grasselli Chemical Company, having had their attention called to the matter mentioned in our circular letter of February 21, 1912, have acted promptly and vigorously, and that we are entirely satisfied as to their friendly attitude, and their desire to co-operate in matters of mutual interest.

We feel that, under the circumstances, they are entitled to the consideration of the brewers of the United States.

Very truly yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

Mr. M. FEUCHTWANGER,
Treas., The Standard Brewing Co., New Castle, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I enclose copy of my letter of to-day to Mr. Gund which explains itself. Mr. Crass has been hauled over the coals most effectively, and there will be no further trouble from him or any of his associates. At the same time, I hope that he may be made to write the kind of a letter that will be helpful to you in the future!

Mr. GEO. F. GUND,
The Gund Brewing Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. GUND: I have had a very satisfactory interview with Mr. Grant, who is one of the Directors of the Grasselli Chemical Company, and am sending out a letter to the brewers of the United States which will adjust the difficulty. I have suggested to Mr. Grant that they should not make a martyr of Mr. Crass, but should seek rather to make a convert of him, so that after he has "seen the light" he may express himself accordingly.

Thanking you for your trouble in the matter, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Secretary.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember any trouble about the Cumberland Glass Co.?

Mr. Fox. Yes, I recall that.

Maj. HUMES. Tell us about that.

Mr. Fox. I do not recall the details. I remember that there was a discussion there and that I had a visit from one of the partners, and that there was some correspondence.

Maj. HUMES. They succeeded in adjusting that matter by joining the local manufacturers and merchants' association and contributing to the support of your organization, did they not? I do not want to take the time to read that. I think you can refresh your recollection in a moment. I show you the file marked "Exhibit File S."

Mr. Fox. That is my recollection. I know it was a concern doing a very large business with brewers in beer bottles.

Maj. HUMES. And they were forced into the manufacturers and dealers' association, or at least persuaded to join it?

Mr. Fox. My recollection is there was a dispute between the two brothers, one of whom was strongly with us and the other against us.

Maj. HUMES. And finally upon the death of the brother who was against you, you got the matter arranged?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall that. I know that it was arranged.

Maj. HUMES. You remember that he died, also, do you not?

Mr. Fox. I have forgotten that.

LEHIGH VALLEY BREWERS ASSOCIATION,
Allentown, Pa., January 11, 1912.

Mr. HUGH E. FOX,
Sec'y, U. S. Brewers Association, 109–111 E. 15th St., New York City.

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of enclosing you herewith a number of newspaper clippings, the purport of which will appear on their perusal.

They come from Bridgeton, N. J., and were sent us by personal friends who insist that the facts are true.

Bridgeton, as you no doubt are well aware, is the home of the Cumberland Glass Mfg. Company, large makers of bottles for the distilled and malt liquor trade, and particularly largely patronized by brewers.

Our information is to the effect that the officers of this concern are rabid Prohibitionists and Local Optionists, have been largely responsible for making Bridgeton "dry" and keeping it so, and that they have fought the liberal minded people of the community who desire license, and all this in the face of the fact that they are drawing their business largely from those whose interests they persistently oppose. It is asserted that nine tenths of the ware manufactured in the town is used by the business they are so bitterly fighting.

Furthermore, it is rather surprising for us to be informed that Mr. Jacob Rupert, a high official of your Association is the best patron these people have. That he has placed an order for no less than 70,000 gross of bottles with them! While this is Mr. Rupert's own business, it is nevertheless discouraging to think and know that he is indirectly aiding and abetting those who are constantly opposing our interests and the interests of his associates.

We submit these clippings and these statements to you, and respectfully request you to verify them. If they be true, it is difficult to understand why the brewers should not give these manufacturers of bottles the wide berth they deserve.

We have noted with pleasure, from the circulars, letters, and other literature sent out by you, that you have paid particular attention to such offenders all over the country, who furnish brewery and bottling supplies. This is most laudable, and we believe an effective weapon that should be continued, and therefore ask that like wide attention be given Bridgeton, if these facts are substantiated. Level your shafts at Bridgeton and shoot hard, as you so well know how to do.

Trusting that you will go into this matter thoroughly and give it the attention and treatment the truth warrants, we remain,

Yours truly,

LEHIGH VALLEY BREWERS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. FRED H. HORLACHER,

MY DEAR MR. HORLACHER: I enclose copy of our circular letter of February 21st from which you will note that I have referred to Mr. Schumacher, the President of the Cumberland Glass Company, as being antagonistic to our interests. You wrote me on January 11th about this, and your information was substantiated by the N. J. State Brewers' Association. However, Mr. Rudolph J. Schaefer, President of the N. Y. State Brewers' Association, informs me that a representative of the Cumberland Glass Company has called on him for an order, and absolutely denies the statements made and declares that Mr. Schumacher, the President of the Cumberland Glass Company, is interested in a hotel in Bridgton, N. J., and is an advocate of license.

The matter is one which has assumed much importance, and I wish you would be kind enough to go into it further and let me know what you can learn. Would it be possible for you to send somebody from your Association to Bridgton to make a first-hand investigation?

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
Sec'y, U. S. Brewers Association, 109–111 E. 15th St., New York City.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of February 24, relative to the position of Mr. Schumacher, President of the Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co., and his antagonism to our interests, the letter being an answer to my letter to you in which his case was reported to you, bearing date of January 11, 1912.

The substantiation of the charge by the N. J. Brewers Association, who are presumed to know the actual facts, would seem to be quite sufficient, for they are in a position to know, by reason not only of their proximity to Mr. Schumacher, but the continued agitation of the Local Option question before the N. J. State Legislature, where our associates have battled against the efforts of the Anti-Saloon League, for years. However, you evidently desire to be just to every man and to do no man harm without cause, and hence your desire for further information.

While we shall endeavor to go into the matter further and do what we can to throw further light on the position of Mr. Schumacher, we feel that the quickest and surest way to get at the truth is for you to address a letter, asking for the facts, to Mr. William Haggerty, % of the Williamstown Glass Co., Bridgeton, N. J., who is in a position to know all about it, being on the ground.

We thank you for your circular letter bearing like information on other offenders of the same stripe, and believe that you are doing most valuable service in spreading such information broadcast among the trade.

Thanking you for your attention paid to this matter, we remain,

Yours truly,

Mr. JACOB RUPPERT, JR.,
90th St. & 3rd Ave., City.

DEAR SIR: I have your valued favor of the 23rd inst., and in reply would say I presume it was a typographical error in naming Burlington County, N. J., as I live in Cumberland County and have no interest whatsoever in Burlington County, but I know for a fact that all of the hotels in Burlington, N. J., are licensed.

Regarding my home County (Cumberland), would say the fact of it going dry last Fall was in no way due to my influence or efforts as stated to you personally by me at our last conference. In fact, I personally advocated license, and am at the present time endorser on a note of Isaac L. Stetser, Bridgeton, N. J., who is one of the proprietors of the Commercial Hotel at Bridgeton, N. J., which can be verified by him and also by Senator B. H. Minch who holds the note in question, and if I had not felt reasonably certain that license would have been granted in our County last Fall, I most assuredly would not have assumed the responsibility of endorsing the said note for the above party.

I cannot possibly understand why the report as stated to you was sent to Mr. H. H. Fox, Sec'y of the U. S. Brewers Asso., unless it was by an unknown enemy who is desirous of injurying our pleasant relations with your Company. I have written Mr. H. H. Fox as requested by you and herewith enclose copy of my letter to him.

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of a letter from Colonel Jacob Ruppert under date of the 23rd inst., copy of which I inclose, and am also enclosing copy of my letter to him under even date which explains itself. If you would like to have an interview with me on this subject I will be glad to have a conference with you at any time and place to suit your convenience, and feel reasonably certain that I can establish the fact that I was in no way whatever interested in Cumberland County going dry last Fall, but am fully convinced that I do know the cause, and that was on account of the fact that there is approximately sixteen social clubs in Bridgeton, Cumberland County, N. J., and have been informed that the members of these clubs were very much opposed to license being granted, and have likewise been informed that they voted against license last Fall, owing to the fact that if license was granted it would seriously effect the revenue of their clubs. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind but what the license element would have carried a majority of votes at the election last Fall if they could have succeeded in having the licenses of the social clubs revoked, thereby closing them up, about three months in advance of election. Three years ago Bridgeton went no license by thirty-seven votes and last Fall the temperance element carried Bridgeton by a majority of about 400 votes, and if you will write Isaac L. Stetser or John Kinkle at Bridgeton, N. J., who are the present owners of the Commercial Hotel I feel very positive that they will confirm my statement.

With kind regards, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

RES R. E. SHOEMAKER.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the situation at Bridgeton, would say that I met the mutual friend referred to in my previous letter—W. F. H., who supplied me with the facts as represented to you.

Having read the exchange of letters between Mr. Schoemaker and Mr. Rupert I talked the matter over again, and he has made a positive statement to me that the President of the Cumberland Glass Company was in open opposition and that it was well known in Bridgeton.

The situation as represented by Mr. Shoemaker with reference to the number of social clubs and the influence they exert, accords with a statement furnished to me by Mr. Stetser of the Commercial Hotel.

I am satisfied that in making the statement to me, W. F. H. was not doing so as an interested party, nor with any thought of gaining an advantage.

Do you think it would be of any particular use for me to send someone to Bridgeton on this matter?

Respectfully yours,

Re Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Ass'n.

GENTLEMEN:—In our confidential circular of February 21st, we stated that it was reported that the President of the Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Company had been antagonistic to our interests in South Jersey.

This is to say that Mr. R. E. Shoemaker, the President of the Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Company, has called on me. He informs me that h has personally advocated license, and is interested in the Commercial Hotel at Bridgeton, N. J., which town went dry last fall owing to the activity of sixteen social clubs, whose revenue, would be seriously affected if licenses were granted.

It seems that some fifteen years ago his brother, Mr. C. E. Shoemaker, was opposed to the Company's manufacturing bottles for the liquor business, but that he was overruled and has since had a change of heart and is now in favor of the license system.

Mr. R. E. Shoemaker showed his good faith by appearing at the recent Hearing in Trenton in opposition to the Local Option Bill; and I am satisfied that the Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Company can now be counted on to befriend our interests.

In view of this explanation and the promise which Mr. Shoemaker has made as to co-operation in the future, the Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Company would seem to be entitled to the consideration of the brewing trade.

Very truly yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

DEAR SIR: Your circular letter of the 12th instant has been referred to the writer upon his return from a short absence, and in reply would say we also received a letter from the National Association of Commerce and Labor, of Chicago, Illinois, advising us that they had made an arrangement with the Western bottle manufacturers that were members of their Association, to pay an assessment of one cent per gross on all beer bottles furnished the brewing interest by them, but no arrange had yet been consummated with the manufacturers in the East.

You doubtless are aware of the fact that we are members of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association of New York City, who are closely allied with the National Association of Commerce and Labor, and we stand ready to co-operate with these Associations as soon as they complete their arrangements with the Eastern bottle manufacturers.

Member of Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, National Headquarters, Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

[From Andreae's files by subpœna.]

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever resort to any methods other than notifying the trade where there were concerns that did not deal directly with the trade, in your effort to force obedience of manufacturers to your mandate?

Mr. FOX. You will have to refresh my memory if anything of that kind occurred.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever undertake to cause labor trouble for a concern that you could not reach in any other way?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I show you the file marked "Exhibit File T." Do you remember the Nichols Copper Co.? Did you ever hear of that concern?

Mr. FOX. I do not recollect.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know a man named Ernest Bohm?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who is he?

Mr. FOX. Mr. Bohm is, I think, secretary of the Central—what do they call it—one of the Federation of Labor organizations in New York City—the Central Council, I think they call it.

Maj. HUMES. Was he ever employed or retained by you or your association?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Was his service ever utilized by you for any purpose?

Mr. FOX. I think it is extremely likely, but I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. In what particulars have you availed yourselves of his services?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. Didn't you have a conference and correspondence with him in an effort to cause labor trouble for the Nichols Copper Co. because you could not reach them in any other way?

Mr. FOX. I have absolutely no recollection of it.

Maj. HUMES. I wish you to refresh your recollection by examining the Exhibit File T and then answer the question.

Mr. FOX. I had entirely forgotten this entire transaction, and I shall have to rely upon the correspondence. [After further examination.] The correspondence to my mind shows this, that complaint was sent in by a brewery in Brooklyn with regard to the action of the Nichols Copper Co. or with regard to their attitude toward their men.

Senator OVERMAN. In what respect—in regard to prohibition?

Mr. FOX. The rules which they laid down. Here is a circular which apparently was issued by this company on beer and liquors. That circular goes on to state:

The State law says if an employee has been drinking and he is injured, the company does not have to pay him money.

The company has found that men who drink are injured much more than men who do not drink liquor.

Beginning February first (Monday) at 7 a. m. and thereafter, no beer, wine, spirits, or alcoholic drinks of any kind will be allowed to be brought into the works of the Nichols Copper Company.

Any employee having such in his possession in the plant will be dismissed immediately without notice.

All shift men in smelter, power, casing, or other department—that is, men who work eight house (hours) will not leave their work for lunch during work house (hours). If they wish lunch they will bring it with them when they come to work and eat it during spare minutes while working.

The rest of the correspondence shows that this was brought to our attention and that we endeavored, or that Mr. Bohm was asked to get information for us, and his letter is as follows:

N. Y. SEPT. 20th/15.

Confidential

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,

MY DEAR SIR: In re Nichols Co. here is the information. They employ about 2,800 Italians, Poles, Huns Slavs, are a non-union concern and manufacture copper bilots which they sell to coppersmiths, rolling mills and etc.

I have taken the matter up with the different trades and we are going after them hot footed. Will give you the information as the fight progresses. I also collared the circular they issued and gave the contents to the press.

Yours,

ERNEST BOHM.

From that it appears that it bears the inference that we tried to get the matter straightened out.

Senator NELSON. Is there any one of the letters directly upon the question?

Maj. HUMES. Not directly. This file contains the newspaper clipping that is referred to by Mr. Bohm.

(The documents in the file referred to are here printed in full in the record as follows:)

EXHIBIT FILE T–2.

BEER AND LIQUORS.

The State Law says if an employee has been drinking and he is injured, the Company does not have to pay him money.

The Company has found that men who drank are injured much more than men who do not drink liquor.

Beginning February 1st, (Monday) at 7 a. m. and thereafter no beer, wine, spirits or alcoholic drinks of any kind will be allowed to be brought into the works of the NICHOLS COPPER CO.

Any employee having such in his possession in the plant will be dismissed immediately without notice.

All shift men in Smelter, Power, Casing or other departments—that is, men who work 8 house, will not leave their work for lunch during work house. If they wish lunch they will bring it with them when they come to work and eat it during spare minutes while working.

The 9-hour day men can leave the works between 12 noon and 12.30 for lunch if their homes are near enough so they can get back to work in half an hour.

If 9-hour day men who leave works between 12 and 12.30 noon, go to saloons for lunch, we will assume they buy beer and they will be discharged without notice.

For every 100 men injured, the following table shows the number injured each period of 3 hours:

	Men.
Between 7 a. m. and 10 a. m	30
Between 10 a. m. and 1 p. m	16
Between 1 p. m. and 4 p. m	36
Between 4 p. m. and 7 p. m	5
Between 7 p. m. and 10 p. m	7
Between 10 p. m. and 1 a. m	4
Between 1 a. m. and 4 a. m	2
Between 4 a. m. and 7 a. m	0
Total	100

This is, after men come to work at 7 a. m. there are more injured, also after men come to work at 12.30 there are more men injured.

For this reason any employee who gives evidence of having drank liquor before coming to work either by his actions, his way of speaking, or his breath, will be discharged without notice.

Heads of departments and watchmen are instructed to discharge all men instantly for any of the above reasons.

The Company believes that the abolition of liquor will be for the best interests not only for the Company but for the employees.

It is suggested that all employees take this circular home and read it to their wives and ask their wives if they do not think these are very good rules for everybody.

GENTLEMEN:—Enclosed we hand you copy of the rules and regulations as formulated by the Nichols Copper Co., Laurel Hill, Queens Co., Long Island, which concern we are informed, employ about eleven hundred men.

Since these rules as laid down by this concern are a detriment to our business and mutual interests, it was the sense of our meeting to forward this copy to you for any action your esteemed Association deem fit to take.

Very truly yours,

DEAR SIR: This is to acknowledge your favor of the 10th inst., regarding the Nichols Copper Co. of Laurel Hill, L. I. I find on inquiry that this company does no business with brewers, and is not a union plant, so that it is not clear what we can do in the matter.

Thanking you for the information, I am,

[New York Call, February 22, 1915.]

NICHOLS COPPER CO. FORBIDS MEN GOING OUT TO EAT; SNATCH BITES DURING WORK.

Exploitation as a fine art has been mastered to perfection by the Nichols Copper Co., Laurel Hill, L. I., which employs about 2,800 workers. The latest ukase it has issued decrees that the "shift men" are forbidden to leave the plant for lunch during the eight hours of their work. In a burst of touching generosity the company adds that "if the workers wish lunch they will bring it with them when they come to work and EAT IT DURING SPARE MINUTES WHILE WORKING."

This order was issued in connection with a circular forbidding the workers to drink beer or any kind of liquor in or out of the plant under pain of instant dismissal. Those employes working nine hours a day are to be permitted to go home for lunch—time allowed being thirty minutes—"if their homes are near enough so they can get back to work in half an hour."

If nine-hour day men go to a saloon for lunch, the circular posted in the factory continues, "we will assume that they buy beer, and they will be discharged without notice."

No court in the land has ever dared to interfere in a like manner with the freedom of a man. When workers tried to get through the legislature a bill limiting the hours of certain employes, the court objected to allowing a clause to stand providing for a certain closing hour for mercantile establishments, holding that the fourteenth constitutional amendment guaranteed every man the right to do as he pleased so long as public welfare was not endangered.

Yet the Nichols Copper Co. has taken it upon itself to subject its workers to a condition of slavery and bondage which the Civil War is supposed to have abolished.

[United States Brewers' Association, 50 Union Square, New York.]

NEW YORK, February 27, 1915.

CONFIDENTIAL.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN:—The following is submitted for the information of our members:

* * * * * * *

NICHOLS COPPER CO., LAUREL HILL, QUEENS COUNTY, N. Y.

This company employs over 2,000 men, and is a non-union concern. It manufactures copper billets which are sold to coppersmiths, rolling-mills, etc. The company has issued a circular to its men, notifying them that "all shift men in Smelter, Power, Casing or other departments—that is, men who work eight hours, will not leave their work for lunch during work hours. If they wish lunch they will bring it with them when they come to work and eat it during spare minutes while working. The nine-hour men can leave the works between 12 noon and 12:30 for lunch, if their homes are near enough so they can get back to work in half an hour. If nine-hour day men who leave works between 12 and 12:30 noon go to saloons for lunch, we will assume that they buy beer and they will be discharged without notice. If any employee gives evidence of having drunk liquor before coming to work either by his actions, his way of speaking or his breath, he will be discharged without notice."

The company declares that it has found that "men who drink liquor are injured much more than the men who do not drink."

Yours very truly.

CONFIDENTIAL.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX.

MY DEAR SIR. In re Nicols Co here is the information:

They employ about 2800 italians, poles, huns, slavs, are a non-union concern and manufacture copper bilots which they sell to coppersmiths, rolling mills and etc.

I have taken the matter up with the different trades and we are going after them hot footed. Will give you the information as the fight progresses. I also collared the circular they issued and gave the contents to the press.

Yours,

ERNEST BOHM.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bohm was apparently employed by you to look this thing up.

Mr. FOX. He was certainly employed to get information. I do not know whether he was employed for anything else.

Senator OVERMAN. He said that he was employed to go after them.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Ernest Bohm was treasurer of Labor's Peace Council and associated with David Lamar and Frank Buchanan, an organization that it has been clearly established by the courts was financed by the German Government and in connection with which those who have been indicted have also been convicted and repudiated by the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. FOX. I do not know, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that is a fact?

Mr. FOX. I remember something in the papers about it, but it is very vague. I knew this man Bohn very casually.

Maj. HUMES. Is he still employed by you from time to time?

Mr. FOX. I do not think we have employed him for a long time.

Maj. HUMES. Well, how long?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall. I do not think I ever actually employed him. I think I may have given him a $20 bill occasionally to get us a piece of information; but his relation, if he has any, would be with the local people.

Senator NELSON. He has been engaged in peace work?

Mr. FOX. I should think so. But he is still the secretary of this Central Federated Labor Union in New York, and his relations naturally would be with them and not with me.

Maj. HUMES. Did this correspondence occur during the time of the existence of Labor's Peace Council?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I do not know whether the dates synchronize or not. I do not know the date of the peace council or the date of the other thing.

Maj. HUMES. I think, from recollection, it is only fair to say that since that time Mr. Bohn himself has repudiated the Labor's Peace Council.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Since that time?

Mr. FOX. I am perfectly sure he could not hold his present job if he had not. How it was brought about, I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Because it was on the record I wanted to make that statement, in fairness.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember your transactions with the Goodyear Rubber Company?

Mr. BOWEN. I remember that we——

Maj. HUMES. You had a lot of trouble there, did you not?

Mr. FOX. We had a lot of trouble there; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you finally forced them into line, or what you considered sufficiently into line?

Senator OVERMAN. You persuaded them?

Mr. FOX. I do not know whether we fought them into line, but I think they got into line.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and the president of the company came down to New York to confer with you, did he not, to get the matter fixed up?

Mr. Fox. My recollection is that the Goodyear Rubber Co. practically tried to make me their salesman.

Maj. HUMES. Well, it was necessary because of the information that your association had given to the trade, after the differences were largely adjusted—it was necessary for them to come to you to get a letter to each individual brewer that they tried to sell tires to, before brewers' bureau would purchase them?

Mr. Fox. I do not know whether it was necessary, but I know they tried to do it, and I was good-natured enough to help.

Maj. HUMES. Is not the reason you pursued that course in that case because you were trying to force them—before you would send out a general circular to the trade you were trying to get them—to openly indorse your activities and to go on record in support of your cause, rather than to maintain an opposition or neutrality?

Mr. Fox. I think I certainly tried to win their friendship.

Maj. HUMES. And you got them to the point where they agreed to maintain neutrality on the question?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. But you declined to notify the trade of their neutrality, but said to them that you would help them out with individual brewers that they might want to come in contact with?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And in the meantime you were trying to force them to commit themselves to the wet issue and to support the Ohio State Brewers' Association: is not that a fact?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall it. The correspondence will no doubt bear it out.

Maj. HUMES. Day after day they wrote to you and asked you to write a letter to some individual brewer to say that they had adjusted their differences, and each time asking you if you would not send out a general circular, or give general notice to the trade?

Mr. Fox (after examining File K-2). I identify all this correspondence, and I have no doubt that what you state is correct, but I——

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you do not want to take issue on that proposition.

Mr. Fox. I do not want to take issue on that: no, sir.

CHICAGO, January 2nd, 1915.

DEAR SIR: We understand that Ernest Deibel of the Renner Brg. Co., Akron Ohio, is going to make complaint to you in regard to the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of that city as being unfair to our side.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of that city are members of this Association, and from that standpoint we must defend them and must consider them in the right until proven wrong. They report to us that they are accused of sending out Dry editorials in their official organ, and that they posted notices throughout their works asking their men to vote for the Drys. They explain as follows:—

"That their official organ had always been censured by their Superintendent. The editor was a young man who was a member of the Y. M. C. A., and this particular Issue and the only one as they claim, had an article written by this young man asking the employees to vote for the Drys. The paper was taken to the Superintendent and as he was so busy with big orders, he said to the young man, "Now you know what we want and what we don't want, is the paper all right? the young man answered yes." The article appeared and as soon as it was discovered, the young man was discharged right then and there. The Company says they will prove that there was no notices put up in their works at any time. They further claim that they had a banquet where wine was served. They also claim that they have $30,000 invested in special machinery for making Hose for Breweries, they cite that as an illustration how foolish they would be to do anything against their own interests."

Now before you accept anything from the Renner Brg. Co., as facts, we want you to investigate and give the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. a fair trial, and if they are guilty, we will not uphold them; at that, the Renner Brg. Co. may be perfectly right, as they are really on the grounds and know the case better than we do, but at the same time we are duty bound to defend our members, which we insist upon doing, and will fight for them just as much as we are fighting Prohibition. Please give this your immediate attention.

On the 16th of this month we are going to have a Grand Get Together Meeting with all of the principal women of Chicago at the Congress Hotel.

Mrs. Trout, Mrs. Treadwell, and Mrs. Zimmerman, the leading women in Suffrage and Club work are going to speak for us, what do you think of that for good work?

Yours very truly,

CONFIDENTIAL.

Mr. WILLIAM F. HESS,
22 Garfield Place, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. HESS: Thanks for your letter of the 20th regarding the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company. Their Assistant Secretary explained that "The Wingfoot Clan" was run by the employees, and until the article "Home Rule & Prohibition" appeared, no attempt had been made by the company to supervise it. This is now being done, and he assures me that no such break will be made again.

He admitted that the President of the company had contributed $100 to the Anti-saloon League of Akron, but declares that this contribution was made in the usual careless way in which a man of affairs responds to appeals that come from business associates, and assures that it has no real significance, and that the very man who made the contribution voted "wet."

This, of course, you can take for what it is worth, but the question is whether the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company is not now in such a chastened mood, that its support might easily be obtained provided you think that the company is of sufficient importance from the Ohio viewpoint.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

FEB. 8, 1915.

Mr. WILLIAM F. HESS,
22 Garfield Place, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. HESS: May I refer again to my letter of Jan. 22nd in regard to the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company? I have received several letters from our members regarding the matter, and requesting information as to what action will be taken upon it. Apparently the article from "The Wingfoot Clan" of October 17, 1914, has been reproduced and mailed to them. I judge that in some parts of the country the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company has friends among our members.

I am inclined to think that it is unwise to demand that the man who wrote the article should be discharged. If the Company, through its President, would make a satisfactory statement regarding the prohibition question, and other matters of special interest to you in Ohio, it should absolve them from further opposition. Can you handle this, or would you prefer that we write direct to the Company; or do you think we had better let the matter rest entirely?

I shall appreciate your suggestions and co-operation.

Yours sincerely,

HFF/W.

Secretary.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY,
Akron, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1915.

GMS/EG

GENERAL LETTER NO. 4064.

To Branch Managers,
District Managers,
Motor Truck Salesmen,
Department Managers.

A situation grew out of the State Election in Ohio last fall which our salesmen who call upon the brewers and liquor trade are apt to encounter.

The pre-election campaign was a bitter one, and a great deal of feeling developed among the campaigners on both sides. The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. have been charged with having supported the Prohibition side of the campaign in a number of ways, and a movement has been started with the intention of restricting the sale of Goodyear products to the liquor trade.

In order that our Organization may be able to handle any charge or misrepresentation against this company as a result of this campaign, we give you the following fcts: It has been charged:

(1) That an editorial appeared in the "Wingfoot Clan" issue of Oct. 17, 1914, urging Goodyear factory employees to vote for prohibition.

Answer: The "Wingfoot Clan" is a publication issued by the Labor Department of our factory organization for the purpose of distributing factory news among employees and promoting good will among factory workers. It is not supposed to deal with political, religious, racial, or sociological problems, which would be outside its province. Nor is it supposed to express opinions on subjects which might be offensive to any industry with whom we are doing business. Up to this time the Company has not thought it necessary to exercise censorship on the articles written. From now on a strict censorship has been put into effect on this organ to the end that nothing offensive to any industry with whom we may be doing business shall appear. It is true that the editorial referred to did appear, but it in no way represented the views of the corporation.

(2) That a week later a similar communication appeared in the "Wingfoot Clan".

Answer: The answer to this charge would be the same as that above.

(3) That Mr. F. A. Seiberling, President of this Company, did personally contribute $100 toward the expenses of the prohibition campaign.

Answer: This is true. Mr. Seiberling was solicited along with all of the influential men of Akron, and he did make a contribution of $100. A contribution for a similar amount was made by the officers of two other rubber companies of Akron. You can well appreciate that if Mr. Seiberling had been in full accord with the Dry Movement this contribution would in all probability have been nearer $10,000 than $100. Mr. Seiberling was well within his personal rights and in making this contribution he had no thought other than it was a personal matter and did not reflect the views of the corporation in the campaign that was then on.

(4) That at the time of the Convention held in Akron, Goodyear salesmen paraded the streets with "dry" buttons.

Answer: This is absolutely untrue as every salesman knows who attended the convention and banquet.

(5) That during the campaign the factory and general offices of the company in Akron were placarded with signs urging employees to vote "dry."

Answer: This is absolutely untrue.

In contradiction to the general charge that this company is unfair to the liquor interests, we beg to state that we have been contributing an amount equal to One Per cent of all invoices for materials sold by this company to the brewery trade, which went to a fund to combat National Prohibition Movement. We are also members of the Manufacturers and Dealers' Association having headquarters in Chicago, composed of manufacturers of various kinds who sell to brewers and similar institutions.

These are the facts and you are privileged to show this statement to anyone who questions our position and intentions in the matter.

In every organization men's personal opinions differ and men have a right to their principles and personal beliefs, but it must be apparent to anyone that this Company as a business institution could not and would not knowingly align itself in a partisan way against the interests of an industry as large as the liquor business, with whom it has enjoyed such substantial and pleasant business relations.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Referring further to our letter of February 11th, in reply to your letter of February 8th, concerning the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, our latest advice is that the President and Secretary are broad enough to be liberal, and it is believed that they have heard from enough quarters of their position that they will be very careful as to the action of their Company in the future. This advice is coupled with the further information that the majority of the directors of their board are dry. It is also stated that there is no foundation for the rumor that posters were placed about their factory advising the men to vote dry.

Under the circumstances, I would suggest that the matter be left at rest until arise further developments.

Yours very truly,

WM. F. HESS, Sec'y-Treas.

FEB. 17, 1915.

Mr. H. J. PARKER,
Secy., Manufacturers & Dealers League, New York.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 15th inst., the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company publishes a sort of house organ called "The Wingfoot Clan," which, until recently, was run by its employees. On Oct. 17, 1914 an article appeared strongly favoring prohibition. The Assistant Secretary of the Company called on me a short time ago to explain that until this article appeared no attempt had been made by the company to supervise the publication, but this is now being done, and he assured me that no such break would be made again. He admitted that the President of the company had contributed $100 to the Anti-Saloon League, but declared that this contribution was made in the usual careless way in which a man of affairs responds to appeals from business associates, and assured me that it had no real significance, and that the very man who made the contribution voted wet. I took the matter up with the Secretary of the Ohio Brewers' Association, who replied under date of Feb. 13th as follows:

"Our latest advice is that the President and Secretary are broad enough to be liberal, and it is believed that they have heard from enough quarters of their position that they will be very careful as to the action of their company in the future. This advice is coupled with the further information that the majority of the directors of their board are dry. It is also stated that there is no foundation for the rumor that posters were placed about their factory advising the men to vote dry."

I do not feel justified, under these circumstances, in sending any letter to our members exonerating the company, at the present time, but it is evident that they are now in a chastened mood.

Yours very truly.

50 Union Sq., New York.

DEAR SIR:—In re. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio.

Herewith circular of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., referring to an article which appeared in their factory publication the "Wing Foot Clan."

I am unfortunately a stockholder in this corporation. Have taken pains to have this matter straightened out through the kindly offices of the Ohio State Brewers Assn.

Their competitors are making the most use of this article to obtain trade from the brewing industry and in my candid opinion they are no more guilty than the at least two of the other big tire concerns of Akron.

Herewith am enclosing you the correspondence I have had on the subject which please return after perusal for my files. I do not remember of having seen any notice from the U. S. B. A. regarding the Goodyear Co., and would thank you very much to inform me if or not it is justice to allow this matter to run on. Their explanation as to how the offending article appeared is plausible, and I am sure it will never be repeated.

A few days ago the local manager of the Ford Motor Car Co. spent the afternoon with me trying by every argument to undo Henry Ford's unfortunate remark when he came out in favor Natl. Prohibition. From a number of reliable sources I am given to understand that a number of cancellations of orders on this account and the further loss of business in St. Louis territory is responsible for this. Have you heard anything from other quarters regarding this?

Very truly yours,

ROBERT HOLM.

MARCH 4, 1915.

CONFIDENTIAL.

Mr. ROBERT HOLM,
Sec'y & Treas., Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 2nd with its enclosures, which I return herewith. The Assistant Secretary of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company called on me some weeks ago and gave me his explanation of the matter referred to, and I wrote to the Ohio Brewers' Association telling them that I thought the Company was in a penitent mood and that there was a good opportunity of securing its real friendship and co-operation. For this reason I had not sent out any notice to our members which would prejudice the Company, but I do not think that we should, on the other hand, send out a letter which would put them on the preferred list, so long as their attitude is merely "one of strict neutrality." We have found by experience that such a letter has immense advertising value, and sometimes makes a good deal of feeling among the fair-minded competitors of a concern that is thus singled out, especially when such competitors have always been generous supporters of our interests. I believe that I explained this fully to the Assistant Secretary of the Goodyear Company when he called.

I am enclosing a copy of my recent article on "The Effects of Intemperance on Industry." Will it not be possible for you to get the Company to endorse the position taken therein, and at the same time to declare its opposition to State and National Prohibition? If this were done I should, of course, feel justified in sending a letter to our members which would be helpful to them.

Regarding the Ford Motor Car Company, I had not heard that they had been loosing business by Mr. Ford's attitude, but if this is the case in St. Louis undoubtedly it is true elsewhere. I may say to you, in confidence, that we are now having a study made of the automobile concerns in Michigan with special reference to their attitude on our question.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

Mr. G. M. STADELMAN,
Secy. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS: I think that I have done everything possible to remove the effect of the "Wingfoot Clan" publication and Mr. S.'s personal donation of $100 to the cause of the prohis.

Now all this was done in good faith and because I am a stockholder and hope to receive in turn like good faith. I am enclosing you copy of "The Effects of Intemperance on Industry," which I would thank you to read and also show to Mr. Seiberling. And if you and he agree on it, can't you endorse the position taken? This pamphlet was written by Mr. H. F. Fox, Secretary of the United States Brewers' Assn., and if you endorse the views expressed in the pamphlet and at same time declare your opposition to State & National Prohibition I am in a position to assure you that it will result in an official letter being sent to all the U. S. B. A. members and affiliations in the United States.

Think it over—not one out of one thousand owners of automobiles who have money to spend are for prohibition. It is the class that has no money, that is envious of everybody who has funds to buy either autos or an occasional drink that is behind Dr. Baker & Co. of the "Anti-Saloon League."

The Firestone people have completely cleared themselves and now I would like you to take this one more step to wipe out your competitors argument that you are not friendly to us.

Very truly yours,

ROB'T HOLM.

ROBERT HOLM, Secy. & Treas.

DEAR MR. FOX: Isn't it unfair to make these people after they have been penitent and seen the error of their ways, declare themselves on our side when all the others of the big tire concerns are neutral? This my personal view. Kindly advise me.

[Copy.]

[The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio.]

MR. ROBT. HOLM,
Secretary, Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Both Mr. Seiberling and the writer have read the pamphlet on "The Effects of Intemperance on Industry," in which is involved a scientific problem; namely, what is the effect of alcoholic drinks on the efficiency and health of mankind.

Since neither Mr. Seiberling nor the writer have given this subject sufficient study to qualify as experts, we feel that we should continue to assume a neutral attitude toward this question, just as we would toward any question on which we are insufficiently advised. We feel the necessity for taking this position especially in view of the fact that some of the experts cited in the pamphlet you enclosed are rather uncertain in their conclusions on this subject.

We believe that as a stockholder in this company you can see the necessity for the corporation preserving an entirely neutral attitude in connection with all questions which do not involve company business. One of our employees made a mistake in giving publicity to his personal views in connection with the prohibition matter, and we took immediate steps to prevent a recurrence of such a discussion. We have also attempted to explain our attitude to the liquor and brewery interests throughout the country. In view of the assurances we have given as to our neutral attitude in the future, we feel as though it would be best to let the matter rest, excepting that we propose to explain our position to those who have not yet had matters fully explained to them.

We thank you very much for the effort you have made in our behalf, and we hope that the combined work of all our friends will result in restoring the friendship that existed before our unfortunate experience.

Yours, very truly,

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER CO.

MARCH 22, 1915.

CONFIDENTIAL.

Mr. ROBERT HOLM,
Secretary, Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n.,
St. Louis, Mo.

MY DEAR MR. HOLM: I have your favor of the 19th with its enclosure, and I think that under the circumstances the only thing we can do is, like the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, "to let the matter rest." We have no intention whatever of saying or doing anything that would be unfriendly to them, but I think you will agree with me that we could not on the other hand go out of our way to notify our members that they are conspicuously friendly in view of their neutral attitude.

I have received a considerable number of letters from our members on the matter, and have put the position of the Company plainly before them that they are not unfriendly, and that we had reason to hope that they might be completely won over to our side before long. Evidently this is impossible and I feel that we have, like yourself, done all that we can in the matter. I am surprise, however, that they should have any hesitation about expressing themselves on the perfectly reasonable and moderate attitude which I took in the article entitled "The Effects of Intemperance on Industry." The point I made had nothing to do with the "scientific problem" but simply touched upon the attitude that the employer ought to take in the matter. It has been endorsed without qualification by a number of other large employers who have no connection with, or interest in the brewing industry at all, but who have been quoted recently by the prohibitionists as "being against us."

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

MAY 19, 1915.

Mr. F. A. SEIBERLING,
President, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.,
Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: In view of the repeated inquiries that we have received in regard to your attitude, and that of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, on the prohibition question, I am taking the liberty of writing to ask if you care to give me an expression of your views?

Perhaps it may facilitate your action if I state our position in regard to prohibition and the license question, together with the relation of the employer to his employees on the drink question.

1. In regard to the latter it is conceded even by Organized Labor leaders, that drunkenness is a proper cause for discharge. We think that the employer has the right to tell his men what they shall or shall not do during their working hours. It is also his right to establish, if he can, a standard of physical and mechanical efficiency which can only be lived up to by men of temperate habits. When, however, the employer dictates to his men as to what they shall or shall eat or drink, or what places they shall frequent during their own leisure hours, he is interfering in an unwarranted way with their personal liberty.

Are these your views?

2. In regard to prohibition, we believe that it has absolutely broken down in the administrative sense, and that it is not only impractical, but has brought serious evils in its train. In sparsely populated places where people occupy their own homes and there is no need of a social centre such as the saloon, prohibition or no-license sometimes works fairly well; but this can be accomplished best under an electoral system which allows each community to register its own wishes, so that localized public sentiment is back of the law. One of the reasons why County Option breaks down is because the unit is too large, and the people of the cities are subject to the dominance of outsiders, while the enforcement of no-license in the cities is left to the local police who know that the people who pay them for their services are opposed to the law. It stands to reason that the police unit and the license area must correspond to each other.

How does this accord with your views?

3. With regard to the saloon question, we believe that the licensing principle should primarily be that which meets the reasonable convenience of the people who patronize the saloons; also that the saloons must be conducted absolutely in accordance with the law, and that they must be conducted in a clean and sanitary manner. Moreover, we advocate that the premises should be open to public scrutiny by the removal of screens or other obstructions, and that the saloon must be kept entirely free from gambling and other evils, and from all disreputable practices. We also urge the establishment of refreshment places which may be family resorts, and in which all kinds of beverages are dispensed. We are working in co-operation with the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association to bring about these conditions, believing that in all the important centers of population the well-regulated saloon, under rigid license laws, offers the best solution of this problem.

Do you endorse this position?

4. Inasmuch as prohibition is ruinous to the people who have invested their money in any branch of the liquor business, we believe that they should be compensated out of public funds in accordance with the principle which is being followed in all European countries where any form of prohibition prevails, and in accordance with the action taken recently by the Province of Quebec on this question, in case prohibition is adopted.

How does this strike you?

In conclusion let me say that we are trying to inform the people of this country as to the merits of beer, and are basing our claims upon the fact that it has recognized food value, and has such a small percentage of alcohol that it may fairly be classed as a temperance drink.

If you are in accord with these views, and with the standard which is here set up, we feel justified in asking that you give us your hearty co-operation and support. Will you do this?

Hoping to be favored with an early reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been absent from home the major part of ten days and returning, find your letter of the 19th.

I will be pleased to give you my views on the subject matter in which you are interested, provided it would be treated as purely personal, not to be used outside. I do this from a feeling that my views on questions sociological, moral or religious are of no concern to anyone but myself, but I am prompted to answer your letter from a feeling that you are not seeking information in the spirit of hostility, but have an interest in knowing my views growing out of the attack that has been made upon the Company of which I am President, and which has been as unfair and unjust as I have ever known in my business experience.

As to The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, it has no attitude whatsoever on any of these questions, that are wholly outside of its business undertaking.

I would be much pleased to meet you and go over the subject with you in person when I am in New York, where I am usually quartered at the Waldorf, or I will be glad to write you a personal letter with the understanding above recited.

Mr. F. A. SIEBERLING,
Pres., The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of May 29th. I shall, of course, be glad to have an expression of your views and to treat them as purely personal, if you wish it. I am simply trying to get such an expression as would warrant me in notifying our members that your attitude is entirely friendly. We should very much like to be able to remove any prejudice that exists against the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, and in my letter to you of May 19th, I tried to state our position in such reasonable terms that you might, if you saw fit, simply state that you were in accord with it. This would be quite sufficient.

I have received visits from two of your representatives in this connection, and wrote you after discussing the matter fully with them. At the present time, I am only in a position to say to inquirers that the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company is not unfriendly, and that "it has no attitude whatsoever on any of these questions," which, I think you will admit, constitutes a rather colorless appeal.

I should be very glad indeed to meet you on your next visit to New York, but a letter such as I have indicated would dispose of the whole matter.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry of the 11th inst., my understanding is that the American Civic League is a new organization started by a Mr. Neuberger who is an attorney, and is the President or Manager of the Everard Brewery, New York. He is not a member of our Association, but I got in touch with him before he made his attack on the Goodyear Rubber & Tire Company, and tried to call him off, but without success.

The President of the Goodyear Company has assured us of his sympathy and interest, and the Company has explained the mistake which was made last October in publishing a prohibition article in their house-organ. I think they have made sufficient amends, and that it is a mistake to attack them in the way that the American Civic League has done. The League is apparently the result of Mr. Neuberger's individual efforts, and so far as I can learn, it has not been officially endorsed by the New York State Brewers' Association, or any of the other brewers' organizations in this city.

Kindly regard this as confidential and oblige,

Yours very truly,

Mr. H. F. FOX,
U. S. Brewers' Association,
50 Union Square, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Your reply to our inquiry of the 11th, inst., in reference to the American Civic League received, and we thank you very much for the information.

Regarding the Goodyear Company and the attitude the American Civic League is taking towards it, we are a little bit afraid that it will re-act against us here, as you know of course, that the Goodyear Plant is here and they employ from eight to nine thousand men, and a large majority of them are with us in the fight that we are to have this coming Fall.

The writer, last year as an employee of the National Association of Commerce & Labor and as Campaign Manager here, came in contact with the situation as to the rubber industry, and like you, we feel that Mr. Seiberling, President of the Goodyear Company, has made sufficient amends. If this agitation is kept up against him he could just as easily donate $10,000 to the Anti-Saloon League this year as he did $100 last year—which there is a possibility he will do.

Any influence or pressure that your Association can bring upon the Civic League to stop this agitation will be greatly appreciated by us, as we have a very tough proposition here this coming Fall. This county and locality went dry last year by a large majority.

Thanking you very kindly for past favors, we are,

Akron individually, and the Summit County Brewers' Association of Akron, inform us that they feel that the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company has made ample amends, and that its attitude is now entirely friendly. In fact they have asked us to have the agitation of the American Civic League stopped, as there is a county election coming up this fall, and it is important that the 9,000 men employed in the Goodyear plant should be enlisted on our side. They are now with us, but there is an undercurrent of exasperation on the part of some of the heads of departments over the action of the American Civic League, and the attitude of some of the brewers.

I may say to you in confidence that I am in correspondence with the President of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., who has expressed a desire to confer with me, and we are assurred of the neutrality at least of the company, and hope to win their active friendship shortly.

MY DEAR MR. HESS: Thanks for your letter of the 10th with its enclosures. I had lunch with Mr. Seiberling recently, and am thoroughly satisfied with his views and general attitude. He has a good deal of constructive criticism to offer, which I found most helpful and refreshing, but his convictions are just as liberal as yours or mine, and I feel that we can count upon his interest and support in all vital contests. When it comes to a matter of making cash contributions in campaigns, I think it is absolutely up to him and to any other man in his position, and our members certainly have no cause for offense if he takes the position that he has done in his correspondence.

Perhaps this is as good an opportunity as any for me to say that I think there is a grave danger in pressing matters of this kind unduly. Of course, we are perfectly justified in letting our members know who our friends are and who our opponents are, as a matter of information only, but our main object is to make friends and not to force those who are neutral or indifferent into the camp of our opponents.

Maj. HUMES. Now, is it not a fact that you tried to persuade, or did persuade, the members of your association to withhold their patronage from the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad because of the rule of that railroad with reference to the drinking of their employees?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall that.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that, because of the big wreck up at Corning, N. Y., where some 30 or 40 people were killed and some 75 or so seriously injured, an order was promulgated by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad prohibiting certain classes of their employees from drinking, the evidence in that case showing that the engineer of the train, which was wrecked, was under the influence of liquor; and the circular issued by the railroad was issued because of that situation; and when you discovered that did you not try to compel or to persuade the members to withhold patronage from the road?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. Refresh your recollection from that correspondence [handing file to the witness].

Mr. Fox (after examining Exhibit File L–2). I think this is a little different in character from some of the matters. In other words, this bulletin, to which you refer, was a bulletin which was apparently sent out at that time covering all kinds of matters of general news, and it is not marked "confidential." It is marked "For members only. Not for publication." It deals with court interpretations, and a score of other things, and among the items of news is this item:

Employees in the storehouses of the Lackawanna Railroad Company, over its entire system from Hoboken, N. J., to Buffalo, N. Y., have received circular letters in which they are notified that men who drink intoxicating liquors will not be continued in the service of the company. It is also stated in the circular that men who drink intoxicating liquor will not hereafter be employed.

Now, I find in the following month a letter from me to the Pabst Brewing Co., of Milwaukee, in which I quote what the railroad has to say in regard to the accident that you refer to; and, perhaps, I had better read this letter. It is as follows:

AUG. 19, 1915.

The PABST BREWING CO.,
Milwaukee, Wis.

GENTLEMEN: The East Bound Freight Agent and the Contracting Agent of the D. L. & W. R. R. Co., called on me recently to explain their attitude on the liquor question, and have sent me a copy of the letter which they received from your Traffic Manager, Mr. Charles Zeilke, and of their reply thereto. They state that Rule G to which reference is made has been adopted by the General Managers' Association representing the majority of the railroads of this country. The object of this rule is to enforce strict sobriety in the Operating Department, and engineers are not allowed to frequent drinking places. Neither the engineers or any other of their employees are, however, required to be total abstainers, and no attempt is made to stop them from having what they please in their own houses. They told me specifically that they would have no objection to an engineer keeping beer in his household and to his drinking it moderately.

They explained that the attitude of the railroad is not in favor of prohibition, and that they are totally out of sympathy with that movement.

In our July Bulletin we referred to the statement which has gone the rounds of the newspapers, that the storehouse keepers have been notified that they must cut out all liquor. In a recent communication to their solicitors they quote the correspondence with you, and then add the following:

"You, of course, all remember the deplorable results of the wreck at Corning, and that, under the circumstances, our Management was in duty bound to renew the instructions generally known as Rule G, with respect to abstaining from the use of alcohol, which had been in effect for a number of years.

"Aside from the Danger to life and limb, and the destruction of property, which the use of intoxicants is very apt to produce, our Company also experienced considerable losses by reason of employees purloining material which had been sold for the purpose of obtaining liquor.

"We give you the foregoing information to the end that you may be in position to fully understand and explain the attitude of our Company should you find that instructions issued by the Operating Department under Rule G should be referred to adversely during your solicitations."

I wish you would be kind enough to let me know what you would advise in view of this correspondence, and of the explanations made to me by the representatives of the company? It is represented to us that our July circular is an unfair discrimiation against the D. L. & W. Co., and that we ought to send out a corrected statement. I should appreciate it if you will give this matter your consideration.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

Apparently this was brought to us by the traffic managers of the shipping brewers.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and also in the file are copies of letters which the shipping brewers had written to the railroad company; and their reply, where they protested against this regulation; is not that true?

Mr. Fox (after examining letters). Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And, as a result of the persuasion, or what you may choose to call it, of the United States Brewers' Association, the general manager of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was induced to send a letter to their solicitors—their freight solitors—explaining this situation and suggesting that they give this explanation to their customers among the shipping brewers. Is not that the fact?

Mr. Fox. I presume so. I do not recall it. I presume it is, according to the correspondence. I presume that the matter was really a matter between the traffic managers, the shipping brewers, and the railroads, and we were brought in really as an intermediary.

Maj. HUMES. Then, your contention here is that any interference with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was the interference of individual members of your association rather than of the association itself?

Mr. Fox. If there was such; yes.

[Copy of letter referred to in letter of August 13, 1915, from Fred. G. Platt, east-bound freight agent, to Hugh Fox, Sec'y U. S. B. Ass'n, as the instructions given by the vice president to the soliciting force of the D. L. & W. R. R.]

GENTLEMEN: Mr. Chas. Zeilke, Traffic Manager of the Pabst Brewing Company, recently wrote us as follows:

"We are advised that the employees in the storehouses of the Lackawanna R. R., covering its entire system from Hoboken to Buffalo, have received circular letters in which they are notified that men who drink intoxicating liquors will not be continued in your employ. It is also stated in the circular that men who drink intoxicating liquors will not hereafter be employed. We wish you would kindly advise whether this statement is correct and if same is the principle or stand that is now being taken by your Company.

"You personally know the brewers well enough that they do not desire you to keep in your employ drunkards or men who drink to excess, especially while on duty, but we can not see why you should want, nor do we suppose as yet that you have joined the Prohibition Party and that you are lending them your support by forcing the thousands of employees of the Lackawanna R. R. to abstain from drinking any liquor whatever.

"Shipments of beer, as you well understand, are a large source of revenue, not only to your line but to all other railroads in the country and are solicited by your employees in different parts of the country daily. We just recently gave you three cars for San Francisco via New York which your Commercial Agent at Milwaukee solicited and would have been very much put out, and would no doubt have had to make an explanation to you, if he had not secured the shipments.

"Awaiting your answer on the subject, we remain."

A similar letter was received from Mr. R. Muehlberg, Traffic Manager of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company.

To these communications we made the following reply:

"Answering your letter of 13th inst., which arrived during my absence.

"The rule of our Company prohibiting the use of intoxicants while on or off duty was promulgated on July 25th, 1912, following a most serious accident near Corning, N. Y., on the morning of July 4th, 1912, and which resulted in the death of 39 passengers and the injury, more or less serious, of 75 more.

"The investigation developed that this accident occurred through the fault of an engineer who ran by three standard block signals, one set at "Caution" and the other two at "Danger," as also one in the hands of a flagman.

"The causes leading up to the accident and the conditions affecting same were fully investigated by representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Public Service Commission of New York, with result that the engineer above referred to was solely to blame for its occurrence. Prior to taking his run he had been off duty thirty hours, but the investigation showed he misused his opportunity for rest, as within a few hours of going on duty he had visited numerous saloons and indulged more or less in intoxicating liquor while there.

"All things considered, in the light of the foregoing explanation, we do not quite understand how anyone can reasonably take exceptions to the rule to which we have referred.

"As to your remarks about our Company having joined the Prohibition Party, and lending support to it, would say that the very fact of our purchasing beer from your firm and other brewers, for sale in our restaurants and dining cars to passengers calling for same, should make it clear to you that we are not identified with the Prohibition Party.

"Trusting that you will accept the foregoing in the spirit in which it is intended,"

You, of course, all remember the deplorable results of the wreck at Corning, and that, under the circumstances, our Management was in duty bound to renew the instructions generally known as Rule G, with respect to abstaining from the use of alcohol, which had been in effect for a number of years.

Aside from the danger to life and limb and the destruction of property, which the use of intoxicants is very apt to produce, our Company also experienced considerable losses by reason of employees purloining material which had been sold for the purpose of obtaining liquor.

We give you the foregoing information to the end that you may be in position to fully understand and explain the attitude of our Company should you find that instructions issued by the Operating Department under Rule G should be referred to adversely during your solicitations.

Please acknowledge receipt.

Enclosures.

The following is a report as to the attitude of the officials of the Paige-Detroit Motor Co., of Detroit, Mich., with regard to the liquor question:

In determining the attitude of the Paige people in regard to the liquor question, I find that Mr. QUINLAN, superintendent of the shops, is a very liberal man and places no restrictions upon the employees.

The Employment Agency assures me that all liberties are granted in regard to the saloon. Timekeepers and male stenographers say that they enjoy the liberty of the saloons without restriction, although most of the factory help carry their lunches and eat at the shops; I was informed that those who desire are allowed to eat at the saloons, or wherever they may choose.

I find that there are three (3) saloons within three blocks of the Main Plant and that all of these announce a good patronage from the Paige shops. In all three of these saloons lunches are served at noon for the convenience of the shop employees, and liquor is served when desired.

Altogether, the attitude of the Paige people is entirely liberal. This concerns the main shop only but as far as I am able to learn there has been no printed matter or verbal requests on the part of the foremen or other men in authority to their employees to not frequent saloons.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
50 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Much as I dislike the task, yet at times like the present it would be most cowardly to overlook the circumstance which forms the cause of this letter.

We have in our town a very large paint manufacturing establishment, The A. Wilhelm Co., Chas. W. Wilhelm, President, Walter S. Davis, Sec. & Treas., and H. J. Hayden, General Manager. Now I know that the first two did take a drink when it could be done privately, the other man poses as an active member of the No-License people, is quite a religious light and active in the Y. M. C. A., President of the Chamber of Commerce, and ambitious enough to preside at any meeting that may suit his purpose. He was one of the Committee at yesterday's Local Option Meeting at Harrisburg, and very active in the interest of the Antis.

The Wilhelm Paint Co., sell paint all over the United States; a good deal of it to Brewers. Could you not devise ways and means of acquainting our industry with the actual character of this firm? We had bought paint from them until we found out their standing, since then stopped. While it might only be a drop in the bucket, still if all the Brewers would stop dealing with them, they ought to feel the weight of that drop.

Individually I have nothing against the firm, but industrially I am down on them, and as I said before if we don't take care of our interests nobody else will.

DEAR MR. FOX: I have your letter, and am sorry you could not stop here on your way to New York. Would like very much to have had you stop over here a day or so.

I notice that you are getting data on some of the enemies of our business throughout the U. S., and it may be of interest to you and to the members of our Association to know that C. A. Smurthwaite, head of the C. A. Smurthwaite Co., formerly of Ogden, now of Salt Lake City, who sells lots of barley to brewers, is a rabid prohibitionist. Mr. Smurthwaite called us up over the phone several days ago and offered us 40 cars of barley at a cut price, and the writer told him that he couldn't see the consistency of fighting for prohibition and attempting to sell barley to the brewers to make that "awful stuff" called beer out of. The writer told him that, according to his, Smurthwaite's, doctrines, we couldn't see the consistency of his action, and we cordially invited him to sell his barley to his friends, the prohibitionists. You can use this information as you may see fit. It occurs to us that it surely is valuable to all of those connected with our industry to know who their friends and foes are, if possible.

With kind regards, to you,

I do not believe that the Standard Oil Company is taking any position in the matter, and doubt whether anything substantial has been done for our opponents by the Rockefellers. Mr. JOHN DAMGARD,
The Ottawa Brewing Assn., Ottawa, Ill.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your letter of August 30th, we have a letter from the manager of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey addressed to a friend of ours, stating that "this company is not in any way interested in the prohibition movement, nor, in fact, in any other movemet of like nature."

I do not believe that the Standard Oil Company is taking any position in the matter, and doubt whether anything substantial has been done for our opponents by the Rockefellers. Of course they have very likely made small contributions from time to time to our opponents, but if they were seriously interested we should have known of it long ago as their contributions would in such case have been on a large scale. I happen to know that the Rockefeller Foundation has kept clear of the whole matter.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
Secretary, United States Brewers' Association,

DEAR SIR: I understand that Sylvester S. Marvin is or was president of the National Biscuit Company. His residence is in Bryn Mawr, and he is president of the No-License Campaign in Montgomery County. On good authority he has made the statement in one of their meetings that they should not give him away, that he has secured the rates for advertising the No-License Campaign matters at the low rate of the National Biscuit Company but it would not do to give that away.

Can you not take this up with the National Hotel Keepers, with the States Liquor Leagues, with the brewers, to withhold their patronage from the National Biscuit Company? If we, as brewers, and others engaged in the liquor business, give our money still to the people who injure us, what good reason would they have to let us alone? It really seems as if we were allowing hotels and liquor people to give them their patronage in order so they would not fight us all at once.

Ought not Mr. Marvin know that we are alive to the fact to watch our enemies? In a recent speech he is quoted as having said "we must put an end to this liquor traffic, and if we do our advertising right and bring the public the statistics which we have in our hands (fake statistics), the court will have to listen to us." I am bringing this before you so that somebody may act in this matter.

DEAR SIR: The Ohio State Representative of the National Biscuit Co., Mr. Nunamaker called at our office to-day protesting against the action taken by the National Association in practically boycotting their business.

He states that a certain stockholder by name of Marvin of Pittsburg who has been furnishing articles to newspapers, etc., is a radical prohibitionist, but the Company remains neutral on our question. He further states that the Company employs almost nine thousand men in the capacity of salesmen of whom the majority are liberally inclined. He also states that he has placed the matter before the officers of the Corporation who informed him they will make every effort to silence Marvin or take some action to get rid of him.

In justice to the other stockholders and employes of the Company this matter should receive further consideration.

[Camillus Kessler, 839 West 179th St.]

After a two days investigation of the report that the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Company intended to effect a scheme to regulate the amount of alcoholic liquor used by its workmen by the establishment of a canteen system within its factories, I wish to submit the following:—

I first called upon the Advertising Manager of the Company, who is regarded as one of the official family. I represented myself to be a newspaper man seeking material for a story. I showed him the clipping from the Newburgh News and after questioning him as to whether the Du Ponts were really seeking efficiency in their workmen by controlling and regulating the consumption of liquor by a check system, he impressed upon me most emphatically a complete disavowal of the story. He explained how for years past the Du Ponts have absolutely prohibited the use of intoxicants by their employees and, now with the rush of war orders, the prohibition ban has been drawn even closer. Mr. Lord, the advertising manager, to verify his statements, called on the phone, my presence, the heads of two of their factories and explained to them the clipping from the Newburgh News and tried to find out the source of the story. No one that he could reach or refer me to ever heard of any such system.

After calling on several of the men in the offices in Wilmington, I took the ferry and went across the river to Penn's Grove, where one of the largest of the Du Pont factories is located. There I talked with the Chief of Police, some of the men who work in the high explosive department and one of the guards. They all assured me that there was not a drink to be had in Penn's Grove. The only bar in the town had been closed by the Du Ponts and if any workman wanted a drink of any kind he would have to go to Wilmington, or some other neighboring town.

It is reported if a guard is seen taking a drink off duty he is immediately discharged. If a workman comes to work with the slightest indication of liquor on his breath he is not allowed to work. From all that I could see prohibition could not be more effectively enforced than it is in Penn's Grove. I was informed by the officials and by men who had worked in the other factories of the company that the same conditions exist in all of the Du Pont Company factories.

(NOTE.—Clipping from Newburgh News referred to is from the issue of September 21, 1916.)

Maj. HUMES. Was that investigated by you?

Mr. Fox (after examining papers). I do not recall it. It looks to me as though it was investigated by the Michigan association.

Maj. HUMES. The reason for your investigation of that concern was because of the rule that it did not allow pay checks to be cashed in saloons, was it not?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall anything about it, but I should think that the indorsement on the back of this would show. It is indorsed:

This order will not be paid or honored by the Drawer or by the bank upon which it is drawn if it be or becomes endorsed by, or the property of any person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of selling spirituous or intoxicating liquors, either at wholesale or retail, or if it be or becomes endorsed by or the property of any person who conducts a hotel or boarding house in connection with any place where such liquors are sold.

And so forth. I should think that it was. I do not know whether we investigated it or the Michigan people did.

DEAR SIR: At the suggestion of Manufacturers and Dealers League, we recently addressed a stereotyped letter to a number of individuals and firms with whom we have done business, in an effort to have them join the League, the objects of which you are no doubt familiar with.

The enclosed copy of reply we received from the Robert A. Keasbey Company, and explains itself.

We, in the past, have done a great deal of business with this concern, as no doubt many other brewers, hotel keepers and manufacturing firms allied with the trade have done, and many of whom will undoubtedly continue to do so in the future, unless the attitude of this firm toward our interests becomes known to them.

Their letter to you is certainly frank and manly, and I must express a certain admiration for their honesty, when it would have been so easy to evade the issue.

We are about to publish a study of local option, and my judgment would be to wait until this is out, and then submit it to the Keasbey Company, and see if we cannot convert them, before doing anything that would put them permanently in opposition to us. I have notified Mr. Savage of the Manufacturers & Dealers League accordingly.

GENTLEMEN: To day a Robert A Keasbey agent called to solicit orders on Pipe Covering etc. We did not hesitate to tell the agent that we would not give Keasbey an order, as Keasbey would use the money to fight our business. We had to order the agent out, which he disliked very much. Keasbey received a number of orders from us up to two or three years ago, when we were informed that he opposed the Liquor business. This agent said that the Keasbey Co are doing a lot of work for Obermeyer & Liebman at Brooklyn N. Y. If this be the case would it be proper for you to acquaint Obermeyer and Leibman of the facts Robert A Keasbey & Co. are located at 100 North Moore St N Y City We are positive that Keasby made some remarks or donated to the cause of Prohibition. Of course we have no paper to show this to be true, however we refused to give Keasbey any more orders after we read of his doings against the business. The Robert A Keasby Co advertise in the Brewers Journal. Would it be wise to ascertain from the Keasby Co how they stand on the Liquor question, as they manufacture material used in Breweries and we are opposed to support any one that is against us. If the Brewer's support any firm or person that is against us we would be paying money to others to put us out of business, in fact it would be our own money putting us out of business. Give this matter prompt attention.

Yours truly

JULY 17, 1914.

MESSRS. ROBERT H. KEASBEY & CO.,
100 North Moore St., New York City.

DEAR SIRS: I have received several inquiries from our members, asking whether you are friendly to our interests, and I am taking the liberty of writing you direct, to ask for an expression of your views?

We do not, of course, question the right of any man to his own opinion, and there are certain questions which relate to license legislation that are doubtless debatable. It is, however, generally conceded by all the leaders of thought in the brewing industry, and by impartial students of the license question, that national prohibition, state wide prohibition, and county option are thoroughly unwise, and that they should be consistently opposed. What is your attitude on these questions?

We believe that the system of controlling the retail trade by licensing it, and thus keeping it under constant regulation and supervision, works better than anything else. What is your opinion as to this?

I understand that some four years ago you explained your position to the John Stanton Brewing Company, in the following terms:

"We believe that local option, giving to every community the privilege to vote as to whether saloons shall or shall not be instituted in their locality, is a prerogative of the American people, and part of the Constitution, and therefore it has our general good wishes."

Unfortunately we are opposed by an organized body of a national character, whose ultimate purpose of absolute prohibition, and they have now admitted that their local option campaign in this and other States is merely a detail of their plan for progressive prohibition, and that therefore, their policy is one of mere opportunism in advocating local option. The merits of the local option question are therefore, more or less academic from our viewpoint, considering the character of our opponents.

I am taking the liberty of sending you our Year Book for 1909, which contains a careful study of the local option question. I am also sending you my recent address on "The Co-Operation of the Retail Liquor Trade in Saloon Regulation," which will indicate our advanced attitude on the regulation of the saloon.

We should like to know, if you see fit to tell us, whether your firm or any of its members are contributing to the Anti-Saloon League, or to any of the other organized forces that are attacking us.

I understand that you are doing a good deal of business with brewers and hotelkeepers and other people whose interests are closely related, and I should very much like, if possible, to quote you in the most friendly spirit.

Awaiting your reply, I am,

Yours faithfully,

Secretary.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 16th inst., regarding the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, 1871 Broadway, New York, we are glad to advise you that this concern has been a member of the League since 1908, and have just paid their dues for 1915. As they are fully aware of the objects and purposes of the League, their membership would seem to indicate their sympathy with our cause.

GENTLEMEN: We have been receiving a number of inquiries from New York brewers regarding the Firestone Rubber & Tire Co., which I understand, has a factory in Akron. The New York representatives of this concern belong to the Manufacturers & Dealers League, with which we are affiliated, and their attitude is entirely friendly. It is, however, rumored that the parent company has allowed notices to be posted in its plant, encouraging the prohibition cause. May I ask if you will be kind enough to let me know in confidence, what the facts are, and whether you regard the company as being friendly or unfriendly to our interests?

The Moller & Schumann Company is, and has been for three years a member of our League in good standing, and have been prompt in complying with every request made of them. It is inferred, having no knowledge to the contrary, that they are in entire sympathy with the cause.

The name of the General Electric Company has been given to us by many brewers as doing business with them, and numberless letters have been sent them both by brewers and by the League, but they have not responded to any of them. DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 31st ult., beg to advise that the matter referred to was taken up by this company some time ago there having been rumors to the effect that the General Electric was antagonistic to the trade. We found however, upon investigation, that the charges were unfounded. We had an interview with the General Manager of the local plant who assured us verbally, which was later followed by a letter, that his company had taken no action against our business nor did they intend to do so. We are also pleased to advise that we have obtained a new license at Wesleyville which is but a short distance from the General Electric Plant.

There is another license a short distance from the plant and so far as we know there has never been any objections filed on the part of the General Electric against either of these licenses. DEAR SIR: Re. your advice of June 15th.

We noticed that Mr. Joseph Boyer, head of the Burroughs Adding Machine Co., of Detroit, is stated to be a liberal contributor to and supporter of the Anti-Saloon League. One of the members of our firm had occasion to mention to the local representative of the above company that this is the case, and the latter mentioned it to the local Sales Manager (a Mr. H. H. Rowe). Mr. Rowe's representative called up several days later, stating that they had advice from the home office (Detroit) that there was no foundation for such claim—but that Mr. Boyer had taken active interest in preventing a saloon being started just across from the main entrance of the Burroughs Factory. He further stated that a lot suitable for saloon location was involved.

Kindly advise us of the result of your investigation. We are informed that one of the Breweries in this City has the purchase of a machine under consideration—and we consider it our duty to block the game if the facts should warrant it.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
% U. S. Brewers' Assn., New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: There is no doubt of the activity of Joseph Boyer in behalf of the Anti-Saloon League. He has been active in every effort of a certain coterie of manufacturers to prevent the establishment of any saloons within a mile or so of the Burroughs Adding Machine Company's factory in Detroit, not once but several times.

For many years he was a contributor to the prohibition party, giving from fifty to five hundred dollars per year. This comes to me from a prohibition worker who actually solicited and received from Mr. Boyer these sums. During the past two or three years, however, he declined to help the prohibition party, but gave all his so-called temperance contributions to the Anti-Saloon League. We are informed that in the spring of 1913 he gave to G. W. Morrow a check for $1000.00 for the "national work," and we are also informed that J. Francis Burke and the others who have been in charge of the Anti-Saloon League have at various times been given sums by Mr. Boyer.

Mr. Boyer has no objections to drinking himself. As a matter of fact, when Mr. Manchester and I were on a fishing expedition four or five years ago Mr. Boyer drank from a flask of whiskey which Mr. Manchester and I had with us. But Mr. Boyer does not approve of workingmen drinking. * * *

If this does not convince the brewing company I can furnish some further information which I am gathering now.

PERSONAL LIBERTY.

A letter was recently received at the factory from one of our salesmen stating that one of his P. Bs. had given, as a reason for not buying a machine, the fact that an officer of the Burroughs Adding Machine Co. was reported to have contributed to the Anti-Saloon League.

Our reply was simply that the Burroughs Adding Machine Company had made no contribution whatever to the Anti-Saloon League or against it, and could not and would not contribute to either side for the very good reason that its money belongs to its stockholders, and among its stockholders are to be found men holding decided views on both sides of this question as well as other public questions.

Every stockholder, officer and employee of this Company enjoys the fullest measure of Personal Liberty and there is no view of any public question that is not held by some of the four thousand odd people associated with the Company. It would be absurd for a member of any trade, political party, sect, or religious organization to be influenced either in favor of or against the Burroughs Adding Machine Company by the personal or individual attitude of any of the people in the business.

W. C. Leland has a managerial position with the Cadillac Company. He is the son of Henry M. Leland, the general manager of the Company. Henry M. Leland is active in the Anti-Saloon League and has always been very active in any movement against saloons.

The Cadillac Company is embraced in the General Motors Company. Two years ago, when W. C. UNITED STATES BREWERS ASSOCIATION,

GENTLEMEN: With reference to your communication of November 20th to Mr. Kenney, our Secretary, regarding the Cadillac Motor Car Co. Last year at the time we were in the market for a car, we took the matter up with the Cadillac people, and they advised us that they had never assisted nor sanctioned any assistance to the Prohibition or Local Option movement. They, however, did not state that Mr. Leland did not give any assistance, nor do we find in the copy of letter which we received from you (enclosed) that Mr. Leland, as the manager of the Cadillac Co., sanctioned anything of this nature, but only gave his personal views. We do not feel that we are getting to the root of the evil by refusing to purchase Cadillac automobiles. It seems to us that by taking the matter up direct with the Cadillac Managing Board of Directors results could be obtained which would be more effective than this; in other words, the muzzling of Mr. Leland in connection with the expression of his views, and signing as manager of the Cadillac Company. One can hardly hold the old man responsible for much because he is becoming childish in his ways, and, fearing death, undoubtedly, has joined the religious cause. We are now, through the agency of the Cadillac Company here, attempting to get into communication with the Managing Board of the Cadillac Co., which, as a matter of fact, happens to be the General Motors Co., and ascertain if they will not take some steps in connection with this. There are, no doubt, a great many people purchasing automobiles from other factories which are owned by the General Motors Co., who control and own the Cadillac Co.

We shall advise you of the results which we might get through this procedure. We have been advised, however, by the State Distributor of the Cadillac Co. for this state, that at the banquet given to the distributors and large sellers of the Cadillac Motors the prevailing spirit was very far from dry, the banquet starting with cock-tails and winding up with champagne, although Mr. Leland did not indulge, himself. The wet goods were in evidence, that is certain.

Any further information you are able to gather shall be appreciated by us.

Yours truly,

THE CADILLAC MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT.

Mr. Henry M. Leland, Advisory Manager, and his son Winfred Leland, continue to be bitterly opposed to our industry. The Cadillac Company has been absorbed by the General Motors Company, which is distributing a special catalogue advertising their trucks for brewery use. The heads of the General Motors Company has always been fair and friendly, but it might be well, in dealing with this Company, to protest against the action of the Cadillac people.

Mr. AUGUST GOEBEL, Jr.,
The Goebel Brewing Co., Detroit, Mich.

MY DEAR MR. GOEBEL: The New York representative of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, who married the daughter of Gottfried Krueger, the brewer of Newark, New Jersey, is very much concerned over the attitude that we have taken. I understand that he sells 20% of all the cars that the Cadillac Company makes. Evidently, we have at last gotten under the skins of the Cadillac Company, as you will see from the enclosed copy of letter from their general-manager to Mr. Upperce, their New York agent. Mr. Ruppert is anxious to find out, as soon as possible, whether there is any change in the attitude of the Cadillac people, as he was on the point of buying several of their cars. Mr. Upperce is coming to see me soon, about it. Of course, our position is: That while a manufacturer may treat his own men as he pleases, and may himself preach and practice total abstinence, he must not give financial or other assistance to our opponents. It may be perfectly true that the Cadillac Company does not contribute to the Anti-Saloon League, or any other similar organizations, but if the Lelands, who are the managers of the Company, and large stockholders, are using their profits, and their position to finance the Anti-Saloon League, and promote the fight against us, we should not assist them by giving them our business.

Is W. C. Leland active in the prohibition cause, and is his father still helping the Anti-Saloon League? These are the important questions. Of course, if the Cadillac Motor Car Company would write a letter, stating that it is opposed to prohibition, and believes that the License system is the best way of regulating the liquor traffic, we could well afford to "shake hands with them."

Yours very truly,

H. F. FOX, Secretary.

CHICAGO, March 12, 1914.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
U. S. Brewers' Ass'n, 50 Union Square, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Representatives of the General Motors Truck Company, of Pontiac, Michigan, have called upon me and asked my assistance in removing what they believe to be a boycott of their concern on the part of the brewers, both in Chicago and New York, who have been led to believe that their Company is connected with the Cadillac Company, of which Mr. Leland was formerly the Manager. They claim to have lost about one hundred thousand dollars worth of business in this city alone in consequence of this misapprehension, which they claim has been largely brought about by the action of a competing firm.

The facts, as they present them, are these, and if upon investigation, you should find them to be true, I venture to suggest that our friends in the industry should be informed of them through your office, as nothing is farther from our or their intentions than to do injustice to any one, but rather to seek and cultivate friends wherever we can find them.

The General Motors Truck Company belongs to the General Motors Company, which is a so-called holding company controlling the stock of the following concerns: The Buick Motor Co., The Oakland Motor Co., The Carter Car Co., The Oldsmobile Co., The Cadillac Motor Car Co., The General Motors Truck Co., The Welch Motor Co., The Northway Motor Co., The J. C. Ignition Co.

Each of these companies has its separate identity, and operates independently of the others. But, because of the fact that the General Motors Company also holds the stock of the Cadillac Company, brewers are refusing to buy from the General Motors Truck Co., thus holding this Company responsible for the actions of a man who was formerly the head of another concern, with which it has no connection whatever.

I do not understand that the same discrimination is being shown by brewers against the other companies whose stock the General Motors Company holds. Yet it would seem that if one of these concerns is boycotted on account of being connected with a holding Company that controls the stock of the Cadillac Company, there would be just as much reason to boycott them all.

You probably know more about all this than I do. But, I remember that it was the policy of the National Association to discourage indiscriminate action on the part of individual brewers against other manufacturers whose employees were actively working against us, believing, and I think rightly, that far better results could be obtained by a dispassionate discussion of any grievances we might have on such a score with the heads of the firms in question.

I would greatly appreciate it if you would give this matter serious attention, and let me know what you determine to do. We need all the friends we can obtain, and while I am strongly inclined to smite our enemies hip and thigh wherever I can find them, I certainly believe it to be foolish to injure hundreds of friends merely in order to hit one enemy who may be concealed among those friends.

I know you agree with me on this subject.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) PERCY ANDREAE.

GENERAL MOTORS TRUCK COMPANY,
Boston, March 13, 1914.

Mr. WALTER A. CARL,
Mgr., Roessle Brewery, 1250 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of March 11th received, and this Branch wants to assure you that this is just the kind of letters that we are very, very glad to receive. Your letter will be forwarded to the President of our company, and we will use every effort from this end of the business to show Mr. Fox that Mr. Leyland and his son are practically not concerned with any policy of the General Motors Company or its subsidiaries.

However, I know that you are willing to be reasonable with us in this matter, and of course thoroughly understand that our stock is listed on the New York Exchange, and it is impossible for this company or any other company to control the sale of listed stock to prohibitionists, and naturally it will follow, as long as we are in existence and are not a closed corporation, that some of our stock will fall into the hands of those who are adverse to the sale of intoxicants.

I can say positively, however, that it is not the policy of the General Motors Company or any of its subsidiaries, to employ men who let their sentiments get the best of their business judgment. Mr. Leyland and his son, as reported to this Branch at the present time, are simply on the Advisory Board of the Cadillac Company, which is a subsidiary company of the General Motors Company. The Truck Company is as independent of the Cadillac Company, as the Cadillac is of any other pleasure car manufacturer, either controlled by the General Motors Company, or operating with them or with some other interest.

I am acquainted personally with all the men who dictate the policies of the Truck Company, and assure you that in not a single instance can I remember of one who advocates prohibition, and most of them are among the best consumers of your product of all his acquaintances.

I believe that the lettres which we receive from you brewers all help to eliminate our difficulties along this line, and I do not believe that the brewers are distillers, or are narrow-minded enough, in any event to hold the father for the son's sins, and while I hope that you will take this letter in the spirit it is written, I do not believe that you really would turn our company down, due to one or two men's stand, who are only a very small part in our large organization, and I thoroughly believe that your letter is meant to eliminate those men if possible, and to quiet them rather than to let your sentiments get the best of your business judgment, if we have the product that will give you the best proposition for your dollars; for, Mr. Carl, if you do this you are simply working along the same tactics that you accuse Mr. Leyland, for Mr. Leyland is simply letting his sentiments get the best of his business judgment, in my mind, and I am sure that you gentlemen are not going to follow in his footsteps.

Such letters as yours only aid us egotistic part of our organization to eliminate any obstacle that any of our organization may offer to your business, and we assure you that you have our hearty cooperation. I would suggest that you Brewers flood the branches of the Truck Company with just such letters as yours, and I am sure they will have their effect.

However, please understand that at the present time, as stated above, Mr. Leyland and his son have practically nothing to do with our Company other than the stock they own, and this we cannot control.

If you will pardon repetition, I feel sure that the gentlemen in your line of business are not going to allow their sentiments to interfere with dividends of the company, and I thoroughly believe that the real meaning of your letter is simply to eliminate your enemies, more than to turn down the best for your dollars, if you are thoroughly convinced that the General Motors Truck Company can furnish you with such a proposition. However, we do admire the fighting spirit and are sure that it will win; and, as stated above, assure you that you have our hearty endorsement and cooperation.

We are very pleased to advise that your truck was shipped yesterday and we expect it to arrive in Boston in 5–10 days.

Of course, I am not acquainted with Mr. H. F. Fox, but unquestionably he must be a very unprejudiced man, or you would not act upon his advice seemingly as strenuously, but of course you know that a great deal of this talk and influence that Mr. Leyland and his son have is greatly inflated and continually agitated by our competitors, and we hope that you will discount properly such influences, due to competition.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) H. RICHARDS.

Mr. AUGUST GOEBEL, Jr.,

MY DEAR MR. GOEBEL: I am inclosing letter of March 17th, from Mr. Walter A. Carl, of the Roessle Brewery of Boston, together with copy of letter of March 13th, from the Boston branch of the General Motors Truck Company, of Detroit. I also enclose copy of letter of March 12th, from Mr. Percy Andreas, with reference to the same matter. We do not want to be unjust with the Cadillac Company, and, of course, it is to our advantage to make strong friends of the General Motors Company, and its various branches. We must, of course, be fair to the General Motors Truck Company, but I think it is advisable that we should push the matter to an issue, in connection with the Cadillac Company. This is the first time that any of the automobile people seem to have felt our displeasure and we want to try to bring them all over to a position of actual sympathy and co-operation with us in our fight against state and nat onal prohibition, if this is possible.

May I ask you again, to be kind enough to give us your latest information on this matter, and the benefit of your views? Would it not be well for you to give the Cadillac Company an opportunity of calling upon you, and squaring themselves?

I enclose, also copy of my reply to Mr. Carl.

Very truly yours,

Mr. H. F. Fox,
Secy. United States Brewers' Assoc., 50 Union Sq., New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Mr. Walter A. Carl of the Roessle Brewery, has spoken to me about the attitude of the Leylands, father and son, of the Cadillac Automobile Company, and he has loaned me your letter to him bearing upon this matter under date of March 18th. Mr. Carl feels strongly that members of our Association should bring every pressure possible to bear on the General Motors Car Truck Company to force the Leylands off the Board of the Cadillac Company, or at least to cause a cessation of their activities against our industry, and to this end he has suggested that I induce all the members of our Association who would be apt to use motor trucks to write the local agent of the General Motors Truck Company to the effect that they will purchase no trucks made by that concern until the Leyland matter is straightened out.

I brought this matter to the attent on of Mr. Lee, who feels that he does not care to take definite action on Mr. Carl's suggestion until he learns more about the situation. He would particularly like to learn more about the activities of the Leylands against us, and I think he would also like your opinion as to the wisdom of such a course as that suggested by Mr. Carl.

I note by your letter to Mr. Carl that you are taking the matter up again with Mr. Goebel of Detroit.

Will you kindly inform me as to the latest developments in this matter?

Very truly yours,

HOWARD NOBLE, Clerk.

Mr. PERCY ANDREAE,

MY DEAR MR. ANDREAE: Mr. Goebel of Detroit, who is one of our Trustees, writes me as follows:

"Just a line to let you know that we are busy on the Cadillac matter, but do not care to bother you until something definite has been accomplished. Up to date we have addressed Mr. Leland direct, in a way that we cannot see that he can possibly ignore. He, however, being out of the City at present, we have today received a letter from his Secretary, which is of a rather threatening tone and very impudent. We have the Secretary's past record, and will stir him up on that, awaiting Mr. Leland's return, when we hope to get a direct reply. As soon as we do, will let you hear from me in full. Just for your information, the Secretary is a former Baptist Minister, at which calling he proved a failure; then was a collector and speaker for the Anti-Saloon League, at which he was also a failure; so you see the close connection between Mr. Leland and the Anti-Saloon League.

As soon as I hear further from him, I will let you know.

Very truly yours,

H. F. FOX, Secretary.

[General Motors Truck Company, Pontiac, Michigan. Gasoline, Electric, Trucks. "A Truck for Every Purpose."]

MARCH 28, 1914.

Mr. EDWARD A. SCHMIDT,
President, United States Brewers' Association, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: We have known for some time of the prejudice existing in the minds of a brewer, here and there, against our truck and Company, because of the alleged temperance views of Mr. H. M. Leland and his son Mr. W. C. Leland of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, but we did not know prior to the receipt, a few days ago, of what purports to be an extract from a circular letter sent out by the United States Brewers' Association to its members, that this prejudice was national in its scope, and that it amounted in reality to a "black list" of our trucks on the part of the Brewers' Association.

While the letter above referred to does not specifically advise members of the Association not to buy "GMC" trucks, yet its intent is undoubtedly to prejudice them against our Company.

As a result, one brewer to whom one of our Branches recently sold a truck, has written the Branch a letter—calling attention to this circular letter and to his conversation with Mr. H. F. Fox, Secretary of the United States Brewers' Association—from which we quote

"No matter how good your trucks are, I shall buy no additional trucks from your concern unless Mr. Fox advises me that this matter has been settled satisfactorily to him. I know one brewer who has held up an order for three trucks for the same reason."

A short time ago Mr. Percy Andreae, President of the National Association of Commerce and Labor—which Association we understand is closely allied to the National Brewers' and Distillers' Associations—made a speech before the Brewers' Association of Chicago in which he took the position that all the brewers and distillers wanted was "fair play."

If this is your position then you must, of course be willing to accord to others what you ask for yourselves. All we ask is "fair play"—we neither ask nor expect favors. We have solicited business from the brewers the same as we have from business concerns in other lines of trade. We have spent a good deal of money and time assisting brewers in working out efficient delivery systems—in helping them to arrive at accurate delivery costs—in making demonstrations and in advertising in their publications. In many instances when we had every reason to believe our proposition was being favorably considered, an invisible barrier has been interposed. We now understand that this barrier was neither price nor quality, but unfounded prejudice against our Company.

When we lose in a fair fight we go down smiling, but we insist that the opposition of your Association is unfair and we base this statement on the following facts:

We are discriminated against, and the members of your organization restrained from buying our goods because of the views of the Lelands, who are in no way connected with our Company. Neither of them are, or ever have been, officials or employes of this Company—and neither of them own any of its stock. They are, however, indirectly connected with the General Motors Company as employes of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, which is as separate and distinct from our Company—though controlled by the same holding company—as is the Brewers' Association.

To make the matter clear, it might be well to explain that the General Motors Company is a sixty million dollar corporation, organized under the laws of New Jersey as a holding company for twenty-four subsidiary companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of automobiles. Each unit has its separate officers, directors and managers—conducts its own affairs—and is separate and distinct from the others in its management and policy.

As corroborative proof of the integrity of this statement I am sending you under separate cover a copy of the General Motors Company's statement and report to stock holders for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1913, issued under date of September 26, 1913, and invite your attention to the printed list of officers on page three and to the list of subsidiary companies on page fifteen.

I am sure that any member of your organization could have ascertained and verified these facts had they taken the trouble to dig into it, which rather forces the belief that the action which led your Association into taking such a position was wrongly conceived and that the thought which inspired those responsible for your organization's attitude was, that perhaps the General Motors Company might bring pressure to stop public utterance on the part of the Lelands, or deem it advisable—in view of the action taken by your Association—to dismiss them from its employ.

It may be said in defense of your position that no such thought prompted your action—yet according to our information your only objection to our product and Company is the alleged position of the Lelands which you have construed as antagonistic to your interests. If this is true then the elimination of the Lelands would have the effect of removing all objection to our truck and Company.

But you must now realize that, as a holding Company only, the General Motors Company is without power to take such action—even if it desired to do so.

At the present time Mr. H. M. Leland is President of the Society of Automobile Engineers whose standards are universally employed by automobile manufacturers—both pleasure and commercial—gasoline and electric—no automobile or truck could be marketed in this country that was not built to S. A. E. standards.

Mr. Leland, therefore, has as much to do with or say about Packard, White, Pierce-Arrow, Mack, General Vehicle and Baker trucks as about "GMC" trucks, and no more.

We do not believe you could consistently refuse to buy trucks or pleasure cars built to S. A. E. standards because Mr. H. M. Leland is President of the Society that promulgates the standard, yet, the position your organization has taken against us is equally untenable.

Mr. W. C. Leland is now and has been for more than five years a director and member of the executive committee of the Automobile Chamber of Commerce and its predecessor, the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers, to which Association every prominent automobile and truck manufacturer in this country (except Ford) belongs. Therefore, Mr. W. C. Leland is as closely allied to others as to us—and no more so—and you cannot discriminate against us and let the balance go free and maintain your position for "fair play."

Apart from the fact that the Lelands have no connection with this Company, is it good business on your part—in these days of prohibition agitation when friends rather than enemies are needed—to seize upon the personal views of two employees of the Cadillac Motor Car Company and disregard the twenty thousand odd voters on the pay-rolls of the General Motors Company?

While we do not question the right of any man or association to buy from whom they please, we do feel that we have a right, moral and legal, to protest against the influence of your organization being used to restrain such of your members as are convinced that it would be profitable for them to purchase our goods.

Having presented our side of this matter, which we feel is as important from a financial standpoint to the members of your Association as it is to us, we ask the courtesy of an early reply.

Very truly yours,

GENERAL MOTORS TRUCK COMPANY.

MAR. 30, 1914.

Mr. EDWARD A. SCHMIDT,
127 Edward Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. SCHMIDT: The manager of the General Motors Truck Company, Pontiac, Michigan, has sent me copy of his letter to you of the 28th instant "for my information and consideration."

We have never said anything that could be construed as an attack upon the General Motors Company, or indeed any of its branches, excepting the Cadillac people. I enclose our circular letter of February 21st, which deals with the matter.

I enclose for your consideration copies of my letters of March 4th to Mr. Ruppert, March 5th to Mr. Goebel, March 18th to Mr. Goebel and to Mr. An-dreae, also copy of letter dated March 24th from Mr. Goebel. You will see from his letter that he is at work on the Cadillac matter; their attitude is perhaps best indicated by the enclosed copy of their letter dated December 13th, 1911, to the Pennsylvania Wholesale Liquor Dealers League.

The brewer to whom the manager of the General Motors Truck Company refers in his letter to you is undoubtedly Mr. Ruppert, who is apparently on very friendly terms with the president of the General Motors Truck Company.

The General Motors Truck Company is a holding company which controls the stock of the following concerns: The Buick Motor Co., The Oakland Motor Co., The Carter Car Co., The Oldsmobile Co., The Cadillac Motor Car Co., The General Motors Truck Co., The Welch Motor Co., The Northway Motor Co., The J. C. Ignition Co.

I understand that the Cadillac is the branch that pays best. On February 17th, 1914, Mr. C. W. Nash, President of the General Motors Company wrote Mr. Ruppert a personal letter in which he promised to give the Cadillac matter his personal attention. I enclose a copy of this also, and will add that I consulted Mr. Ruppert before sending out our circular letter of February 21st, and he requested me to go ahead with it.

This automobile matter has involved a great deal of correspondence, and of course, it would save me a good deal of personal trouble and embarrassment if I could be relieved of such matters entirely. At the same time I think the results have justified the work particularly in these hard times, for it is literally true that one manufacturer after another who has been opposing us has been brought to terms, and in a number of cases has been changed from an opponent to a friend. I have been extremely guarded in my letters and statements, but find that some of our members have sometimes been very indiscreet. The pressure we get from our members to take steps in such cases is considerable. I have had scores of letters from brewers about the Cadillac concern, for example, although on the other hand I know there are a number of brewers who have bought Cadillac cars in spite of the information we have given them.

By way of suggestion, I have drafted a letter to the General Motors Truck Company (please note that this is only one of the subsidiaries of the General Motors Co.) for your consideration.

Very truly, yours,

H. F. Fox, Secretary.

MARCH 31, 1914.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
Secretary, United States Brewers Association,
50 Union Square, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I am in receipt of your communication of March 30th, enclosing copies of all the correspondence in connection with the unfriendly attitude of certain automobile manufacturers to our trade, also the copy of letter which is to be my reply to that of Vice President and General Manager Day of The General Motors Truck Co.

I note in your letter that you say "The General Motors Truck Company is the holding company which controls the stock of the following concerns." I think this is a mistake. The General Motors Company is the holding company for these concerns, and it is my impression that our people have confounded the two companies.

As you state, I know of no opposition that could be offered to the products of The General Motors Truck Company, and, therefore, cheerfully authorize you to send the proposed reply to Mr. Day's letter, and also take steps to issue a letter to our Members which will place them in the right light.

I also have your letter of March 30th, stating that Mr. Robert J. Halle, secretary of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, has called a meeting of the Joint Harmony Committee of Fifteen, which is to be held in the club room of the New Willard Hotel, Washington, April 10th, and note that you expect to attend this meeting. I am sorry that this meeting is to be held in Washington at this time. In my opinion, nothing should be done that will tend to obtrude our question in any manner there. Any other city would have been preferable. It will be impossible for me to be present.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association.

DEAR SIRS: The General Motors Truck Company of Pontiac, Michigan, has call our attention in courteous terms to the fact that there is an unfounded prejudice against their company on the part of the brewers, because of the opposition of the Lelands of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, to the beer trade.

We are assured that the "General Motors Company is a holding company for twenty-four subsidiary companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of automobiles. Each unit has its separate officers, directors and managers; conducts its own affairs and is separate and distinct from the others in its management and policy."

We believe that the General Motors Truck Company is fair and friendly in its relations to the brewing industry, and is entitled to your consideration upon its merits.

When this matter was brought to our attention in such a way as to give the impression that your Association had considered it of such serious import as to justify you in taking it up with your members, we decided that we were justified in taking it up with you; having every confidence that we would be—as we have been—accorded fair and square treatment by your Association.

I certainly appreciate the promptness with which you fulfilled your promise "to put us in the right light" with your members, and on my next trip to New York—which I hope to make during the present month—should like very much to call on you and go over the matter personally as there are many details connected with the matter that you should know about, which can best be taken up in a personal interview.

MY DEAR MR. DAY: I have your favor of the 2nd inst. and have wired the Schoenhofen Brewing Company, of Chicago, as follows:

"I am informed that your representative at Salt Lake is in the market to buy motors truck, but will not consider General Motors truck on account of Leland's temperance views. The General Motors Company is very friendly to us, and is in no way responsible for Leland, but is doing its utmost to persuade the Cadillac Company to be reasonable. We believe that the General Motors Company is entitled to favorable consideration."

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,

DEAR SIR: On many occasions my Brewer friends have called my attention to the fact that I should not have a Cadillac Automobile, because the Cadillac people are very strong Prohibitionists. Some of them have told me that the Cadillac people are so strict, that they have forbidden their employees to take a drink on penalty of dismissal, if they are caught.

Some time ago, I had a talk with Mr. Wm. Krueger, of Newark, on the subject, and Mr. Krueger assured me that there was no truth in the rumor. As you no doubt know, Mr. Uppercue, the President of the Detroit Cadillac Motor Car Company, is married to Mr. Krueger's sister.

Mr. Krueger further stated that he had talked to you on the subject at one time, and if I wanted any definite information regarding the matter, I should write to you.

I am about to sell my present Cadillac Car and buy a new one, but before doing so I would like to hear from you as to what the true conditions are with the Cadillac people on the question of Prohibition.

Trusting that I may be favored with an early reply, and with kindest regards, I am,

DEAR SIR: On February 21, 1912 we issued a circular letter in which we stated that Mr. W. O. Leeland, of the Cadillac Motor Car Company was aggressively antagonistic, and the the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association reported that the entire Company was aiding and abetting the Anti Saloon League.

On April 3, 1914 we issued a supplimentary letter with information regarding the General Motors Truck Company. I am enclosing a copy of this circular letter. As far as we know, there has been no change in the attitude of the Cadillac Company itself, but the General Motors Company of which the Cadillac is a part is alright.

Yours very truly,

MW.
Todd.

Maj. HUMES. Is not that a fact? You have a recollection of this transaction now, Mr. Fox.

Mr. FOX. I have a very clear recollection of the efforts made by the General Motors Co. to be regarded as friendly, and a rather vague recollection that we were not satisfied with regard to the Cadillac Motor Car Co. because of the fact that, as I recall it, their principal officers, or some of their principal officers, were the leaders of the opposition.

Maj. HUMES. Because the sales manager, Mr. Leland, who had no stock in the company, advocated the temperance cause, you boycotted the corporation, did you not, and you tried to get the General Motors Co. to get rid of Leland, and they advised you they had no control over him, that that was a separate company, and that it had its own independent organization?

Mr. FOX. I see here that it says:

W. C. Leland has a managerial position with the Cadillac Co. He is the son of Henry M. Leland, the general manager of the company. Henry M. Leland is active in the Anti-Saloon League and has always been very active in any movement against saloons.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. FOX. That apparently gives color to it.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, then, these people were employees. It was not the activity of the corporation itself that caused you affront, but the activity of an individual employee?

Mr. FOX. My impression is that the Lelands were very largely interested in the company, one or other of them, and practically controlled its policy. That was my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. And you did on April 3, 1914, give a clear bill of health to the General Motors Co., however, and distinguished between it and the Cadillac Motor Car Co.?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The Madison Cooper Co.——

Mr. FOX. I identify it.

Maj. HUMES. That is correspondence from the files of the Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir. I do not recall it.

By the way, can you tell me in confidence whether the Madison Cooper Company is an important concern, and what line of people they do business with?

MY DEAR MR. FOX: Your favor of the 8th inst. at hand. I had not noticed the article referred to in "Cold" but have now read same with interest.

In reply to your inquiry would state that the Madison Cooper Company is not a very important concern but they do quite a little business, which is mostly in the construction of small cold storage houses equipped with the Madison Cooper Gravity Brine System using ice and salt.

The publication is a house organ and is made possible by the few advertisements which they have secured. Most of those advertising are also doing business with the brewing industry, but it is fair to them to state that probably they do not advertise in the publication for its advertising value, but simply on account of the business that the Madison Cooper Company may give them directly. I do not think that the publication has any particular influence.

RECORD.

This business was established in Watertown N. Y. by Madison Cooper. Incorporated under New York State laws in 1905, and six years later the plant was moved to this Village. Business has been continued with a clear record.

STATEMENTS.

The authorized capital is $20,000. $15,000. issued for the business assets, patent rights and good will and the balance sold for cash. The following is a summary of statements furnished since the company moved to this village.

Date.	Assets.	Liabilities.	Net worth.
1911	$42,225.11	$6,513.05	$35,712.06
1912	67,072.83	27,522.71	39,550.12
1913	61,901.55	20,686.01	41,215.54

Under date of Aug. 14, 1914 the President made the following statement, showing the condition of the company at the close of business June 30, 1914:

RESOURCES.

Cash in bank	$1,167.51
Accts. rec	14,123.56
Real estate, Calcium, N. Y	1,253.35
Sidetrack, " " "	529.99
Manufacturing plant	14,873.51
Finished and unfinished material on hand	15,023.07
Tools and fixtures	3,440.39
Patents and good will	13,090.74
	$63,502.12

LIABILITIES.

Bills payable	$7,497.18
Accts. payable	8,318.35
Received on account of unfinished work	3,385.69
Undivided profits	24,300.90
Capital stock	20,000.00
	$63,502.12

GENERAL INFORMATION.

While the above statement is correct it is believed that allowances should be made in determining the actual cash value of the different items. Their plant is practically new and undoubtedly cost the amount claimed, or more, but could not be sold for that sum if forced on the market. The patents and good will are of value only to the company and cannot be called a tangible asset. Banking and other authorities believe that an estimate placing company's responsibility at from $15,000. to $20,000. is reasonable.

A comparison of statements indicates a gradual financial progress but for several years their indebtedness has been rather heavy although it has been reduced somewhat during the year.

Those interested are highly regarded in all respects, the business is under the personal supervision of Mr. M. Cooper who is regarded an expert in this line and has been quite successful.

At the bank the company has been granted such accommodations as have been asked. In the trade have been taking full time, having the confidence of creditors who consider the risk a good one.

TRADE INFORMATION.

1. Sold in Jan. 1914, invoice $800. terms 2% 10 net 30 paid 60 to 90 days slow.
2. Sold during the past summer to the extent of about $25. on terms of 30 days, Payments made in about 60 days.
3. Account has been sold for several years and payments have been very slow.

UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION,
50 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK,
New York, February 27, 1915.

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN: The following is submitted for the information of our members:

* * * * * * * *

The Madison Cooper Company, Refrigerating Engineers & Architects, Calcium, Jefferson Co., N. Y.: In the February issue of Cold, published by this concern, the following statement is made, editorially: "We are surprised as well as disappointed to read in the report of the annual banquet of the American Society of Refrigerating Engineers, that this society has found it necessary to defend the liquor interests. It was stated that a brewery in the South which cost $275.000 was sold for $30,000, and another which cost $375,000 was sold for $45,000. This, in our opinion, is a result greatly to be desired. We are not prepared to state that this country is ready for national prohibition, but those who are interested in breweries and other properties for the production of malt beverages and spirituous liquors might as well recognize 'the hand writing on the wall' and plan accordingly. All arguments in favor of booze and the drinking habit are of a negative nature only, and none of them can possibly be a direct defense."

Yours very truly.

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

Maj. HUMES. The Macey Co.: Is it not a fact that you notified the trade that they were unfair, and afterwards, after getting some assurances, took them off the unfair list?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall the transaction, but the correspondence is identified.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the two bulletins. In 1914 you sent out a bulletin adverse to the concern, and on February 27, 1915, you sent out a correction, and noted it as a correction, did you not?

Mr FOX. Yes; that is correct.

(The documents referred to are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

EXHIBIT FILE FF.

For members only—Not for publication. United States Brewers' Association, 50 Union Square, New York. Vol. 4. December (1914) Bulletin. No. 2.]

To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

In this and future issues our Bulletin will convey information to our members regarding the trend of the anti-alcohol movement, as indicated by articles in special publications and in current books and periodicals. It will report and interpret the serious discussions of all phases of the alcohol and saloon questions, for the purpose of informing and arousing our members to the importance of the issues that confront us.

ALCOHOL AND INDUSTRY.

This is a new slogan for our antagonists and one which is being most effectively used. Clearer and clearer the signs of the times point that this way lies a future battle ground. The Anti-Saloon League has been in existence about 20 years, and until the last year or so has made its whole argument a moral one. Now, taking its cue from such men as Charles Stelzle, John Mitchel, etc., it is shifting its base of opposition to economic grounds. Through co-operation with some big industries it is enabled to circulate its leaflets in factories and has apparently joined hands with the "Safety-First Movement." The passage in many states of Workmen's Compensation laws, which place the burden of proof on the employer instead of on the employee, has made this an easy transition for the League.

The Technical World Magazine of Chicago, Ill., in 1915 is going to run a series of articles on "Why Industry Cannot Afford Alcohol." It makes this announcement under the head lines, "Did Booze Ever Do You Any Good?"

Some time ago this office received a communication from a gentleman, who was to write an article for The Technical World on this subject and asked for any data we might give him. We invited him to make use of our library, but he never replied to our letter. The bias of the forthcoming articles can be forecasted.

The Engineering and Mining Journal, New York City, in its issue of November 21st. has an editorial, "Alcoholic Liquor and Mining," commenting upon the fact that two important mining States, Arizona and Colorado, went "dry." It says: "This was no great ground for surprise, the incompatibility of whisky with efficient work in mining having long been recognized. Indeed, mine operators in Arizona, Colorado and Montana have lately been emphatic in deploring the evil tendency of the saloon upon the economics of the industry, especially in increasing liability to personal accidents and decreasing working efficiency. The direct waste of resources, the absence of thrift and the high cost of policing are further results to the community that may be traced to alcohol in a more or less degree, chiefly more."

The Steel Works Mixer is published by the employees of the Joliet Steel Mills. In its November number there is an article on the "Safety First Movement" and "Driving Back the Saloon." Several concerns which have gone on record against the saloon are mentioned in the article. At the recent convention of the American Foundrymen's Association a paper was read on this subject; at a meeting of the National Congress on Industrial Safety Held in Chicago in October it was pointed out that not a single member came in defense of drinking.

Mr. E. K. Prichett, of the Macey Co. of Grand Rapids, Mich., states that his company has forbidden the use of alcoholic beverages and has made arrangements with milk companies to have their wagons call at the factories at 10 o'clock every morning.

The Diamond Watch Co. issued an order on June 1st, 1914, that all employees of the company must refrain from using intoxicating liquors and employment would be refused to men known to frequent saloons.

The U. S. Steel Co., of Youngstown, O.; the Pittsbugh Steel Co.; The Lukens Iron and Steel Co., of Coatesville, Pa., have all declared against the saloon. The American Sheet and Tin Plate Co. have prohibited the use of intoxicating beverages by their employees. and the American Car and Foundry Co. have announced that men who frequent saloons will be replaced as soon as possible by those who do not.

WHAT THE UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION IS DOING.

The United States Brewers' Association is having a thorough investigation made of the relation of Alcohol to Industrial and Railroad Accidents, which will, we believe, disprove completely the extravagant assertions that are being circulated as to the alcohol-cause of such accidents.

ALCOHOL AND RACE BETTERMENT.

The Proceedings of the First National Conference on Race Betterment, held at Battle Creek, Michigan. in January of this year, has just been issued. The purpose of the Conference was to assemble evidence as to the extent to which degenerative tendencies are actively at work in America, and to promote agencies for Race Betterment. Many prominent names are listed in the delegates and members of the Conference, and there is no doubt that it was a thoroughly representative gathering and that quotations and excerpts from Proceedings will be often used by social reformers. It is, therefore, well to note the general trend of the sentiment expressed affecting our own industry.

One important paper was that of Mr. Arthur Hunter, Vice-President Acturial Society of America, and Actuary of the New York Life Insurance Company. His subject was "The Effect of Alcohol on Longevity." Mr. Hunter gives reputable proofs for his conclusions as to the relation of mortality and alcohol. If he is a representative speaker, there is no doubt that insurance companies will be found allied with forces distinctly antagonistic to the liquor industry. He says: "I have been in the actuarial profession for over twenty years, and have had the opportunity of studying, not only the published statistics, but many private investigations. I cannot recall a single large class of men or women using alcohol freely but not immoderately at the date of application for insurance, or who had used it in excess formerly and were now temperate, that did not have a higher mortality than the normal. While not a total abstainer, I am convinced that it would be immeasurably better for this, or any other country, to have the production and sale of alcoholic liquors abolished if it were practicable. The advantages claimed for alcohol are a small offset, in my judgment, to the evils which proceed from its use and its abuse."

Dr. Henry Smith Williams proposed a constructive measure of reform in his paper, "Alcohol—What Shall We Do About It?" Dr. Williams would put a very high tax on distilled beverages and encourage in all possible ways the sale of light wines and beer as against the heavier beverages. "Alcoholism," he said, "is always an effect. The normal person will not become a drunkard even if liquor ran free from the fountains at the street corners, but the abnormal person, with a lust for alcohol, will get it if he must go through fire and possibly water for it."

Professor Robert Sprague, Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass., spoke on the subject of the licensing of light drinks. He had come to feel the significance of this subject after having lived some years in the State of Maine. He believed that the people of Maine were drinking "the worst stuff that has ever been poured into the human system." To license light drinks and adopt some measure which would work for the gradual elimination of strong drinks, would do much, according to Professor Sprague, towards solving the liquor question. He is not a believer in National Prohibition. "I don't believe that if a man out on the Pacific Coast wants to take a glass of beer, I, as a citizen of Massachusetts, have a right to say that he shall not. I believe it is contrary to the very spirit of American liberty."

A SWEDISH COMMITTEE OF FIFTY.

The November number of the Journal of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology has an article by Olaf Kinberg on "Alcohol and Criminality." Dr. Kinberg is professor of psychiarty and medico-legal psychiarty and Director of the City Hospital at Stockholm. His point of investigation is to discover "to what extent crimes committed in a state of alcoholic intoxication should be condoned?" The sources of the article are for the most part taken from the report of the Swedish Medical Society. The forthcoming Year Book of our Association will contain a lengthy resumé of this report.

THE SALOON AND THE "MOVIES."

Commenting editorially on this subject, this same publication notes the decrease of saloons in neighborhoods where moving picture shows are increasing in number. "This would seem to justify the position of those who hold the idea that the saloon is the poor man's club, and that the saloon can only be put permanently out of business by positive 'substitutes' and not by negative legislation."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

This is the title of an article by Ella Seass Stewart, ex-President Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, and former Secretary of National American Woman Suffrage Association, in the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science for November. The official position of the author gives especial weight to her thesis. "Suffragists," she writes, "know the futility of hoping to gain either the support or the cessation of hostilities of those who profit in any financial or political manner from the liquor traffic. We know that the center and strength of the anti-woman suffrage army are the liquor traffic and its vicious allies."

Not only do the suffragists believe the liquor interests to be against them, but they repay the compliment in turn, as witness: "The testimony of reliable people in the Western States is to the effect that the efforts to curb saloon power have been put forth largely by women and that here as everywhere the majority of women are against the saloon. In Colorado, California, Oregon and Washington, which have just had campaigns for State-wide prohibition, the work of securing the signatures for the referendum is credited largely to women.

"In Illinois, where women were enfranchised in 1913, it is estimated that over 65 per cent. of women voting at local option elections since that time recorded their votes against the saloon. In the city of Jacksonville, 3,600 of the 4,000 eligible women voted, out of this 3,600 only 654 voted for the saloon."

It is the author's opinion, and it is apparent that she speaks as "one in authority," that the women will vote in the future as they are voting now. She bases her conclusion on the action taken by the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which met in Chicago, June, 1914. Without one dissenting voice the convention declared that:

"Since the liquor traffic is responsible for three-fourths of the crime, vice and misery in this country,

"Be it Resolved, That the women of the General Federation place themselves on record as opposed to the liquor traffic and in favor of such federal or state laws as will tend to eradicate this evil."

SECRETARY OF STATE BRYAN TO THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

Under the caption of "The Alcoholic Milestone," Mr. Bryan publishes a signed editorial in The Commoner of November 22nd, calling upon the Democratic Party to align itself against the rum business of the United States. In this same issue he has an editorial on "The Saloon vs. Woman Suffrage," in which he suggests that the woman suffrage cause suffered defeat in Nebraska at the hands of the liquor interests. "In a little while," he says, "the people will understand WHO are the real forces against woman suffrage, and WHY—and then 'votes for women' will win by an overwhelming majority."

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL ON PROHIBITION.

"The Smiths are Waking Up" is the cheerful title of an article in the December number of The Ladies' Home Journal. "The Smiths" have awakened to the fact that "rum is on the run" and National Prohibition is only a few weeks off. "The Smiths" intimate that it's the hard liquors that have caused the trouble, and that the average employer objects to whisky and not to the lighter beverages.

Mr. G. A. KUSTERER,

MY DEAR MR. KUSTERER: In our December Bulletin we made the following statement:

"Mr. E. K. Prichett, of the Macey Company, of Grand Rapids, Mich. states that his company has forbidden the use of alcoholic beverages and has made arrangements with milk companies to have their wagons call at the factories at ten o'clock every morning."

on the strength of a newspaper dispatch. The Ph. Kling Brewing Company of Detroit, took the matter up with a representative of The Macey Company, and it brought out the following letter from the President of the Macey Co., under date of January 21st:

"Your letter of the 20th advising us that Mr. Kling is fighting us and our goods because we are antagonistic to the brewing interests, also that we are charged on "reliable information" with notices to that effect posted through our buildings, is received.

"You may say to Mr. Kling or anybody else that the management of The Macey Company does not concern itself with the religion, politics or personal liberty of its employes—those things are none of our concern.

"Some time ago our Secretary was misquoted by a Chicago paper as per enclosed clipping, which one of our employes posted near his work. We of course do not encourage the use of liquor during working hours.

"The executives of this Company are all liberal men in their views and habits as you must know. The writer is for temperance in all things, but is opposed to fads and isms—including the whole prohibition movement, and always has been. Such movements do no good, they injure business and breed hypocrites.

"Let Mr. Kling ask the breweries here where we stand; the whole of his information is positively untrue, unfair and silly."

May I ask if you will be kind enough to give me what information you can on the matter? If we have done any injustice to The Macey Company, we should, of course, correct it at the earliest possible moment.

Awaiting your reply, I am.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., January 28, 1915.

Mr. H. F. Fox,
50 Union Square, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Replying to the Macey Company's attitude on our question which you mention in your letter of January 26th, I can assure you that Mr. Werneke, the President of the Company is very liberal minded in his views, and a great club-man in his home City; in fact to remove all doubts from the minds of anyone regarding his attitude on the prohibition question. The fact that he volunteered to appear at a Joint Session of our last Legislature and speak against the submission of State Wide Prohibition, and I am sorry to say through poor arrangements that were made through Mr. W. C. Manchester the old attorney for the Michigan State Brewers Ass'n., Mr. Wernecke was not given an opportunity to be heard, but all the time was occupied by Mr. Manchester himself and Ex-Secretary of State of Maine, Davis.

I was present at this meeting in Lansing, and Mr. Werneke and myself occupied the same room for the night. Regarding Mr. Pritchard the Secretary and Mr. Tobey the Treasurer of the Company, they are also considered fair minded men, and are not in the habit of mixing up in politics whatsoever. So I think if any injustice has been done this Company through the article which appeared in the Brewers Bulletin, the same should be corrected at once.

I am anxiously awaiting the arrival of a U. S. B. A. organizer for Emmet and Grand Traverse Counties. We are getting a line on all the different counties that are to vote, and I am sure that quite a number of them will want speakers, and literature, and I have informed them to notify me just as soon as possible regarding same. My idea regarding the literature proposition would be this; to have the U. S. B. A. submit the different pamphlets you have on hand to the local committee of the different counties, and have them select the matter which they would think would be most appropriate for their particular locality, and have them furnish you a mailing list for the distribution of the same. I am of the opinion that literature that may be effective in one county would not be appropriate for another, consequently the idea to have the local committee select same looks practical to me.

These ten counties that are now wet if properly handled should remain so, and I am pleased to say that most of the counties that I have heard from they have made an excelent start in organizing for their present campaign.

Please furnish me as soon as possible with the list of speakers that we might draw from and also if Mr. C. Homer Durand could be secured for a few speaches, as he has had considerable experience along these lines with good results in some of the counties that are are again voting on this question.

Awaiting an early reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

G. A. KUSTERER.

AKRON, OHIO, March 15th, 1915.

Mr. HUGH FOX,
Secy., United States Brewers Ass'n.,
50 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: It has been brought to our attention that our business with the brewers in various sections has suffered because of an impression which is prevalent among them, that this Company gave financial assistance to the recent State Prohibition campaign in Ohio. It is also charged that we were officially antagonistic to the cause of the brewing interests. We wish to go on record, therefore, as protesting that such an impression is absolutely erroneous.

Nothing has ever been done by this Company which could correctly be construed as inimical to the brewing interests. The only way in which we can explain this situation is by the possible confusion of our name with that of another concern whose name is very similar to our own, which may have adopted tactics such as we have been charged with.

It occurred to us in view of the foregoing and the friendly relation which has always existed between this Company and the brewers of the country, that you would have no objection to sending out a circular letter over your signature correcting the wrong impression which prevails in various quarters on this subject.

Thanking you sincerely in advance for anything you may be willing to do in this connection, we are

Very truly yours,

MR. HUGH F. FOX,

DEAR MR. FOX: Replying to your inquiry of March 16th we quote from letter received to-day from party with whom we communicated to secure information concerning the attitude of the Goodrich Tire Company on the liquor question.

"In The B. F. Goodrich Rubber Compnay, we understand that two of the Directors made a contribution of $100.00 each to The Anti-Saloon League. Just at the time the campaign started, we had one of our men go to The Goodrich Company for an interview, and he met Mr. H. E. Joy, General Superintendent of the Company, and had a long interview with him, in which Mr. Joy stated that they were in sympathy with the Wet interests, but that they would be unable to take any stand on account of previous experience, which showed that which way the heads of the Company took sides, the men in the factory would take the opposite. He claimed that they were enjoying a large business from the Brewers and allied interests, and in no way could they take sides with the Drys. This is, of course, an extremely large Company, employing about 15,000 people, and during the campaign we, of course, heard of a good many of their Foremen in their different departments, who were Dry and in fact, had a letter from one of their Foremen, which was sent to your headquarters in Cincinnati, and returned to me, and this was sent to Mr. Joy, who said that in the future, we would hear no more of any sides taken by his men. Of coruse, they have several Directors and as stated before, two of them donated $100.00 each to The Anti-Saloon League.

"In reference to The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, wish to state that we have information that the President of the Company donated $100.00 to The Anti-Saloon League.

"In reference to The Miller Rubber Company, who also make Tires, wish to state that their management was actively engaged upon the Dry side, and were open and outspoken in favor of Prohibition, notwithstanding the fact that the General Manager's father made most of his money in the saloon business, and owned some buildings in Akron, which at the present time, are occupied for saloon purposes. His reason being that they would be able to speed up their men, and get better efficiency.

"This is practically all the information that I have, and I received my information, in reference to donations made by The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company and The Goodrich Company, from a Director of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company."

I wish to thank you for the twelve copies of your 1914 Year Book which arrived several days ago, and for your trouble in sending a copy of same to Mr. Earl F. Bauer.

THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY,
1780–82 Broadway, New York City, March 25, 1915.

Messrs. THE F. & M. SCHAEFER BREWING CO.,
114 East 51st Street, New York City.

DEAR SIRS: We learn from our representative, Mr. McKenna, that you are desirous of knowing our position with regard to our stand on Prohibition.

To combat this agitation there has been effected, as you are well aware, a Manufacturers' and Dealers' League. For your information we wish to advise that we are members of the Ohio Association with headquarters at Cleveland, and have joined the Western Pennsylvania, New York, Chicago and Philadelphia Associations.

It is the belief of this company that the present agitation is not fair or just, and such views have been expressed by the home office of this company to the representative in that district who has promised to oppose any legislation along these lines.

The foregoing, we believe, outlines our attitude and, we trust is what you wished to know.

Very truly yours,

THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY,

THE M. BURKHARDT BREWING CO.,
Akron, Ohio, U. S. A., Mar. 26, 1915.

Mr. WM. F. HESS,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR WILL: Your letter of yesterday to hand and contents noted. The B. F. Goodrich Company and The B. F. Goodrich Tire Company are one and the same corporation. The company that The B. F. Goodrich Company's letter refers to is evidently The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company.

In my own mind and from what I have heard, I believe that one of the directors of The B. F. Goodrich Company did make a contribution to the anti-saloon league. However, they have denied it through different channels and the only proof that we really have that they did contribute was that someone saw the name of one of the Directors on a subscription list, which was being circulated for funds.

Personally, I feel that the Rubber Companies of Akron have been given enough airing on this question. The Goodyear Company admits their mistake and are willing to do anything reasonable to set themselves right in the minds of the Brewers. What more can you ask?

The B. F. Goodrich Company, through their letters, have shown where they stand, and possibly through misjudgment on the part of one of Directors, one did contribute to the Anti-saloon League, and I believe that the Companies writing as they do, are willing to do right and that we should really drop the matter from further discussion.

I note that The Goodrich Company ask a circular letter to be sent out throughout the trade, to show their standing—I believe this will be a mistake, and be unfair to The Goodyear Company, who have used every endeavor to be square since the last election.

In the letter of The B. F. Goodrich Co., where they state that nothing has ever been done by that Company, which could be correctly be construed as an inimical to the brewing interests, neither was anything done by their Company to show that they were in favr of the brewing interests. So I feel that since the Goodyear Company wants to be fair, and The Goodrich Company claims they are fair, in justice to both, I think the matter ought to be dropped. I am

DEAR SIR: It has come to our attention that through malicious intent, or lack of knowledge of the facts in the matter, someone has caused a rumor to be circulated among the Metropolitan brewers to the effect that this Company is in sympathy with the agitation favoring prohibition.

For your information, we wish to advise that we are members of the Ohio Association with headquarters at Cleveland, and have joined the Western Pennsylvania, New York, Chicago and Philadelphia Associations.

We believe that our action in joining your various asssociations is sufficient answer to the question, and we would thank you to refute any statement to the contrary which may come to your attention.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 15th, and while we appreciate your position, I do not think it would be advisable to issue such a letter as you propose. We shall, however, be pleased to do anything that we can to correct any prejudice that may exist. May I suggest that you refer any inquiries to us? Will you kindly let me know whether the B. F. To the Members of the United States Brewers' Association:

GENTLEMEN: The following is submitted to you without prejudice, for your information:

Hudson Motor Car Company, Detroit: The recent correspondence with this company speaks for itself.

JANUARY 6TH, 1914.

MR. HUGH F. FOX,
Sec'y, U. S. Brewers' Ass'n., New York City.

DEAR SIR: It has been called to our attention that your Association still has us on the "unfair" list.

We believe that our name was placed on this list quite sometime ago, due possibly to some belief on the part of Mr. J. L. Hudson, former president of the Hudson Company. Mr. Hudson has been dead for a long time, and if we are still on the "unfair" list, we feel that our name should be taken off.

(Signed) E. C. MORSE,
Sales Manager.

JANUARY 13TH, 1914.

MR. E. C. MORSE,
Sales Manager, Hudson Motor Car Company, Detroit, Mich.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 6th inst., and beg to assure you that we do not maintain any "unfair" list. I think, however, it is probable that your former manager, Mr. J. L. Hudson's connection with the Anti-Saloon League was a matter of unfavorable comment in the Trade Journals that are identified with the brewing industry.

May I suggest that it might be advisable for your company to take some specific action, that we could quote in our Monthly Bulletin to the brewers of the United States? This might take the form of a letter from your Company or President, expressing his views on the attitude of your Company on the prohibition question, for example.

I shall be glad to do anything that I can to help you in the matter, if you will put me in the position to do so.

(Signed) HUGH F. FOX,
Secretary.

JANUARY 22, 1914.

MR. HUGH F. FOX,
Sec'y, U. S. Brewers' Ass'n., New York City.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of the 13th, you are mistaken as regards Mr. Hudson's connection with this Company. He was only a small stockholder, and at no time had any active part in the management of the institution.

So far as the officials of the Hudson Co. are concerned, each man thinks for himself, and the company does not attempt to exercise any influence over the personal opinion of any individual in the organization.

President.

Maj. HUMES. The Garford Truck Co. was carried by your organization and the trade notified that it was unfair, was it not, until Garford disposed of his interest, and it was taken over by another concern, and then it was restored by you to future favor with the organization?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall the particulars, sir, but I identify all this correspondence.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to your own circular to refresh your recollection. Did you not so inform the trade, that Mr. Garford had disposed of his interest in the company? Your circular, I think, carries a summary of the whole thing, Mr. Fox?

Mr. Fox. That is correct.

DEAR SIR:—A matter has just been brought to our attention in regard to the connection of Mr. A. L. Garford with The Garford Company.

For your information, The Garford Company was purchased by Mr. J. N. Willys, President of the Willys-Overland Company, and all of the stock owned by Mr. A. L. Garford was turned over to Mr. Willys at the time of the sale.

At present Mr. A. L. We are simply bringing this matter to your attention as we believe you have been misinformed as to the owners of The Garford Company, and wish to have this matter corrected not only to yourself but to all the members of the United States Brewers' Association, of which you are Secretary.

A large number of our dealers the county over are interested in the sale of Garford trucks and a goodly portion of these dealers are financed by the Brewery interests, and as a result, we are very materially interested in having this information in your hands.

Whatever sentiments Mr. A. L. Garford may have on certain subjects, therefore, should have no bearing whatever on this issue as we are simply offering an article to the public backed and guaranteed by our company on its own merits.

We hope you will see the justice of our remarks, and will voice the same in such a manner as to correct the impression already formed by a number of your associates.

Mr. HOWARD NOBLE,

26 Pemberton Square, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: We acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 13th, addressed to Mr. Flanagan, with reference to the attitude of the Fisk Rubber Co. of Chicopee Falls regarding our business.

The writer felt that there was no foundation for the report that the company was unfriendly to our interest, but we have made a very exhaustive investigation and have satisfied ourselves that the company and all the officers, with one exception perhaps, are anything but unfriendly.

The President of the Company, Mr. Dunn, who resides in Boston, and spends only a part of his time at the factory, is a very liberal man. The writer knows personally Mr. Harry Fisk, Treasurer of the Company, the General Manager, Mr. Hearns, and Superintendent, Mr. Jamesom, all of whom are moderate and some time immoderate drinkers, and surely are very liberal men and decidedly favorable to our business.

This also applies to practically all of the other officers and office force of the concern. The one exception is a man named Beers, who is Secretary of the concern, who is reported very narrow in his ideas and an advocate of temperance for many years.

The writer learned to-day however, in a conversation with one of our salesmen he told him that he believed in people drinking beer and did himself occasionally, but was not in favor of the saloon. His influence, however, as far as the company is concerned, is practically nothing, for, while he is Secretary, in this particular instance, it is a small office and does not carry any great responsibility or salary.

One prominent man in the community, with whom we took up this question, laughingly said that in his opinion the officers and office force of the Fisk Rubber Co. consumed more intoxicants than any equal number of men employed by any corporation in the world.

Under the circumstances it occurs to us that the report received by the United States Brewers' Association is unfounded.

GENTLEMEN:—This is to inform you that the firm of S. F. Bowser & Company of Fort Wayne, Indiana, have taken a decided stand against the interests of our colleagues in Indiana. We are informed that Mr. Bowser recently signed a petition calling for a State Convention for the purpose of inducing the 1917 Legislature to pass State-wide prohibition, and I have before me a photograph of a meeting which Billy Sunday held in the Bowser factory on August 30th, 1915, which was presided over by Mr. S. F. Bowser.

We are also informed that the Bowser Company house organ, known as the "Bowser Boomer" frequently contains articles endorsing prohibition legislation. Recently an article appeared regarding Denver going dry, which stated that since that time business conditions had improved very materially, particularly in their line, by reason of their selling tanks and pumps to pop manufacturers, etc.

To the Members of the United States Brewers Association.

DEAR SIRS: Toward the end of February, the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company notified all of its employees throughout the country, that they must withdraw from fraternal organizations and clubs which maintained sideboards, or cease work in the company's plants. They were also prohibited from endorsing liquor l cense applications.

These orders are so obvious an interference with personal liberty, and imply so improper a condition in fraternal club houses, that the matter was promptly brought to the attention of the Elks, Eagles, Owls, and others. They are now taking action—in a large way—that should produce results.

The latest issue of The Eastern Elk prints an editorial questioning the right of the employer to dictate to the employee as to what he shall or shall not believe; as to how he shall vote, and, as a future possibility, as to what church he may belong to. "Easy it is", the editorial says, "if the men submitted to this dictation, for the Tin Plate company to extend its 'Thou shalt nots' until these employees lose all their rights and liberties for the privilege of slaving away their lives, making sheet steel, or tinning for the stockholders of the company. . . . Have not these men the right to enjoy their clubs as do their employers?"

The Eagles of Kansas City have passed a resolution which declares the action of the Tin Plate Company is an interference with individual liberty, and is an aspersion on the integrity, loyalty and citizenship of the men concerned, even though they may be total abstainers or of temperate habits. They urge all their members, and members of other fraternal bod es, to join in vigorous protest against this unjust order. Copies of this resolution are being sent to twenty-two hundred branches of the Eagles, and they expect unanimous action.

It may be of interest to you to take this matter up in your locality. We shall be glad to assist you in any way possible.

You also made an investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, did you not, and even put detectives out to determine their activities and their attitude, and also undertook to get material, because of their order with reference to the use of liquor, that would make material for labor papers, with a view of causing labor annoyance?

Mr. FOX. There is no question about the investigation, but I should say, from the brief survey of the report, that the purpose of it was entirely different; that the purpose of it was perhaps to show that the United States Steel Corporation did not object to the use of beer by its men.

Maj. HUMES: The investigation included very largely the Carnegie Steel Co., did it not?

Mr. FOX. I think it did.

Maj. HUMES. The Carnegie Steel Co. is carried upon the list of unfriendly firms, and was in your file as one of the unfriendly concerns; was it not? If they were friendly, as you said, why is their name on that list?

Mr. FOX. I do not know, sir. As I have told you already, I do not recall anything at all about that list. I do not know where it came from, or who got it up.

NOVEMBER 12TH, 1915.

Memo to Mr. Michelson: Synopsis of talk with Mr. Close, Supt. of Department of Welfare and Safety, United States Steel Corporation.

N. B.: This was a friendly conversation and should never be used in connection with my name.

Mr. Close told me that during the last six or seven years the evolution of safety work in mills had been something like this:

1st. A couple of years where the attention was devoted mainly to the installation of safety devices.

2nd. The period when an esprit du corps was being built up in which SAFETY could be made compatible with TONNAGE. The process was a difficult one and a slow one, but organization triumphed. According to the accounts of foremen and superintendents in whose departments accidents happened, it was an effective method and good results were secured. Recently, however, the last refinement in this process has been reached, and I must say it is a peach.

An arbitrary figure of $2.40 has been attached as a valuation to every man below the rank of foreman in any of the mills. The foreman, we will say, has charge of 100 men. For the last three years, the average number of accidents, calling for hospital treatment sustained by his men, has been 15. That number, 15, is taken as "bogey." If in the coming year he can hold the number down to 10, he has lowered the accident rate ⅓; consequently, he gets ⅓ of 240, or $80. If the number of accidents increased, he is called to account.

There are other refinements in this method which I shall not go into now, but which have to do with the standardization of "bogey" throughout a number of the steel mills.

Additional memo: Mr. Close tells me that safety has now reached a point where he pays no attention to it. It is practically automatic and his whole concern now is with welfare. He intends to bring all towns in which U. S. Steel mills are located, up to a standard of cleanliness and sanitation equal to that which prevails in towns owned by the corporation. He says that first property owners will be approached; second, the power of municipal authorities will be invoked, and third, the State and finally the Federal authorities, if the steel corporation finds it necessary.

CONFIDENTIAL REPORT.

Relating to the Order Issued At Steel Trust Plants Forbidding The Use of Liquor. Indorsement of Liquor License Applications, Etc.:

On February 25 and 26, 1914, the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company (a component part of the U. S. Steel Corporation) issued an order notifying all employees that they must withdraw from fraternal organizations and clubs maintaining sideboards or cease to work in the company's plants. By this order employees were also prohibited from indorsing liquor license applications. This order was issued at Vandergrift, Kittanning and Leechburg, Pa., but it was understood to apply also to all of the plants of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company throughout the U. S.

On March 19, 1914, the following notice was issued to all employees of the Carnegie Steel Company in Youngstown, (Ohio) district:

"Hereafter, all promotions of whatever character will be made only from the ranks of those who do not indulge in the use of intoxicating drink. The Heads of Departments and their Foremen will be expected to observe this rule in advancing their men."

(Signed) THOMAS M. McDONALD,
General Sup't, Youngstown District.

Approved, A. C. DURKEY.
Pres. Carnegie Steel Co.

On March 16, 1914, employees of the Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad shops (a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation) at Greenville, Pa., found in their pay envelopes a slip bearing the picture of a keg of beer and a sack of flour. with the query. "Which do you buy?" Recently engineers, conductors and trainmen have been censured for drinking, and two veteran conductors were discharged for drinking.

On April 1, 1914, an order of a similar purport, although worded differently, was issued by the Carnegie Steel Company to all of its plants in the Pittsburg district.

These orders, issued almost simultaneously, tended to prove a definite plan, emanating from some powerful central source.

It may be mentioned at the outset that the town of Vandergrift was laid out by the Apollo Iron and Steel Company, later absorbed by the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, and that since its inception in 1895, the company, in selling lots to its workmen and to storekeepers placed restrictions in all deeds—restrictions still enforced—that no intoxicating liquors should be sold upon the premises for a period of 99 years. The U. S. Steel Corporation is insisting upon the same restrictions in its new town of Fairfield in Alabama.

Considering the orders above referred to, the question presenting itself for investigation was: What is the underlying motive or motives for the summary rules thus promulgated at the different plants?

An investigation at the different plants brought no definite results as regarded a specific solution of this question. Everybody approached seemed so apprehensive of talking, or being seen talking, to a stranger that the thought naturally occurred to the investigator that the men feared the presence of spies, who, reporting them, might cause them to lose their jobs. This fear of consequences is very evident, and it is a fact that the workmen generally think they have reason to believe that spies are employed. They suspect every stranger.

As for the foreman and other executives their invariable reply was: "Nothing to say. See headquarters."

However, at one place I obtained a clue which, upon investigation, produced the most valuable results.

This tip was: "See Darlington."

I finally ascertained who the Darlington referred to was, and the investigation led me back to New York City.

The Darlington thus mentioned is Dr. Thomas Darlington, former Health Commissioner of the City of New York. For some years he has been Secretary of the Welfare Committee of the American Iron and Steel Institute, the offices of which are at No. 30 Church Street, New York City. Judge Elbert H. Gary, President of the U. S. Steel Corporation, is also president of the American Iron and Steel Institute, on the board of directors of which are Charles M. Schwab and other Steel Trust men. Dr. Darlington has also recently been appointed by Governor Glynn of New York State one of the Commissioners to administer the new Workmen's Compensation Law.

Interviewing Dr. Darlington as a newspaper man with the nominal aim of writing about the welfare work, I incidentally, in the course of the interview, asked questions as to the matter of the stand of the American Iron and Steel Institute on the liquor questions. On this point, Dr. Darlington's replies, summarized, were as follows:

"There are 1,800,000 workers in the steel and allied industries—mines etc.,—under my care. We are making a fight against the use of liquor. But, of course, I personally can't come out openly against the liquor interests. I am president of Tammany Hall which depends largely upon the saloon element for its vote. But privately, as Secretary of the Welfare Committee of the American Iron and Steel Institute, I can and do recommend measures which the U. S. Steel Corporation is carrying out.

"Why the campaign against liquor in our plants? For a number of reasons. One reason is alcohol lessens the effect of co-ordination between hand and brain—it impairs efficiency. It is the greatest evil to workmen. Another reason for our stand is that the use of liquor has a direct bearing upon wages; if a man is addicted to alcohol he wants more money for the family. Also, the effect of family life upon a man's efficiency is very great. If he keeps late hours or doesn't get enough sleep or his mind is hazy the next day, he doesn't work efficiently. Alcohol also is responsible for many industrial accidents, and lessens resistance to disease."

When Dr. Darlington was asked whether he had any reliable statistics on the subject of the relation of alcohol to industrial accidents, he admitted that he hadn't any nor had any been published.

When I asked Dr. Darlington what measures would be taken by the U. S. Steel Corporation to keep out pocket peddlers, blind tigers, etc., he replied:—"Our officials (U. S. Steel Corporation employees) are generally the town officials in the newer towns, and we can bring pressure to stop that sort of thing. In the older towns we find ways and means of opposing the granting of licenses."

Dr. Darlington handed me a set of the enclosed batch of leaflets.

These leaflets are issued nominally by the Anti-Saloon League. But the point to be ascertained was: Were they issued indirectly by authority of the U. S. Steel Corporation?

The fact is that they were. This fact I ascertained from Mr. C. L. Close, the Secretary of the Bureau of Safety, Sanitation, Relief and Welfare of the U. S. Steel Corporation. Mr. Close's office is at No. 71 Broadway, New York City, many of the floors of which building are occupied by the various offices of the Steel Trust. From my talk with Mr. Close I ascertained these definite facts:

1. The copy for the enclosed leaflets was submitted to Mr. Close by Mrs. Lillian Burt of the Anti-Saloon League. Mr. Close edited the copy, expunged all references to religion, and cut out certain exaggerated statements. That done, he approved the copy, and it was set up in type as enclosed. Batches containing enormous numbers of these circulars have been, or will be, sent to foremen of all districts with orders to distribute them among the workmen and their families.

2. Judge Gary is intensely irritated over the fact that in the Steel Trust town bearing his name in Indiana, there are 196 saloons crowded in a small triangular patch, called "The Patch" in the center of the town. This small piece of land was bought up by speculators; just how they managed it Mr. Close did not explain. In the entire remainder of the town there are only two saloons. (No provision was inserted in the Gary charter prohibiting saloons.)

CONCLUSIONS.

From the above definitely ascertained facts, certain conclusions reasonably appear:

1. The U. S. Steel Corporation is supporting the Anti-Saloon League's propaganda.

2. The whole power of the U. S. Steel Corporation—its power over its workers, newspaper publicity, etc.—joined with its financial power, is enlisted in the antiliquor campaign so far as its mill and mining towns and railroads are concerned.

3. Judge Gary is personally irritated over the action of the saloon element in Gary, Ind.

4. But far beyond any personal feeling there appears to be a definite policy on the part of the U. S. Steel Corporation of putting itself forward conspicuously in public opinion as "a moral corporation," thus seeking to counteract the exposures made of conditions among its armies of unskilled workers due to low wages, etc., and the scandals arising from its stockjobbing and other operations. By such a policy it expects to win plaudits from churches, church organizations, temperance societies and the like.

5. Added to the above factors is a definite belief of the part of the corporation that in trying to abolish the use of alcohol, it will minimize the demand for higher wages, and that it will promote efficiency among its workmen. At the same time it is seeking to spread the impression that alcohol is largely responsible for industrial accidents.

These facts are, in brief, the concrete results of my investigation.

Maj. HUMES. Is the firm of Rogers, Peet & Co., clothiers in New York City, a concern from which brewers largely purchase clothes?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I do.

Maj. HUMES. Do you still buy your clothes there?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir. I have an account there.

Maj. HUMES. You notified the trade on November 28, 1911, did you not:

I am also informed that individual members of the firm of Rogers, Peet and Company, clothiers, New York City, are giving financial support to our opponents. All of this is for your information.

Very truly yours,

HUGH F. FOX, Secretary.

You sent that out?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. After that was sent out, Mr. Cusick, of Scranton, notified you that he had written to them and told them he was through buying clothes from them, did he not; and did not you in reply to that write a letter to Mr. Cusick, acknowledging receipt of his letter, as follows:

I have your letter of the 7th inst. with the copy of your extremely interesting correspondence with Mr. Frank Reap of Messrs. Rogers, Peet and Company. I think that a few more such letters will have Rogers, Peet and Company on the anxious seat. I would suggest that you stand pat now. The obvious answer to Rogers, Peet and Company's letter is that you do not question the right of any man to act according to his convictions, but at the same time you can hardly be expected to furnish ammunition for the enemy's war-chest by trading with a concern some of whose profits find their way into the enemy's camp.

You wrote such a letter?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You then advised Mr. Cusick to withdraw his patronage, whether you withdrew yours or not? You approved of his course?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall the correspondence, but I should say that the object of it was to turn a lot of letters loose on Rogers, Peet & Co. which might have had an influence upon them.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you did withdraw your patronage until there was a change in the firm?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall that. I think I probably did.

Maj. HUMES. But you have just said that you continued your account there.

Mr. Fox. I have an account there now, and I know that for a while I did not buy from them.

Maj. HUMES. You gave a wrong impression by your former answer, then. I had supposed that the business was continuous. I call your attention to your letter dated December 9, 1912, addressed to Rogers, Peet & Co., as follows:

GENTLEMEN: You wrote me some time ago soliciting business. I have not done business with you for some time because I learned that a member of your firm was antagonizing our interests.

I have, however, been informed recently that there has been a change in the personnel of your firm, which may have affected your attitude. If so, I should be glad to hear from you.

Did you write such a letter?

Mr. Fox. I recall it now.

Maj. HUMES. Then you did withhold your patronage for a while?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, Rogers, Peet & Co. wrote back and notified you that there had been a change, that their concern had ceased to be a firm and now become a corporation, and that the situation had entirely changed. They advised you to that effect, under date of December 11, 1912, did they not, and was it not that letter that induced you once more to trade with the concern?

Mr. Fox. I think it is extremely probable.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, they had come in line?

Mr. Fox. I guess so. I do not recall. I had forgotten that.

Mr. GUSTAV W. LEMBECK,

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 28th addressed to our Mr. Halsey: As you are doubtless aware we are trading as a firm and not as a corporation. The firm is composed of five men, and there are as many more who as heads of departments are interested in the results of the business.

These men are of different nationalities and differ in their views on politics, religion and temperance just as other men do; but as a firm it has always been our policy to make no public or benevolent contributions, leaving every man free to dispense his personal funds and to express his personal opinion on public and benevolent matters as he sees fit.

Doubtless some member or members of our firm are contributors to local option causes, although we feel sure that none of them are prohibitionists. We think, however, that this should have no bearing on our relations with persons of different views, since it is a matter that does not enter into the conduct of our business.

Yours truly,

(Signed) ROGERS PEET AND COMPANY.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I returned home safely and found everything in fine condition. Upon my desk I found a bill from Rogers, Peet & Co., which reminded me of the remark made by Mr. Lembeck, to the effect that one of the firm was reported as having contributed to the opposition.

In this connection, I shall be glad to have you advise me of the result of the investigation you were to make on this subject, as soon as you have concluded same, or have anything of interest to report.

With kind regards, I am,

Mr. FRANK REAP,
% Rogers Peet & Co., New York City.

FRIEND FRANK: I have been advised from reliable sources that some of the individual members of the firm of Rogers Peet & Co. are giving financial support to the enemies and opponents of the liquor interests.

I do not see how they figure out that they can afford to take this stand, as the people who are interested directly and indirectly in this business can not conscientiously patronize a firm who is giving financial support to their opponents. I for one can not give them any business under these circumstances, and am sure people like C. P., who receives considerable money from these interests, can not afford to antagonize them in buying goods from people who are directly working against our interests.

I just site this as an instance to show you how far reaching it is, and think it would be well for you to take the matter up with your firm and see what there is to it.

I am in a position to verify the above statement should your firm desire the same verified.

Let me hear from you regarding this at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige,

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
Secretary United States Brewers' Association,
109 East 15th Street, City.

DEAR SIR: We appreciate your friendly letter of December 9, for we hav known that among the members of your Association there has been some feelin antagonistic to our House.

We have even been told that this firm is "actively engaged in fostering pr hibition movements," whereas it has always been an unbroken rule of the bus ness that as a firm it would make no contributions and take no part in an matters of public or political discussion, for there have always been a numbe of individuals interested—men who differ widely in their views on politics, r ligion and public questions, just as other men do.

It may well be true that some one of those now or formerly interested her has been a contributor to local option causes; indeed, we believe that such the case, but we are quite sure that none of those prominently identified wi the Company are prohibitionists.

The recent change in our form of organization from a partnership to a co poration will make even clearer our position in such matters.

We have never felt that the personal beliefs of any individuals should hav any bearing on the Company's relations with men of different views, especial when the matters in question are entirely outside the conduct of our business and our relations with our business friends, and we trust that you and your associates find yourselves in accord with this view.

Very truly yours,

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Fox, is it not a fact that the United States Brewers' Association or its membership caused their patronage to be withheld from the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago because when the order from the city administration in Chicago went out for Sunday closing and enforcement of the Sunday law, this hotel, instead of resisting the enforcement of law, said that they would voluntarily and at once adhere to the law? Is not that a fact?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did not Mr. Edward Landsberg, of Chicago—a member and officer, I believe, of your association, is he not?

Mr. FOX. He is now.

Maj. HUMES. He was in 1915?

Mr. FOX. I think he was then.

Maj. HUMES. Did he not write you this letter under date of May 27, 1915:

MY DEAR MR. FOX: The inclosed article entitled, "No Sunday Bar at Blackstone," which appeared in last Sunday's Chicago Tribune, is perhaps no immediate news to you. My reason for mailing you this is that most of our colleagues in the East while stopping off at Chicago pick the Blackstone Hotel. In my opinion our members should be made cognizant that Tracy C. Drake, president and general manager of the Blackstone Hotel, has never contributed a cent against any "dry" campaign, and, from what information I have in hand from several hotel keepers in Chicago, he is an outright prohibitionist, and in future the "kibosh" should be placed upon the Blackstone Hotel by our members and their friends.

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD LANDSBERG.

You got such a letter, did you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Has the patronage of the members of your association at the Blackstone Hotel been the same since that period in 1915?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I have stopped there a number of times. I have met other brewers there.

Maj. HUMES. You had some considerable correspondence with Mr. Drake on the subject, too, did you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The immediate cause of that was because the general manager of the Blackstone Hotel consented to obey the laws of the State of Illinois? Is not that true?

Mr. FOX. That may have been the motive of the Chicago people. I had absolutely no sympathy with it; but when they talked about the hotel men being a part of their campaign machinery, and of not getting anything out of the Blackstone Hotel, of course that was a different matter. But on that Sunday question, I think, they were absolutely wrong, and I did not myself cease stopping at the Blackstone Hotel.

Maj. HUMES. Have you discovered that your ethics have on ordinary occasions been the ethics of the association?

Mr. Fox. Unfortunately, no; but they are the ethics of a number of the members of the association.

CHICAGO, May 29, 1915.

Mr. HUGH F. FOX,
U. S. Brewers Association, 50 Union Square, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I have your favor of the 27th inst., and, in reply, would state that the interview mentioned is partially correct, but not completely so. What I said to this reporter in answer to his interrogation as to what I thought about the prohibition movement, was as follows:

The consideration of the liquor question seems to be especially prevalent throughout the entire world at present. Russia has stopped the manufacture of Vodka; France is much more abstemious than formerly, England is in the throes of discussing abuses due to drink, the United States has prohibited the importation of absinthe and the number of States, counties and communities which have gone dry of late years, coupled with the decreasing sale of all wines and liquors, proves that moderation, if not prohibition, is on its way. If any prohibition laws are enacted in Illinois, The Blackstone is prepared to abide by them gracefully and not combatively. The Sunday closing law is on the statute and we have been ready at any time to obey it when enforcement of it was contemplated. Since that time appears to have come, we prefer to submit and close our bar on Sundays rather than be put in the position of fighting a State law on a test case. Someone else can be the goat, we will not be. If the law is declared invalid we will doubtless open our bar again.

The Blackstone, as you will know, Mr. Fox, has always stood for the best standards in everything. The matter of Sunday closing was considered by our Board of Directors, composed of rather level-headed and prominent men and they were a unit in agreeing that this hotel could not afford to oppose a law in the courts which, while it may have been a dead letter for many years, still exists on the statutes of the State. Therefore, we acted independently and I believe very wisely. The prohibition movement, whatever you may say, is in the minds of a lot of people to-day in this world and whatever its direct outcome conditions in the liquor trade are bound to experience, as you indicate, a marked readjustment before very long.

With kind personal regards, believe me

Yours very truly,

TRACY C. DRAKE, President.

Mr. EDWARD LANDSBERG, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR MR. LANDSBERG: I have your letter of the 27th, and am enclosing copy of letter from Mr. Drake of the Blackstone Hotel of the 29th ult., which is written in reply to my letter of the 27th. I am also enclosing for your information, copy of my letter of to-day to Mr. Drake, which I hope will draw him out further.

Knowing that Mr. Carl Hoster has a high personal regard for Mr. Drake, and has maintained intimate social relations with him, I have put the matter up to Mr. Hoster, and he is writing Mr. Drake also.

We do not want to antagonize the Blackstone unnecessarily, and I think that every effort should be made to win them over to our side. Their attitude on the Sunday question does not seem to me to be of vital consequence, and I think in this regard they are entitled to their own opinion.

Very truly yours,

Secretary.

HFF/W

P. S.—Since writing the above I have received a letter from the Manhattan Brewing Co., and am suggesting in my reply that Mr. Meyer put himself in touch with you. I think we must avoid letting other hotel men in Chicago rush us into action on this matter until we are perfectly sure that Mr. Drake and the Blackstone are irretrievably lost to our side.

Mr. H. F. FOX, Secy.
United States Brewers' Association,
50 Union Square, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. FOX: I have your letter of the 1st inst. and really feel that you are unnecessarily agitated regarding the matter under discussion. It may be but natural for you to take apparent umbrage at what I have said, but in reality, the part of my interview about prohibition is far superseded in the minds of the people who may have read it by the question under consideration in Chicago, viz.—that of Sunday closing. I have had many expressions and letters from people commending our action in having taken the stand we did and six other hotels have followed our example, leaving only now the Congress, LaSalle and Sherman fighting the Sunday closing law.

No one but yourself has brought up as a criticism of our action any apparent attitude on my part, leading to the supposition that we favor prohibition, as a hotel. We do not favor it, and, naturally, never have. It is part of our business to give people what they wish, and should a vote ever be taken on such a proposition, we would most logically vote against it. We do not at any time, however, wish to be placed in the position of attacking laws that are enacted, and if the overwhelming sentiment of the people produce such laws, we would certainly submit gracefully and adjust our affairs accordingly.

The spread of temperance and prohibition in many districts must be recognized, and you, yourself, acknowledge that it is going to require especial energy to combat the movement, which of late years seems to be creeping gradually over various communities. Our own attitude and stand in this matter have not changed at all since the opening of The Blackstone, except insofar as this present Sunday closing movement is concerned.

Yours very truly,

TRACY C. DRAKE, President,
THE DRAKE HOTEL COMPANY.

Maj. HUMES. Now, is it not a fact that independent of the so-called blacklist or boycotting, various State associations maintained their own method of blacklisting—to use a milder term, if you choose—and boycotting unfriendly concerns?

Mr. FOX. I can not answer that question.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a communication of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, and also one of the Indiana State Brewers' Association, and ask you if that does not evidence the fact that the smaller units of your organization engaged in the same practices?

Mr. FOX. These associations were not units of our association. They were absolutely independent.

Maj. HUMES. Well, they were subsidiary?

Mr. FOX. No; they were not subsidiary. They were absolutely independent organizations, over which we had no control—nothing but a correspondence.

Maj. HUMES. May I ask you, then, Mr. Fox, if it is not a fact that after much discussion a rule was adopted similar to the rule adopted by the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, that a man to be a member of the national association must be a member of the State association, or vice versa?

Mr. FOX. No.

Maj. HUMES. I know it was not that way originally, but I was thinking that recently there had been a rule of that kind promulgated.

Mr. FOX. No. There may have been in some particular State.

Maj. HUMES. I know there has been much agitation in favor of that policy.

Mr. FOX. There may have been in some particular State, but I have no knowledge of it.

Maj. HUMES. We submit a letter from the Pennsylvania State Association calling attention to the antagonistic attitude of the Garlock Packing Co.

Memo. INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Jan. 25, 1910.

Special report—Report on Amos K. Hollowell, Pres. Harris Air Pump Co.

I called at the Lombard Bldg. and found that he had moved his office to #1215 State Life Bldg.

Called there and ascertained the fact that he had moved office to the factory bldg., cor. Canal and 10th Sts; that he was out of the city to-day but was expected back this P. M. He resides at cor. of College & 25th, also that he is a member of the Anti-Saloon League Executive Committee.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Jan. 26, 1910.

Special report—Report on Amos K. Hollowell, Pres. Harris Air Pump Co. Indianapolis, Ind.

First called Mr. Hollowell up by phone, after having failed to get him at the plant this morning. Was told by him over phone that he could give no information, but went out to the plant to see him in person, and succeeded in talking with him personally.

He told me that he was one of the five members of the Anti-Saloon League Executive Committee; having been elected to that office during the trustees' meeting here on Jan. 4th last. Also that he was not a very active member of the Committee, only meeting with them once a month, as his business interfered with his taking a more active interest.

The pamphlet hereto attached, he said, was the outcome of this meeting of Jan. 4th, which fifty trustees attended, representing the entire state.

He stated further that he really did not know anything about the inner workings of the League, but referred me to Dr. Ballard, Mr. Shumaker, and Dr. Stansfield, who are also members of the Executive Committee, for a more detailed account of their work.

He explained that he thought that in time the entire state would go dry, as they were advancing in great strides with their work, and that seventy-five per cent of the population of the state were now living in dry territory.

He stated that the society is kept up by public subscription, and that the churches throughout the state appoint a certain day upon which the Anti-Saloon speakers take the pulpit, explain the character of their work; the basket is then passed, and all the offerings are turned in to the League.

The district Superintendents are given a salary of $1500 per year; that up to date they have received only about 60% of the money due them; in his estimation he thought that the amount was only about a third of what they ought to receive.

This Executive Committee is sworn to see that the rules laid down in this pamphlet are carried out.

To all members.

GENTLEMEN: It is reported that Amos K. Hollowell, president of the Harris Air Lift Company, is one of the Headquarters Committee of the Anti-Saloon League, and is quite active in their work in the struggle for prohibition. We have sent a representative to see Mr. Hollowell, whose report is attached. The investigation we have made bears out the fact that he is a member of the Anti-Saloon League, and participates in a great deal of their work. The Harris Air Lift Company sells many of its pumps to brewers, and, as our relations should be reciprocal, either Mr. Hollowell should get in line with his patrons, or else they should be able to get their supplies from interests that are friendly to them.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HUGH F. FOX—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, I show you a paper which is marked with the figures 837. In whose handwriting is that?

Mr. Fox. I think that is the handwriting of a Mr. Vance, in our employ.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Mr. Vance?

Mr. Fox. He is the publicity director. He is our assistant secretary.

Maj. HUMES. You are sure that is his handwriting and it is not yours?

Mr. Fox. It is not mine. I think it is his.

Senator OVERMAN. He is the director of publicity of the Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. Yes. I would not be absolutely certain as to its being his writing, but it looks like his. It is not mine.

Senator OVERMAN. It came from the files of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That is your own private stamp?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What is Mr. Vance's position with your association?

Mr. Fox. He is assistant secretary.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period has he been assistant secretary or publicity manager of your association?

Mr. Fox. I can not recall the exact date, but it was shortly after the Lusitania went down, and that must have been about four years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Was he in your employ prior to that time?

Mr. Fox. No. I am not sure that that is not the handwriting of a man named Bevington. The handwriting of Mr. Fox and the handwriting of Mr. Bevington are somewhat alike.

Maj. HUMES. You are sure that it is either Mr. Vance's or Mr. Bevington's handwriting?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was Mr. Vance in your employ in 1913?

Mr. Fox. No.

Maj. HUMES. This was written in 1913.

Mr. Fox. Then it was not Mr. Vance who wrote it. Mr. Vance came to us after the sinking of the Lusitania. Our publicity man, Mr. Herbert Stone, went down on the Lusitania, and my recollection is that Mr. Vance succeeded him, although not immediately.

Maj. HUMES. Then you say that this is Mr. Bevington's handwriting?

Mr. Fox. It looks like it to me.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the handwriting of the corrections and alterations in a typewritten statement which I now show you and ask in whose handwriting those corrections and alterations are. Is it in your handwriting?

Mr. Fox. No; I do not identify that. That is not the same handwriting as the other one evidently. At least I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. You are sure that this is not Mr. Stone's handwriting, are you?

Mr. Fox. These alterations and corrections look like Mr. Stone's handwriting. I do not recollect his handwriting very well. I presume I have some specimens of it in the office.

Maj. HUMES. Could you furnish us with specimens of the handwriting of Mr. Stone?

Mr. Fox. I think very likely. I would be glad to go through the files and see.

Maj. HUMES. This 837 is an interview of Dr. C. H. Hexamer, the president of the German-American Alliance, and was prepared evidently in your office, was it not, and afterwards published in the German papers in New York and Chicago?

Mr. Fox. No. Is this document which you have just shown me, Maj. Humes, a translation? These are not identical, are they?

Maj. HUMES. Practically so. One is evidently an original, and here is a typewritten copy of the same statement.

Mr. Fox. The reason I ask is because Mr. Bevington is a man who is employed by us to translate anything that we desire translated from the German into the English, and I think this is his handwriting. He does not work in the office, but we send him stuff from time to time that we want translated.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Fox, you said yesterday that your methods of publication were to send out documents and to purchase books and send them out to different people.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And all kinds of circulars?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. I find here in your files a book entitled "Crimes of Preachers," which I show you. Did you ever see it before?

Mr. Fox. Yes. We have it, I think, in our library. We have practically everything that we know of that has ever been published which had any direct or indirect bearing upon any phase of the subject published by our opponents or anybody else—practically everything.

Senator OVERMAN. How many copies of that book did you send out?

Mr. Fox. We never sent out any copies of this.

Senator OVERMAN. You just kept it in your library?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. This book is entitled, as I say, "Crimes of Preachers," and I desire to read from the first page the following:

THE TEN PARSONS.

Ten little preachers preaching love divine,
One kissed a servant girl, then there were nine.
Nine little preachers preaching sinners' fate,
One got drunk, then there were eight.
Eight little preachers showing path to heaven,
One seduced a brother's wife, then there were seven.
Seven little preachers exposing Satan's tricks,
One beat his patient wife, then there were six.
Six little preachers preaching Christ alive,
One debauched a little girl, then there were five.
Five little preachers preaching "sin no more,"
One raped a "sister," then there were four.
Four little preachers, pure as they could be,
One raped an eight-year-old, then there were three.
Three little preachers, pity so few,
One murdered his paramour, then there were two.
Two little preachers following the son,
One whipped his child to death, then there was one.
One little preacher in the fold alone,
He committed suicide, then there were none.

Why did you have that book in your library?

Mr. Fox. Really, I do not know.

Senator OVERMAN. Is this the kind of literature that you have there?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. You say this is of interest to your society or association?

Mr. Fox. Oh, no, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. What interest is this to anyone in your association?

Mr. Fox. None whatever. I recall that there was such a scandalous book published, and we have several thousand books in the library. We have allowed anyone who wanted to to have access to that, practically. We often had people from the Anti-Saloon League come—not often, but a number of times—and they were turned loose in the library.

Senator OVERMAN. I can not conceive why you want a book like that in your library. You said you had nothing but books that would interest your association, as I understood you.

Mr. Fox. Oh, no. We had an economic and sociological library, and a library of fiction and all sorts of things. I do not know whether this book was sent to us or how or where we got it.

Senator OVERMAN. Evidently your attention has been called to it before?

Mr. Fox. Probably; yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You seemed to recognize it when I handed it to you?

Mr. Fox. Probably it was sent to us in the hope that we would buy some copies. I do not know.

Senator OVERMAN. Was any general attack made upon the preachers of the country by the association because they stood for prohibition?

Mr. Fox. No, sir; I do not think so.

Senator OVERMAN. By circular or otherwise?

Mr. Fox. Not in my recollection.

Senator NELSON. These preachers here referred to in the extract that Senator Overman has read must evidently have been drunk to have committed those offenses.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, I show you now a paper marked "Exhibit No. 45," and I ask you if that is from the files of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. Evidently it is.

Maj. HUMES. This is a paper noted as "Proposed statement from the president of the National German-American Alliance, 1915." Is that correct—"proposed statement"?

Mr. Fox. That is how it reads.

Maj. HUMES. I have several copies of it here in carbon, at any one of which you may look if you desire to refresh your recollection. The word "proposed" is interlined in handwriting in each instance. It comes from your files, does it?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I also call your attention to another copy of the same "proposed statement." with corrections and interlineations. Does that come from your files also?

Mr. Fox. Evidently; it is so stamped.

Maj. Humes. In whose handwriting are the corrections and alterations?

Mr. Fox. I am afraid that I can not identify that. I do not recall anything about it.

Maj. Humes. Can you not identify the handwriting?

Mr. Fox. I am afraid not, sir.

Maj. Humes. Is it your handwriting?

Mr. Fox. No.

Maj. Humes. Is it Mr. Bevington's?

Mr. Fox. No; I do not think it is.

Maj. Humes. Mr. Vance's?

Mr. Fox. It does not look like the one or the other.

Maj. Humes. Do you say that it is not in their handwriting?

Mr. Fox. It does not look so to me.

Maj. Humes. I now show you another copy of approximately the same article, entitled "Final Revision," with the notation at the top, "Original copy sent to Mr. Feigenspan." Did that come from your files?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. In whose handwriting is the notice at the top of that?

Mr. Fox. That is in the librarian's handwriting.

Maj. Humes. I show you another statement that seems to cover generally the same subject matter. Does that come from your files?

Mr. Fox. It is so stamped. I judge it does. I take it that that stamp was put on by us, sir.

Maj. Humes. No; this stamp was not put on by you. This is the stamp that was put on by us in my office. You do not know where this came from? This other stamp is your stamp.

Mr. Fox. Then I could not say positively.

Maj. Humes. I know that it came from the files, and I thought possibly that you could identify it yourself.

Mr. Fox. I am not doubting it in the least.

Maj. Humes. Now, is it not apparent to you, and do you not know, that statements were prepared in the office of the United States Brewers' Association for the use of Dr. Hexamer?

Mr. Fox. I have no recollection, and I believe no knowledge, of anything of the kind.

Maj. Humes. I now submit to the committee the first draft of the proposed statement from the president of the National German-American Alliance, 1915, which is marked "Fox Exhibit No. 22," and which bears the figures 837, which is as follows:

Fox Exhibit No. 22. 837

(Confidential file.)

Proposed statement from the president of the National German American Alliance, 1915.

Office copy. Please return this copy to the file.

Dr. C. J. Hexamer, President of the National German-American Alliance desires to make the following statement, which is to be construed neither as an explanation, nor as an apology, but simply as a plain statement of facts, which is of timely interest.

The German-American Alliance, and other German-American organizations have existed for a great many years. They have served the valuable purpose of stimulating the interest of American citizens of German origin in the literature, the art, and the music for which the German race is famous, and which have done so much to enrich the lives of American citizens. Since the first great inrush of German immigrants after 1847, American citizens of German parentage have borne an active and honorable part in the life of this country. The traditions of the Civil War, in which so many Germans fought and died for the extermination of chattel slavery, and for the preservation of the Union, are their exalted traditions. Their history is American history, and so will it be with our descendants. We Germans here have deliberately and voluntarily chosen the United States as our home,—not for mere temporary selfish purposes, but as our permanent abiding place. It is in every sense our chosen adopted country, as it will be the one and only country of our descendants. We are profoundly and passionately attached to American institutions, and were these institutions in jeopardy they would quickly enroll our undivided loyalty.

In the present world crisis, however, this is not an imminent question, and we therefore feel that when our whole hearts are with the German people in their great emergency, we are neither violating any essential of neutrality, nor are we untrue to ourselves in feeling the response of a spontaneous and natural sympathy. We ask the American people to exercise their customary fairness, and accord to us the right to feel as they would feel were they in our position. We further ask, not to be judged by the performances of a few firebrands and trouble-makers of whose acts we do not approve, and which are not only not endorsed by our Organization, but which would never receive other than condemnation. The substantial German-Americans, who constitute by far the great number, uphold the President of the United States, and do not question his course!

I need not point out that we are not the only Organization in this country which has a decided opinion as to the moral right of this country to allow the traffic in munitions with any of the parties to this disastrous war. Opposition has been strongly expressed by purely American publicists and organizations. If the manufacture of "fire-arms" and ammunition was restricted or controlled by the Government of the United States, as, I believe, it will be some day, the sale and export of them to any nation would be a cause of war with all the other nations involved. To the lay mind it seems anomalous that the American Government should be able to prohibit the export of arms to Mexico, and should not be able to prohibit their exportation to other countries; but I want to emphasize this point—that the blowing up of factories is sabotage, which nothing except an actual state of war in the United States could excuse or justify. We do not believe that such acts have been done under the direction of the German Government, or inspired in any way by recognized German authority. If, however, it can be shown that any act of injury to property in the United States, which is contrary to the law of this country, has been either sanctioned or inspired by any of the German or Austrian authorities, those Governments must disavow the acts and repair the damage, and at all events, the guilty parties should be dealt with by the American authorities as common criminals.

I deprecate especially, any effort to inject class or racial distinctions into the politics of this country. In my judgment, it would be disastrous to have the Congress of the United States made up of factions which are held together by racial instincts. We must absolutely abolish nationalist factions and sectional strife in the political affairs of the United States, and any man who undertakes to play upon race feeling for his own personal or political advantage is not doing the German Americans any good, but is, in fact, doing them a great injury.

Confiding fully in the sense of fairness and justice of all of the American people the National German American Alliance undertakes to express its views freely on all debatable questions, and legitimate objects of discussion. In doing this it does not overlook for a second the supreme claims of American citizenship with all the duties that these carry with them to which it gives unreserved precedence.

From U. S. B. A. files.

I shall now read to the committee Fox Exhibit No. 23, also having the number 837 upon it, which contains certain interlineations to which the witness has referred, and from which the name of Dr. Hexamer has been eliminated.

Senator NELSON. I suggest that that be printed as it is, with the interlineations shown to be printed in different type.

Dec., 1915.

(From U. S. B. A. files.)

The following statement, which is to be construed neither as an explanation, nor as an apology, but simply as a plain statement of facts, is of timely interest:

German-American organizations have existed for a great many years. They have served the valuable purpose of stimulating the interest of American citizens of German origin in the literature, the art and the music for which the German race is famous and which have done so much to enrich the lives of American citizens. Not the least valuable part was that played by them in assisting to assimilate the newcomers from the Fatherland and acquainting them with true American ideals. Since the first great inrush of German immigrants after 1847, American citizens of German parentage have borne an active and honorable part in the life of this country. The traditions of the Civil War, in which so many Germans fought and died for the extermination of chattel slavery, and for the preservation of the Union, are their exalted traditions. Their history is American history, and so will it be with their descendants. The Germans here have deliberately and voluntarily chosen the United States as their home—not for mere temporary selfish purposes, but as their permanent abiding place. It is in every sense their chosen adopted country, as it is the one and only country of their descendants. They are profoundly and passionately attached to American institutions, and were these institutions in jeopardy they would quickly enroll their undivided loyalty.

In the present world crisis, however, this is not an imminent question, and the German-Americans therefore feel that when their whole hearts are with the German people in a great emergency, they are neither violating any essential of neutrality, nor are they untrue to themselves in feeling the response of a spontaneous and natural sympathy. They ask the American people to exercise their customary fairness, and accord to the German-Americans the right to feel as they would feel were they in a similar position. The German-Americans further ask, not to be judged by the performances of a few firebrands and trouble-makers of whose acts they do not approve, and which are not only not endorsed by the principal organizations, but which would never receive other than condemnation. The substantial German-Americans, who constitute by far the great number, uphold the President of the United States, and do not question his course!

It needs not to be pointed out that the German-Americans have not the only Organization in the United States which has a decided opinion as to the moral right of this country to allow the traffic in munitions with any of the parties in this disastrous war. Opposition has been strongly expressed by purely American publicists and associations. If the manufacture of "fire-arms" and ammunition was restricted or controlled by the Government of the United States, the sale and export of these war supplies to any belligerent would be a cause of war with the other Nations at war with it. To the lay mind it seems anomalous that the United States Government should be able to prohibit the export of arms to Mexico, and should not be able to prohibit their exportation to other countries; but the German-American is firm in the view that the blowing up of factories is sabotage, which nothing except an actual state of war in the United States could excuse or justify. He does not believe that such acts have been done under the direction of the German Government, or inspired in any way by recognized German authority. If, however, it can be shown that any act of injury to property in the United States, which is contrary to the law of this Country, has been either sanctioned or inspired by any of the German or Austrian authorities, the German-American will join with all other Americans in demanding that those Governments disavow the acts and make reparation. At all events, the guilty parties should be dealt with by the American authorities as common criminals. The enlightened German-American deprecates any effort to inject class or racial distinctions into the politics of this country. He sees clearly that it would be disastrous to have the Congress of the United States made of factions held together by racial instincts. He realizes that any man who undertakes to play upon race feeling for his own personal or political advantage is not doing the German-Americans any good, but is in fact, doing them a great injury.

In common with all other classes of Americans, with confidence in the fairness and justice of his fellow-countrymen, and in harmony with the national regard for free speech, the German-American has not hesitated to express his views on debatable subjects. In doing this he does not overlook for a second the supreme claims of American citizenship with all the duties that these carry with them, to which he gives unreserved precedence.

Maj. HUMES. I next submit "Fox Exhibit No. 25," which the witness has identified, and from which one page seems to be missing, which is the paper having upon it the words "Final Revision" and the words "Original copy sent to Mr. Feigenspan," which latter words the witness identified as being in the handwriting of the librarian.

German-American opinion, regardless of what it may be as to the moral rights of this country to export ammunition to the enemies of Germany, does not stand for the blowing up of factories or the attempted destruction of ships carrying ammunition.

There is only one word to properly characterize this method of warfare. It is "sabotage" and every German-American, worthy of the name, believes that "sabotage" should be punished as a crime against the United States, whether committed in the name of anarchy or in the name of Fatherland.

The German-American does not believe that such acts have been done under the direction, or inspired by either the German or Austrian Governments. It is quite conceivable, however, with communication between Washington and Berlin interrupted as it is, that a few unscrupulous men have been able to misuse their official power in such a way as that indicated in the daily news reports. If it can be shown that any act of injury to property in the United States has been either sanctiontd or inspired by any of the German or Austrian authorities, then it is up to those Governments to promptly disavow such act and make prompt reparation. And the German-American will stand with the British-American, the French-American and Russo-American to demand such reparation and disavowal.

The German-American, in this great world crisis, has the same human emotions as the French, the British and the Russian-American. His whole heart is with the German people in this terrible struggle. But he is an American first. This is his home; he believes in American traditions and American institutions. That is the reason he has chosen to live in the United States and not in Germany. He does not believe that it is a neutral spirit which permits the whole United States to be turned into one great arsenal for the manufacture of arms for the allies. And he can not understand why the Government that had the power to place an embargo on the shipment of arms to Mexico, has not the power to place an embargo on shipments to England and France.

The history of German-Americans is the history of America. Non Americans, of any extraction, gave their blood in the cause of human liberty more freely than did the German-Americans during the Civil War. Furthermore, German-American societies, which have for many years performed the valuable service of assimilating the new immigrants, constitute the nucleus—not, as has been suggested for army of rebellion—but for an army of defense against any foreign invador who may attempt to land on our shores.

The enlightened German-American asks not to be judgel by the declarations of a few firebrands. He deprecates any effort to inject class or racial distinctions into the politics of this country. He sees clearly that it would be disastrous to have the Congress of the United States made up of factions held together by racial instincts. He realizes that any man who undertakes to play upon race feelings for his own personal or political advantage is not doing the German-Americans any good, but is, in fact, doing them harm.

The substantial German-American who constitute by far the greater number, uphold the President of the United States and do not question his course.

From U. S. B. A. files.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not apparent to you, from these records from the files of your association, that propaganda material for the use of the German-American Alliance and for the use of Dr. Hexamer was being prepared in the office of and by employees of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. I have absolutely no recollection of anything of the kind. I never helped the gentleman. I do not believe I ever had any correspondence with him. I do not recall it, at any rate; and what the origin of that is I do not recollect.

Maj. HUMES. It is apparent that some person with literary inclinations in your office was working at that statement, is it not?

Mr. FOX. I think it bears that implication.

Maj. HUMES. In 1915 Mr. Feigenspan was chairman of the publication committee of the United States Brewers' Association, was he not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. He had charge of the propaganda of the association, did he not?

Mr. FOX. He was in a way responsible for it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not consider it significant that, after looking at this piece of propaganda literature, it was forwarded to your publication committee?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact, Mr. Fox, that within the confines of your own association there was very great activity on the part of many of the individual members, if not on the part of the association itself, in behalf of the German cause and the German propaganda that was being promulgated in this country in 1915 and 1916.

Mr. FOX. This is the first I ever heard of it, sir.

Maj. HUMES. The first you ever heard of it?

Mr. FOX. Absolutely.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever hear the war mentioned at any of your meetings, or about the office when members gathered there?

Mr. FOX. I think it was—my recollection is that it was—a matter that was by common consent discussed very little. I do not know whether that was due to the fact that I am an Englishman, but at any rate you will remember that at that time a great many offices had notices up, "No war talk," and so forth, and we did not have anything of that kind; but I do not recall any discussion. In fact, I should say that there was almost an avoidance of the subject.

Maj. HUMES. And you do not know how this other interview with Dr. Hexamer, of 1913, came to be in your files, in the handwriting of a possible employee of your association?

Mr. FOX. No, sir. I am perfectly willing to do this, however, Major; I am perfectly willing to get you specimens of the handwriting, so far as I can, of everybody who has been in our employ since I had any connection with it.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask that this paper be marked and printed as an exhibit [showing paper to the witness].

FOX EXHIBIT No. 26.

[Daily Illinois Staats Zeitung, Dec. 26, 1913.]

"DANGER THREATENS FREEDOM."

Dr. Hexamer Complains that the Active Work of the Prohibitionists Has Created a Dangerous Situation—The National Union Appears as the Sole Opponent of the Efforts of the Teetotal Fanatics—The Liberal Element Apathetic.

PHILADELPHIA, December 24th.

"The danger of national prohibition is more threatening than the liberal element allows itself to imagine," stated the President of the German-American National Union, Dr. C. J. Hexamer, to-day, on his return from Washington, where he had been active on behalf of the Union in preventing the possible restriction of immigration by the passage of the Burnett educational test provision and in opposing the prohibition amendment.

"I can not understand," Dr. Hexamer continued, "why the people whose business and property would be ruined by the adoption of a prohibition amendment, have not stirred a finger in energetic opposition to the danger.

The only organization that has done anything to prevent the adoption of the prohibition amendment is the German-American National Union. It has sent resolutions of protest and letters as well as telegrams to members of Congress and has thereby at least weakened the effect of the memorials in favor of prohibition with which representatives and Senators have been fairly overwhelmed by their constituents. The addresses for prohibition fill immense chests and mount into the hundreds of thousands, whereas the dispatches and protests so far received from the Directors, the state and branch presidents of the National Union, which must of course, be limited, numerically, must, in comparison with the flood of prohibitionst demonstrations seek to maintain the balance.

I have ineffectively questioned myself as to what is responsible for this mysterious apathy of the liberal element, and especially of the persons directly interested. Are we rocked in apparent security and not cognizant of the critical condition of the situation?

The fight for prohibition is being carried out along the entire line. Its advocates work and agitate with tireless energy and leave nothing untried in striving for their goal. Every possible means is employed to influence Members of Congress. Even open and disguised threats are not lacking. Destruction of the political career and social ostracism play an important part.

It is asserted in Washington that Secretary of State Bryan is an open advocate of national prohibition, while President Wilson is by no means a determined and convinced opponent of it.

The conservative element, on the opposition of which hitherto the worst prohibition attacks have been shattered, even in the last Congress, was not powerful enough to prevent the passage of the Webb motion, which forbade the shipment of alcoholic drinks from "wet" into "dry" States, over the President's Veto.

At present but few outspoken opponents of prohibition are to be found in Congress. If, however, by a two-thirds majority, one of the amendments is adopted that prohibit traffic in importation and manufacture of alcoholic beverages, the approval by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, which is necessary to render an amendment effective, would not be long delayed.

And then what? Let us not deceive ourselves. It is not painting things too blackly when I most emphatically assert that the fight against prohibition has entered upon the critical period of its history.

What, however, has become of the great organizations of inn-keepers, of wholesale dealers in liquors, of bottlers, of brewers, wine, barley, malt, and hop producers, the bottle manufacturers, the coopers, and the numerous other industries dependent directly or indirectly on the sale and manufacture of alcoholic drinks? Have they nothing to offer in opposition? Have they no friends who, among the representative in Congress, would protest against the prohibition amendments?

Now, the time for action has arrived, longer delay would be directly fatal. On the part of the National Union, now as before, everything possible will be done to prevent the adoption of the amendments or any one of them, but I do not for a moment conceal from myself the gravity of the situation.

I sincerely regret that Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, is not a candidate for re-election. For twenty-two years, as a born German, he has guarded the interests of his fellow countrymen in Congress. They invariably found in him a man upon whom they could rely. His retirement means a great loss to the liberal cause which it will be hard to replace.

Dr. Hexamer then submitted to your correspondent copies of the resolutions which have been introduced in Congress. The Joint resolution introduced by Sheppard in the Senate, and by Hobson in the House of Representatives, and referred both houses to the Committee on Judiciary.

In order to stir up the liberal element Dr. Hexamer has sent out the following "Call to the Presidents of all our Societies and sub-societies and to all organizations, their branches and sub-societies that are on our side, as well as to all citizens of both sexes who are friendly towards and sympathize with us and to State-presidents:

"Doubtless you have learned through the newspapers that the prohibitionists through Hobson (H. J. R. 168) Sheppard (H. J. R. 88) and Works (S. J. 50) have introduced in the House, as well as in the Senate, at Washington, resolutions which will bring about national prohibition and which are aimed at the complete destruction of the manufacture, absolute prohibition of the sale and suppression of all importation of alcoholic drinks. Monster petitions are being sent to Congress by the prohibitionists, and daily there are sent to members of Congress, innumerable letters and telegrams from all parts of the country, at the instance of prohibitionists and their tools, in order to exert a pressure on our National Legislators.

A similar course must absolutely be followed by the liberal side and this action brooks no delay. The work which has hitherto been done mainly by the German-American National Union must be taken up energetically by the liberal side. We hope that on this occasion all the elements on the liberal side will join issue with us in fighting the efforts of the fanatics and their blind dupes with the same weapons and thus show them what the majority of our people think of such ill considered and unjust measures which would impose prohibition on the entire country.

I therefore urgently summon you, in the first place, through your State Organization, to secure the adoption of the accompanying resolution in the English language, literally, or a resolution of similar purport, and forward this resolution, properly attested, to each representative in Congress from the respective district, as well as another copy to each Senator from your State, and moreover to forward another copy to each of the following addresses: Hon. Henry D. Clayton, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and Senator Charles A. Culberson, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, at Washington, D. C. These two Committees now have the prohibition propositions under consideration.

Moreover, I urge upon you emphatically, to agitate and use every endeavor to induce all subordinate societies and separate organizations and through them each individual member, to forward a protest, of the tenor of the resolution adopted by you, to every Representative in the House from the respective districts, and to each of your Senators as well as to the above named committee chairman, and to all friends who sympathize with us as well as protests in the same form that may in every respect afford aid. The Central Bureau of the National Union, is prepared to aid you with material and information, so that our object to make clear to Congress in an overwhelming manner, the demand for liberal laws, and the protest against retrogressive measures aimed at personal liberty may be attained.

The accompanying protest form, translated from the German, reads as follows:

In the name of (name of the society) representing (number) American Citizens, we protest, energetically against H. J. R. 168, S. J. R. 88 and J. R. 50, or similar prohibition measures (name of the President).

For individuals the protest reads: I, the undersigned, an American Citizen, do protest energetically against the H. J. R. 168, S. J. R. 88 and J. R. 50, or similar prohibition measures.

(Signature and Address)

(Signed) MAX HEINRICI.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any relation existing, by contract, agreement or otherwise, between the United States Brewers' Association and the German-American Alliance?

Mr. FOX. The only arrangement that I have any recollection or knowledge of was the arrangement between the Association of Commerce and Labor and the German-American Alliance.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that for a considerable period of time the United States Brewers' Association regularly made a quarterly payment to the German-American Alliance for their support and maintenance?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall it, sir. It might have been done without my knowledge, but I do not recall anything of the kind.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Exhibit 867½, it being a financial statement dated September 29, 1913. It came from the files of your association. I will ask you to look at that and see if it refreshes your recollection [handing witness file].

Mr. FOX (after examination). It ought to refresh my recollection, sir, because there are some of my own pencil notations and figures on it, but I am afraid it does not.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, regardless of your recollection, the records of the association, therefore, show that on the 23d of September, 1911, there was a payment of $2,500 by your association to Mr. Tjarks of the German-American Alliance, does it not?

Mr. FOX. It shows that, apparently. I do not recall who Mr. Tjarks is.

Maj. HUMES. That was before the National Association of Commerce and Labor got organized and under way, was it not? Their Atlantic City meeting was in October, 1913, was it not, when the National Association was organized?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. So that your association must have been financing the German-American Alliance to some extent, at least, prior to the organization of the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. Fox. I think that is a fair inference, but I do not know who this man Tjarks is.

Maj. HUMES. You never heard of Tjarks?

Mr. Fox. I have heard of him, but I do not recall who he is, in the least.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any knowledge of an arrangement being entered into between the United States Brewers' Association and the German-American Alliance by which the United States Brewers' Association would finance the expenses of the lobbyists of the German-American Alliance in Washington?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You have no personal knowledge of that transaction?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Fox, have you any knowledge of the United States Brewers' Association, by subscription or otherwise, paying the expense of maintaining a lobby during the session of the Connecticut Legislature?

Mr. Fox. I have a rather vague recollection—or perhaps that is almost too strong a word—of an attorney in Connecticut being retained mutually by the Connecticut brewers, and I do not know whether it was our association or the brewers doing business in Connecticut, but it is not any more definite than that.

Maj. HUMES. You would say, would you not, that they had financed a lobby in Connecticut?

Mr. Fox. My memory works a little slowly. If you will just give me a little time——

Maj. HUMES. All right, sir; I do not want to hurry you.

Mr. Fox. I recall having been asked by the Connecticut brewers, at one time, to get together all of the brewers who were doing business in Connecticut, and we gave them our good offices for the purposes of that meeting, and they held the meeting, all the people doing business in Connecticut, in our offices. Now, I do not recall any of the results of that meeting. In fact, I do not think I was present during the meeting.

Maj. HUMES. I call to your attention Exhibit No. 772, and the exhibits following that, Nos. 773, 774, 775, and 776. Refresh your recollection, and then answer the question.

Mr. Fox (after examining exhibits). Yes; it is beginning to come back to me. I see that I was pretty nearly right. This was apparently not a matter of the United States Brewers' Association, but it was a matter of the brewers of New York and of other places doing business with Connecticut.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, the funds were not taken out of the general funds of the association, but a separate fund was raised by a number of brewers, with the help of the association. You conducted the correspondence, or some of it?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In order to raise the necessary money to defray the expense?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. That was an expenditure, then, over and above the regular and ordinary assessments of the association, was it not?

Mr. Fox. Yes; it was not an association matter.

Maj. Humes. Is it not a fact that many of the funds raised by this association and spent for relief purposes, legislative purposes or otherwise, were raised for a special purpose and were outside of and in addition to the ordinary dues, and the ordinary funds raised by the association?

Mr. Fox. I do not recall any other transaction of the kind, Major. The Connecticut matter probably, according to my recollection, had its origin in this way, that the Connecticut brewers, as I recall, complained that 50 per cent of the entire business of Connecticut was being done by brewers from New York and neighboring States, and they felt that they had some kind of a special claim.

Maj. Humes. Mr. Fox, there was a joint meeting arranged, was there not, of the brewers and distillers, or representatives of the National Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. Fox. I recall such a meeting.

Maj. Humes. You called such a meeting, did you not?

Mr. Fox. I do not know whether I called it. I recall that there was such a meeting.

Maj. Humes. Did you not call such a meeting [showing witness paper]?

Mr. Fox (after examining paper). Evidently I did.

Maj. Humes. Yes. Now, was that meeting held?

Mr. Fox. My recollection is that it was.

Maj. Humes. What was the purpose of that meeting?

Mr. Fox. There may have been more than one meeting. The particular meeting which stands out in my mind was called for the purpose of determining whether we were going to split with the distillers entirely or whether we were going to continue to go along with them.

Maj. Humes. Were you at that conference?

Mr. Fox. I was there a part of the time, I believe.

Maj. Humes. Were you not secretary of that conference?

Mr. Fox. Probobly I was.

Maj. Humes. As secretary of the conference were you not there all the time?

Mr. Fox. Oh, not necessarily; but I remember being present during a great deal of discussion.

Maj. Humes. Was there any discussion there of the political activities and political practices of the association?

Mr. Fox. You will have to refresh my memory on that, sir. I do not recollect. One thing that stands out in my memory was this impending split, which was a matter about which there was a very great deal of difference of opinion, and I was one of those who had always felt that it was an entangling alliance.

Maj. Humes. What had been the agreement or the arrangement the dissolution of which was under consideration at that time?

Mr. Fox. That I do not recall. I do not think that was ever under my jurisdiction.

Maj. Humes. Was it not discussed at this joint meeting?

Mr. Fox. Very likely. I think you will have to refresh my memory on it. I have not any doubt that it was.

Maj. HUMES. Has there been any subject more frequently discussed by the members of this association in meeting, both of the trustees, and executive meetings of the association, than the relations that existed between them and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. Fox. That is rather broad, but there has been a great deal of discussion of that.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and do you mean to say that in all of those discussions you, as an official in those meetings, never acquired a knowledge as to what the agreement was, or as to what the relation was?

Mr. Fox. I remember, in a general way, that there was an understanding that the ratio of expense should be two-thirds to one-third, but it was not a matter that was under my jurisdiction.

Maj. HUMES. It was a matter of common knowledge in your association, was it not?

Mr. Fox. I say it was; yes.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time had that agreement existed?

Mr. Fox. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. That the expense should be shared at the rate of two to one?

Mr. Fox. I do not know, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was it in existence when you came with the association 11 years ago?

Mr. Fox. I do not recollect anything of the kind. In fact, my impression is that the distillers were not organized at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Is the agreement still in vogue?

Mr. Fox. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. When was it abrogated?

Mr. Fox. I do not know definitely, but some time ago.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the minutes of the association showing the action?

Mr. Fox. I have no minutes subsequent to those which you have.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that there are no minutes of the United States Brewers' Association, or of the board of trustees, since the time of the investigation and the acquirement of the existing minutes?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You have not kept any minutes?

Mr. Fox. No, sir; we have not kept any minutes.

Maj. HUMES. Has there been any change in the practice of handling the financial accounts of the association?

Mr. Fox. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Do your committees still continue to make written reports to the association?

Mr. Fox. Very few of our committees have met in two years or more.

Maj. HUMES. By whom and by what authority are the expenditures of the association made?

Mr. Fox. The only expenditures with which I have any connection are the overhead and publicity expenditures.

Maj. HUMES. Does not the board of trustees have to approve the expenditures made by the various committees?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Does each committee dip into the common fund and expend as much as they please, when they please?

Mr. FOX. I can not answer that question. I think there is some kind of a general understanding. I am not a member of the finance committee.

Maj. HUMES. You are secretary of the board of trustees, are you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You attend all their meetings?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you attend all of the meetings of the association?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You are not deprived of attending the executive sessions?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. It is a corporation?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that there has been no action taken by the duly accredited officers of this association with reference to the expenditure of funds?

Mr. FOX. The only specific action that I recall was in regard to advertising, and the advertising committee was authorized to expend the money that was raised.

Maj. HUMES. Well, now, let us get to that advertising fund. I show you Fox Exhibit No. 27, and ask you what this is, it having been produced by you in response to the subpœna.

Mr. FOX. This is the amount of money received from the brewers who subscribed to this advertising fund between October, 1917, and June 27, 1918.

Maj. HUMES. And that is the list with the amount of their contributions?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

	Total		535,099.76

Maj. HUMES. By what agreement or arrangement was this fund raised?

Mr. Fox. There was, as I recall it, an appeal made at the convention of the Brewers' Association for such a fund, and a number of brewers came forward on the spot and subscribed, and the understanding was that the rest of them should be solicited on the basis of 2 cents a barrel of their output.

Maj. HUMES. When was that done?

Mr. Fox. That was done at the 1917 convention.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the total amount?

Mr. Fox. $535,000.

Senator NELSON. What is the total amount of that list there? That is for two years, is it not?

Maj. HUMES. No; this is just for one year, Senator. The total is $535,099.76.

Senator NELSON. For 1917?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; from October to April. It covers eight months.

Mr. Fox. In other words, nearly all of the money was raised shortly afterwards and a few straggling amounts came in later, so that the last sum, I think, runs to June.

Maj. HUMES. This was purely a voluntary matter? All of the members of the association did not enter into this; did they?

Mr. Fox. No.

Maj. HUMES. What proportion of the membership participated, approximately? I do not mean exactly.

Mr. FOX. Oh, I should say numerically a half, and in volume perhaps two-thirds.

Maj. HUMES. How many members of this association are there?

Mr. FOX. Nominally about 600, but we carry a good many men who do not pay dues.

Senator OVERMAN. Has all of that money been expended?

Mr. FOX. A large part of it has, I believe. That money is in the hands of the chairman of the advertising committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Did it all go in that way, in advertising, as you have described?

Mr. FOX. I believe so.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the chairman of that committee?

Mr. FOX. Mr. James Liebmann, of Brooklyn.

Maj. HUMES. Were these contributions paid directly to him, or were they paid to the association and then turned over to him?

Mr. FOX. They were paid to the association. They were put in the hands of the treasurer, and, as I understand it, the treasurer turned over such moneys as Mr. Liebmann required from time to time. I think the passbook that you have there shows as to that.

Maj. HUMES. Did it go into the general fund, or was there a special account of it?

Mr. FOX. I understand that it went into the general fund.

Maj. HUMES. What are the regular dues of the association at present?

Mr. FOX. A cent a barrel.

Maj. HUMES. What other extra assessments or special assessments have been made during the last year or two?

Mr. FOX. I recollect a special assessment of half a cent a barrel.

Maj. HUMES. When was that made?

Mr. FOX. I think that was made somewhere within the previous year.

Maj. HUMES. In 1917?

Mr. FOX. Yes; in 1916 to 1917.

Maj. HUMES. Were there any other assessments made?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. During the last two years have there been any payments into the association from the contracts that were entered into in 1913, those five-year contracts?

Mr. FOX. I think that dried up about two years and a half ago or three years ago. We made a settlement with Mr. Andreae and canceled his contract, and I do not think any moneys were received afterward.

Maj. HUMES. How has the National Association of Commerce and Labor been financed since that time?

Mr. FOX. That has been financed by the funds they have raised themselves from the allied trades.

Maj. HUMES. Has there been any contribution from the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FOX. I think not. I think, on the contrary, that they have paid money to us.

Maj. HUMES. They have become a source of revenue now, have they?

Senator OVERMAN. A common practice. Do you know how much was expended in that way?

Mr. FOX. Oh, I should have to guess at that, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Give us an estimate.

Mr. FOX. I think that would vary a great deal from year to year. The last year or so we have been rather quiescent. Before that, it may have amounted to $25,000 or $50,000 a year. It may have amounted to more, for all I know.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, what was the relation that existed between your association and Mr. Proebstle?

Mr. FOX. Mr. McDermott can tell you more about that than I can. Mr. Proebstle is the international secretary of the Brewery Workers' Union, and Mr. Proebstle handled, as I understand it, the publicity matters for his organization.

Maj. HUMES. Was he on the pay roll of your organization?

Mr. FOX. Not to my knowledge. In fact, I am quite sure he was not. I think if Mr. Proebstle had been paid by us, he could not have held his job with the brewery workers for a day.

Maj. HUMES. You said this morning that you had from time to time employed Mr. Bohm.

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And he was representing an organization, was he not? Did he not represent the maltsters?

Mr. FOX. I do not know. I never heard of it.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not through one of those organizations that he was a member of the central labor body of New York?

Mr. FOX. I do not know what craft he represented in that connection. I do not think it was any of our people.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Exhibit No. 29, a long list, entitled "Summary of telegram bills sent in by Mr. Proebstle," appearing to be bills from all over the country. What explanation is there of that?

Mr. FOX. Major, there was a joint arrangement for some kind of a joint publicity bureau, or something of that kind, which was conducted here for I do not know how long. I am not sufficiently familiar with it to answer these questions, but I think Mr. McDermott can tell you.

Maj. HUMES. That was an arrangement that was carried on through the labor committee, was it not?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. This same labor committee that we have been discussing?

Mr. FOX. No; I think it was carried on through the organization bureau, not the labor committee.

Maj. HUMES. What is the committee of allied interests?

Mr. FOX. I do not think there is any such committee now. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. It ceased to exist since April 26, then. There is a bill from them on April 26.

Mr. FOX. Oh, yes; I recall it. There is a local committee in New York of allied interests, and the only thing I have had to do with them is to buy some copies of an article in the North American Review for which they were responsible. I see that the chairman of that is a hotel man.

(The paper referred to is not printed in this record.)

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Fox, what is the working arrangement at the present time between the National Association of Commerce and Labor and your organization?

Mr. FOX. The Association of Commerce and Labor at the present time, as I understand it—I am not a member of the committee—is a collecting agency, and the understanding is that their finance committee will pay us from time to time for publicity matters. I think we have received this year—I think the records there show it—somethink like $20,000 from the Association of Commerce and Labor for bills that we have sent them.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this letter from the National Association of Commerce and Labor, addressed to yourself, April 20, 1918:

Beg leave to enclose herewith check amounting to $4542.11 covering the following invoices:
Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, $1,911.20.
North American Review, $1,913.
Burr Printing House, $453.80.
Mail and Express, Job Printing, $135.
Boyd City Dispatch, $129.11.

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Why were they sending you a remittance in connection with those invoices?

Mr. FOX. Those were all publicity matters which we sent to them, and their finance committee passed upon them as being properly within the scope of their work, and they remitted accordingly.

Maj. HUMES. At whose instance were the bills contracted?

Mr. FOX. At ours.

Maj. HUMES. At your instance?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What activities do the National Association of Commerce and Labor carry on upon their own responsibility in connection with which they expend money?

Mr. FOX. I can not answer that question sir. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Who is Mr. Lilienthal, the president?

Mr. FOX. He is the man who manages it.

Maj. HUMES. What is his business?

Mr. FOX. He is employed by the Association of Commerce and Labor to manage it.

Maj. HUMES. What is this Labor's Emergency Liberty League?

Mr. FOX. That is this Proebstle thing that I was just referring to. I had forgotten the name of it.

Maj. HUMES. I see it says: "Labor's Emergency Liberty League, Washington, D. C."

Mr. FOX. My impression—this is subject to correction by my associate—is that the arrangement with that organization was that the employers were to pay 50 per cent and the workmen to pay 50 per cent of the cost of their operations.

Maj. HUMES. This is a report made by that organization to you?

Mr. FOX. Yes; evidently.

Maj. HUMES. Was that made to you in order that you might reimburse them for 50 per cent of the expenditure?

Mr. FOX. I do not recall, sir; but I know that reports were sent in.

Maj. HUMES. How does it come to be in your possession?

Mr. Fox. We had a man named Moffett who represented us in this matter, and all of these bills I think were O. K'd by him, and then either amounts paid on account or else half the amount paid, I do not know exactly how, by the treasurer.

Maj. Humes. What I asked you was how this came in your hands and what were you going to do with it, or what are you going to do with it? How is the matter handled?

Mr. Fox. I know that the accounts have been settled up. That is all I can tell you.

Maj. Humes. Who settled them?

Mr. Fox. They were settled up by the treasurer on the O. K. of Mr. Moffett, and after his O. K., I think I O. K'd it.

Maj. Humes. Who is Mr. Moffett?

Mr. Fox. Mr. Moffett is our labor man. I think you will find the record of those in Mr. Liebmann's advertising account.

Maj. Humes. Mr. Moffett is a man on your pay rolls, is he?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. What is his business outside of being employed by you?

Mr. Fox. Wait a minute; just let me conclude for a minute. I think those bills were paid by Mr. Liebmann out of his advertising account, and I think you will find in his advertising account the receipts. I think he told me that the receipts were there.

Maj. Humes. Who is Mr. Charles Gehring?

Mr. Fox. Mr. Gehring is the editor of the Hotel Review and the "live wire" of the hotel business.

Maj. Humes. What is the American Hotel Protective Association?

Mr. Fox. I think that is their national organization, or one of their national organizations.

Maj. Humes. When was it organized?

Mr. Fox. I do not know.

Maj. Humes. Is it something of very recent organization?

Mr. Fox. I rather think it is.

Maj. Humes. Something that has been organized recently? Have you assisted in financing these activities?

Mr. Fox. We have financed Mr. Gehring.

Maj. Humes. You financed him?

Mr. Fox. Yes. That is, we entered into an arrangement with Mr. Gehring to try—well, there were two things. One was to try to interest hotel people in an organization of their own and the other was to try to convert hotel people to the beer and light wine idea.

Maj. Hume. You paid Mr. Gehring $2,000 at one time?

Mr. Fox. I think we paid him altogether $3,000.

Senator Wolcott. Mr. Fox, have the wine people a national organization?

Mr. Fox. They have of a sort. I do not think it is very active. I think their national organization is rather nominal, but I think they have a strong California organization.

Senator Wolcott. At one time certainly the beer people and the strong-drink liquor people had a community of interest in the matter of finances, at least?

Mr. Fox. Yes, yes.

Senator Wolcott. And also in the matter of propaganda, I think?

Mr. Fox. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was there ever any such community of interest recognized as existing between the beer people and the wine people?

Mr. FOX. Oh, yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did the National Association of Brewers have available for use to any extent funds contributed by the wine people?

Mr. FOX. I do not think the wine people ever had any funds to amount to anything, except, as I say, their California association had for local purposes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, in your advertising did you ever advertise in "The Masses"?

Mr. FOX. Not to my recollection.

Major HUMES. That was to handle through an agency, I suppose? [Exhibiting paper to witness.]

Mr. FOX. I do not know anything about it, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, I want to come back to this joint harmony committee meeting. You attended that meeting, and you organized a joint harmony committee, did you not?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Representing the brewers, the wholesalers, and the retailers?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And has not that arrangement been carried on right up to the present time?

Mr. FOX. It died almost before it was born, that thing did. It petered right out.

Maj. HUMES. It is maintained in some of the States still, is it not?

Mr. FOX. I should think very likely, but I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. That meeting decided to continue the arrangements that had existed, by which the dealers were to pay one-third and the brewers two-thirds, did it not?

Mr. FOX. You are not referring to the joint harmony meeting?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. That is, it was agreed there that each one would report back to its organization in favor of a continuance of that. No; I mean this joint conference, the first that was held, before you got to the joint harmony meeting. It followed.

Mr. FOX. I do not recollect that, sir. You will have to refresh my memory on that.

Maj. HUMES. You have not kept any minutes of the association since the spring of 1916?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any records showing the amount of the assessment that is levied by the several State associations?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. The assessments that are levied by State associations are very much larger than those levied by the national association, are they not?

Mr. FOX. My general impression is that the assessments of the State associations are either very much larger or very much smaller, according to exigencies. For instance, if they have a State-wide prohibition fight on they may make a very heavy assessment; but I think some of the other associations have a very small assessment.

Maj. HUMES. Have you not had the experience of members of your association asking to be excused from dues for a given year because of the enormous State assessment that they had to pay?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. Do you not know of instances where they have collected as high as 20 cents a barrel for the State association?

Mr. Fox. I could not give particular instances, but I believe that that is true. I think that is a matter of common knowledge.

Maj. Humes. What is the amount of the regular dues and assessments of the New York State association?

Mr. Fox. I do not know, sir.

Maj. Humes. Are you not sufficiently in touch with the State association in your own State to know what they are doing?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. Humes. Do you not keep the record of the activities of the several State associations?

Mr. Fox. Only so far as they may publish advertising matter, etc.

Maj. Humes. Have you not any record of these matters in your office for your information?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. Humes. Do you not think it is rather dangerous for officials with such faulty memories as yours and some others to depend entirely upon your memory for your activities?

Mr. Fox. That is a matter of opinion, sir. I have never found that it embarrassed me in my work.

Maj. Humes. In other words, the work that you were carrying on was of such a nature that it was very desirable to forget promptly what had occurred the day before?

Mr. Fox. Oh, no. My work is of a hand-to-mouth character.

Maj. Humes. Is the expenditure of a million dollars a year a hand-to-mouth work?

Mr. Fox. I do not expend a million dollars a year, sir.

Maj. Humes. Are not you the secretary of a corporation that spends frequently a million dollars in a year?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. Humes. You have not even the minutes of your trustees' meetings?

Mr. Fox. I have no minutes at all. Major, you say "frequently." I only recall one year in our history when we had a million dollars a year or anything approaching it.

Maj. Humes. How much did you have last year?

Mr. Fox. About $200,000.

Maj. Humes. You had $537,000 for advertising alone?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. How much more did you have?

Mr. Fox. About $200,000.

Maj. Humes. About $200,000?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. Humes. Where did that come from?

Mr. Fox. From dues.

Maj. Humes. What were your dues?

Mr. Fox. A cent a barrel.

Maj. Humes. What is the barrelage of your total membership?

Mr. Fox. It is rather hard to figure it now, because of the various restriction orders of the last year. We used to figure that we represented 60 per cent of the industry. We have had a number of resignations, etc.; and I doubt if to-day we represent more than 30 or 40 per cent.

Maj. HUMES. You testified a few moments ago that this advertising sheet represented about 50 per cent numerically, and about two-thirds in volume.

Mr. FOX. Not of the industry; of our members.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, that it represented that portion of your membership?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And that represents 2 cents a barrel?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you raised $537,000 from two-thirds of the capacity on the 2-cent basis? Then, on that basis, what would it be at 1 cent on the total capacity? It is unfortunate you have not any books to show what the receipts were, or we would not have to figure this out in this way.

Mr. FOX. Those are our total receipts. Now, I told you I was guessing at the output, but I can figure it. (After making computation.) That would figure out between 16,000,000 and 17,000,000 barrels.

Maj. HUMES. Between 16,000,000 and 17,000,000 barrels?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In 1913 the 3-cent contracts that you had, aggregated over 25,000,000 barrels, and they did not represent your total membership, did they?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any record to show what the total barrelage of your membership is?

Mr. FOX. The total barrelage of our membership is represented by the dues. Those are the dues on the basis of a cent a barrel.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, does each member fix the amount of his own dues, or do you keep a record of their barrelage to know how much they owe you?

Mr. FOX. We issue a card to them when we send out a notice of the dues in the spring, asking them to send that in with their check, giving their barrelage; and that is returned to them in the form of a receipt. The amount of dues then is based on a cent a barrel on their barrelage. As I say, the restriction orders of the past year, the restriction orders on output and on materials, and on coal, etc., I think probably have reduced the output of the beer business to-day from over 60,000,000 barrels to less than 40,000,000.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say that this list included in Exhibit 47 of the receipts on the advertising account includes all of the money that has been received?

Mr. FOX. Absolutely, and the dues.

Maj. HUMES. And the dues?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then what is this record, this membership record, showing current dues?

Mr. FOX. The membership record is carried over from year to year to show what our membership is. At the end of the year—that is, on the 31st of March, when our fiscal year ends—we carry this along so as to have a membership record. This is our membership record.

Maj. HUMES. Is not this an entry of the dues that were paid?

Mr. FOX. Yes. As the dues are paid, they are entered on here.

Maj. HUMES. Is not that in addition to this?

Mr. FOX. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you show me how the items on one embrace the items on the other?

Mr. FOX. That is advertising. If you will hand me the dues——

Maj. HUMES. That is what I am talking about. You say this advertising list includes dues and everything else.

Mr. FOX. Oh, no, I do not.

Maj. HUMES. That is what you testified to a minute ago. I am just trying to straighten that out.

Mr. FOX. I said "and the dues"—the advertising and the dues. The advertising is $535,000, and I think the dues total something like $200,000.

Maj. HUMES. Now I will get to it. Your advertising, based on a 2-cent assessment, amounts to $535,000?

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. If the advertising contributors embraced all of the members of your association, the 1-cent dues would be half of $535,000, or about $265,000?

Mr. FOX. Yes; but you will notice that the advertising account we began to collect in 1916 and the dues were begun to be collected in 1918.

Maj. HUMES. How is that?

Mr. FOX. The advertising account was started in October, 1917, and is, therefore, based on the output of the men who had subscribed for the preceding revenue year, ending June 30, 1916. The dues were of April 1, which was when our fiscal year begins, April 1, 1918, and were basel upon the sales for 12 months ending March 31, 1918.

Maj. HUMES. And this represents only about 60 per cent of the production of that period. How do you reconcile the figures?

Mr. FOX. You mean the advertising?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. FOX. The advertising is purely a voluntary matter.

Maj. HUMES. That is not the question. You say that it represents 60 per cent of the output?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Therefore, the barrelage from the membership is very much larger than the barrelage as represented here.

Mr. FOX. I may have been wrong in that estimate. You will notice that some of those are contributions from some men who are willing to contribute to the advertising fund, but who were not members of the association apparently, contributed in a lump sum.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any written contracts covering this fund?

Mr. FOX. No.

Maj. HUMES. For the fund that you arranged for in 1913 you had written contracts entered into for a period of five years?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were those contracts all abrogated prior to maturity?

Mr. Fox. Yes. I do not think there was any official action taken, but it was understood they had passed out of existence.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any financial record showing the receipts and the expenditures of the United States Brewers' Association at any time during the time that you have been an officer of the association?

Mr. Fox. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Has there ever been such a record kept?

Mr. Fox. I do not believe there has been. If so, it would not have been in my charge.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the present treasurer of the association?

Mr. Fox. Peter Doelger, of New York.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the present president?

Mr. Fox. Mr. Feigenspan.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Liebmann is chairman of the publication committee?

Mr. Fox. No; the advertising committee.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a new committee that has been organized?

Mr. Fox. Yes; that is a special committee organized to handle this advertising.

Maj. HUMES. What is the duty of the publication committee?

Mr. Fox. The publication committee is very largely inactive. I put up to Mr. Poth matters of general policy and he turns down a very large number of things.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you have practical charge and almost absolute charge of all of the executive affairs of this association?

Mr. Fox. No. I have charge of the office and general charge of publicity.

Maj. HUMES. Just what are your duties?

Mr. Fox. I am entirely an office man. My duty is, first of all, to boost the membership, and maintain correspondence with the members, maintain correspondence with the various departments in Washington, and I am at the present time the secretary of our war service committee and my duty is to keep general oversight over publicity matters and the library.

Senator OVERMAN. What departments have you in Washington?

Mr. Fox. We have no department in Washington. The only representative we have in Washington is our counsel, Mr. Crain.

Senator NELSON. Have you no other representatives here than your counsel?

Mr. Fox. No.

Senator NELSON. And never have had?

Mr. Fox. Not to my recollection, not in my time that I know anything about.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not one of your duties to become affiliated with just as many organizations as possible?

Mr. Fox. No; I would not say that was my duty at all. It was a matter that I considered was desirable.

Maj. HUMES. A good asset?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How many organizations of various kinds do you belong to?

Mr. Fox. I think before I went with the brewers I probably belonged to about 15 or 20, and I suppose now that I belong to over 40.

Maj. HUMES. Literary, scientific and educational, and civic organizations of different kinds.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you are more or less active in all of them?

Mr. Fox. No; a very large proportion of them I belong to for the purpose of getting their reports. The only way in which you can get their reports is to be a member.

Maj. HUMES. And for keeping in touch with all of their activities?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that when a gentleman came over here from Europe to investigate conditions in this country, and especially industrial accidents and efficiency, you took him in tow and practically took him over and dominated his report.

Mr. Fox. No.

Maj. HUMES. You remember the incident?

Mr. Fox. I remember meeting such a gentleman and giving him any information that I could.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not write a letter to Mr. Andreae rather boasting of what you had diplomatically accomplished?

Mr. Fox. I may have, but I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. And the report of this gentleman was rather satisfactory, was it not?

Mr. Fox. As I recall it.

Maj. HUMES. And was published, and you made it a point to get it into all of the libraries?

Mr. Fox. That is my recollection.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have any method of circularizing Congress?

Mr. Fox. I think that we circularized Congress and legislatures generally on anything that we thought might be particularly interesting from a legislative standpoint.

Senator OVERMAN. Legislatures and Congress?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What was your method of doing that? Did you send out from your headquarters or did you get people to write to Congress?

Mr. Fox. Under our method, recently at least, we have mailing lists, which either we furnished ourselves or were furnished by a mailing agency. I think the last year or so has been practically handled by the mailing agency known as Boyd's Dispatch, and we simply turned over reports in bulk to them and had them sent out.

Senator OVERMAN. Were they sent direct from your office or to Congressmen from their different districts and States?

Mr. Fox. They were sent from New York.

Senator OVERMAN. You had no method by which you had individuals in different districts write to Congress?

Mr. Fox. You mean on pending legislation?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. Fox. Oh, I think that in the Federal prohibition bill, for instance, we asked our members individually to busy themselves and have a number of letters sent to Congressmen.

Senator OVERMAN. And telegrams?

Mr. Fox. And telegrams.

Senator OVERMAN. Were these telegrams couched in the same language, or did you have different kinds of telegrams sent? Was there a formal telegram gotten up by your association?

Mr. Fox. No; I do not think so. Of course, it would be highly desirable to have as much variation as possible in the telegrams; but that, I think, very rarely occurs.

Senator NELSON. Did you get others besides members of your association to write and send telegrams to Members of Congress or to State legislatures?

Mr. Fox. Friends and sympathizers that could be obtained to send such letters.

Senator NELSON. Who would pay for those telegrams?

Mr. Fox. As a rule they paid for them themselves. I think the only time last year that we got a bill was from some man in Cleveland. He sent us quite a bill.

Senator NELSON. Did you not carry on a kind of correspondence bureau under your auspices?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. A correspondence bureau with legislators and public officials?

Mr. Fox. I do not think we had correspondence except very occasional correspondence of that sort. Of course, I had a great deal of business correspondence with the departments here, but I do not think we had any correspondence with others.

Senator NELSON. I refer to what you would call educational correspondence.

Mr. Fox. Yes. Of course, if any fellow gave us an opening we took advantage of it and wrote to him, but I do not think we got very many such openings.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you send many pamphlets to Congressmen?

Mr. Fox. I guess so. You will understand that I was in charge of a large office with a number of clerks, and we had a shipping department for that sort of thing. I could not answer of my own personal knowledge, but I think probably a good many.

Senator NELSON. You publish a kind of annual book, do you not, or report?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Partly of a statistical character and partly of a literary character?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And you have sent them to Congressmen?

Mr. Fox. We have sent them, I think, to every Member of Congress, and I think we circulated about 30,000 copies of them.

Senator NELSON. I know that I have received a copy of that book for at least two years, if not longer.

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Among all those pamphlets and books in your extensive library I find here another book which is very astonishing to me, for I never have before heard of such a thing. It is a blue book giving the names of women in certain red-light districts. Why did you have that sort of a book on your table? I see that it is marked "Office copy."

Mr. Fox. May I see that, sir?

Senator NELSON. And here is another of the same kind.

Senator OVERMAN. Describing the women and what sort of houses they keep?

Mr. Fox. Yes; this was an infamous publication that was gotten out by some liquor house in New Orleans years ago. My recollection is that I saw the names of one or two reputable concerns advertising in it, and I wrote them and called their attention to the abominable character of the book. That is the only recollection that I have of that.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, we could go on with the exhibits that we have here for several days with Mr. Fox, but I think the rest of the exhibits largely speak for themselves, and when they are presented they will cover the ground probably more thoroughly than would the memory of Mr. Fox if we undertook to continue the oral examination.

Mr. Fox. I am perfectly willing to put myself entirely in your hands, Maj. Humes, in that respect, and to assume that everything that you put in is authentic and comes from our records. May I just say in regard to that abominable publication to which Senator Overman has just called my attention, that our library contains upon its shelves a large number of books, some 2,000 or 3,000 books. This sort of stuff is not upon our shelves. That evidently was taken from these index files.

Maj. HUMES. How do you account for the advertisement of Pabst in it?

Mr. Fox. That is a very old document, and as I say, my recollection is that the reason I had that at all was because my attention was called to the advertisement of the gentleman whom you mentioned.

Senator OVERMAN. I see that this is a tenth edition of that book

Mr. Fox. I think that is a pretty old, obsolete history in New Orleans.

Senator WOLCOTT. If I understand you, in some way which you can not recall, your attention was called to the advertisements of people that you considered reputable houses in this book of abominable character, and you got hold of the book for the purpose of picking out the people you wanted to write to and calling their attention to the fact that their advertisement was in there. Is that the idea?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were not preserving the book for any value it might have to the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. Fox. No. Still you can imagine that with several hundred thousand documents on hand we can not perhaps keep a very close scrutiny of all the material, as we ought to.

Senator WOLCOTT. I understand that. You merely had the book for the purpose of checking up who the advertisers were, for you to notify?

Mr. Fox. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Fox, I show you here a bundle of exhibits that were arranged from your files, in my office. They are your files, or files of the National Association of Commerce and Labor. I ask you whether or not those records as far as they appear to come from the files of the United States Brewers' Association are their files and a part of their files?

Mr. FOX. Yes. I should think the same answer might go for the Association of Commerce and Labor. Some of those Association of Commerce and Labor things I think came from our files.

Maj. HUMES. Very few of them. Are these the minutes of the United States Brewers' Association which I show you?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You can put those in as exhibits, but not for the record.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; that is my idea. Some of them I desire to ultimately call to the attention of the committee. I ask you the same question with reference to this envelope containing miscellaneous records, purporting to be from your files, which I shall mark "Exhibit No. 1000."

Mr. FOX (after examination). Yes; those are evidently from our files.

Maj. HUMES. I also show you an envelope which I shall mark "Exhibit No. 1001," being various reports purporting to come from the files of the United States Brewers' Association. Do they so come?

Mr. FOX (after examination). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to three bank pass books, one on the Germania Bank, one on the Northwestern Bank, and on the Commercial Trust Co. of New Jersey, and I ask you if those are the pass books of the association?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know anything about these surveys?

Mr. FOX. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you want those bank pass books to be among the exhibits?

Maj. HUMES. Those are the old pass books. Mr. Fox had produced the ones to date. Those are prior to 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. I wondered if you wanted them in as exhibits.

Mr. FOX. No.

Maj. HUMES. No; we do not want to put the bank books in, but we want to be able to offer a summary from them gotten up by some one who has made the calculation. These other bank books which I show you are the current bank pass books?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any more witnesses you desire to examine?

Maj. HUMES. I think this is all with this witness. I have another witness who is very anxious to get away.

Mr. FOX. I understand that you will notify me if you desire me again?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN GARDINER.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, you live in Philadelphia?

Mr. GARDINER. I do.

Maj. HUMES. How long have you been an officer of the United States Brewers' Association, approximately?

Mr. GARDINER. I suppose I was an officer for 10 years, possibly 12 or 13.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period were you the chairman of the organization committee?

Mr. GARDINER. About five years.

Maj. HUMES. Over what period?

Mr. GARDINER. About 1911 to 1916.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time were you an officer of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I was president of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association from the time of its organization until it went out of existence in 1917.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to tell me that the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association is out of existence?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; the one I was president of, but a new one was organized.

Maj. HUMES. It still bears the name Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, does it not?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. So as not to confuse the issue, let us get back to the United States Brewers' Association. Will you state what the purpose of the organization bureau of the United States Brewers' Association was?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. Its purpose was to take charge of the contests that arose on the wet and dry question from the wet side, and for that purpose they adopted every legitimate course that we could think of to endeavor to arouse public sentiment in our favor.

Maj. HUMES. Will you explain just how you operated?

Mr. GARDINER. When a contest came up in a State, of course there were always two sides to it, the wets and the drys. The drys usually brought on the contest. The opponents to that were those who were opposed to a dry condition. Then we would circularize the State, hold public meetings, employ speakers, use the newspapers for the purpose as I have stated of endeavoring to create public sentiment favorable to the wet side.

Maj. HUMES. What was your method of organization in a State when you went into a State?

Mr. GARDINER. That was largely in the hands of a local committee—the wet committee—and we would go over the field with them and determine what methods were best to be employed and how deeply to employ them, and then the matter was left in the hands of the local committee for its action and operation.

Maj. HUMES. What working agreement did your committee have, or your association, with the wholesale liquor dealers?

Mr. GARDINER. They had a working agreement there by which they paid one-third of the cost of any particular campaign, and we paid two-thirds; that is, one to two.

Maj. HUMES. How was your organization committee financed?

Mr. GARDINER. The organization committee was financed by the United States Brewers' Association; that is, that part of it that the brewers assumed.

Maj. HUMES. Was the money that was used to finance the organization bureau paid from the treasury of the association or was it subscribed directly by the members of the association through the organization bureau?

Mr. GARDINER. No; my understanding is that was subscribed from the treasury of the association.

Maj. HUMES. Did the organization bureau ever undertake, in addition to the resources that it had from the Brewers' Association, to raise funds in the several States and localities in which they were interested?

Mr. GARDINER. Not that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. They depended upon the local committees for the raising of funds locally?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How was the money that was paid to the organization committee or expended by them placed in their hands? Did you have a separate bank account, a separate fund that you called on?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I would get checks from the association. I did not have any books of my own.

Maj. HUMES. When you wanted funds for the purposes of your bureau you called on the association for the money?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And they turned it over to you?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Were the bills of your expenditures delivered to the association or did they take your word for the expenditures and give you the money?

Mr. GARDINER. They took my word for it.

Maj. HUMES. During what years was this practice adhered to?

Mr. GARDINER. I should say 1911, 1912, 1913, and 1914. I think 1914 was the last year that I had any active connection with it. We always felt, Major, that we were within our rights in making these contests. We were endeavoring as Senator King said yesterday, to save ourselves from annihilation. During the operation of that work we became aware of the fact that in doing what we were doing we were violating a law. You know, sir, how that was brought to our attention. When it was brought to our attention we stopped immediately, so far as I am concerned, and I have not turned a hand since.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, did you have a treasurer of your organization bureau?

Mr. GARDINER. No; not that I recall, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you maintain a bank account of the funds that came into your possession?

Mr. GARDINER. No.

Maj. HUMES. Can you give us an idea of how much came into your hands in each of these several years, and was expended through your bureau?

Mr. GARDINER. I could not. I have been thinking over that for the last two days since I have been here, and I imagine that in those years I have referred to, the organization bureau expended probably from $400,000 to $500,000.

Maj. HUMES. How much, for instance, did they spend in 1914, the year that the dues were approximately $1,000,000—the assessment? How much of that was spent by the organization bureau?

Mr. GARDINER. I would say probably $100,000.

Maj. HUMES. Can you tell us in what State that money wes expended?

Mr. GARDINER. No.

Maj. HUMES. In 1914? Just to get a survey of the activities, Mr. Gardiner——

Mr. GARDINER. I understand, sir; but my connection with the association was more of a supervisory character. I was not brought into close personal contact with the details. I relied upon Mr. McDermott, who was my assistant in the matter, and who, no doubt, could answer the question more intelligently than I.

Maj. HUMES. Were you a party to any arrangement at any time with the German-American Alliance?

Mr. GARDINER. Never, that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not present at a conference in the city of Philadelphia that was attended by Mr. Keller and Mr. Tjarks and Mr. Hexamer and possibly Mr. Timm, and yourself?

Mr. GARDINER. What year was that, sir?

Maj. HUMES. I think that was in the fall of 1913.

Mr. GARDINER. I may have been.

Maj. HUMES. Possibly November or December?

Mr. GARDINER. It may have been. I may have been there.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not remember that occurrence, when it was arranged that Mr. Keller should organize a political bureau in the German-American Alliance, to be financed by Mr. Andreae?

Mr. GARDINER. I was just going to say that my recollection is that Mr. Keller was connected up with Mr. Andreae, and not with me.

Maj. HUMES. But in the first instance, I understood—it is my understanding that you were present at the conference in Philadelphia where the arrangements were made for this activity.

Mr. GARDINER. I may have been, but I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. You know Dr. Hexamer?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you meet him frequently?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, no; but I have known him for years. I have known Dr. Hexamer probably 20 years. He was in the insurance business in Philadelphia.

Maj. HUMES. You and he were very good friend, I presume?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, we had a pleasant acquaintance. I met him occasionally, always accidentally—rarely by appointment.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever yourself—your organization bureau, or did you ever—know of the United States Brewers' Association contributing money directly to the German-American Alliance prior to Mr. Andreae's arrangement with them?

Mr. GARDINER. Not that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the United States Brewers' Association, for a considerable period of time, paid them $2,500 quarterly to finance their organization and to keep it alive?

Mr. GARDINER. That may be the case, Major, but I do not recall it. If it were done, I imagine it was done for the purpose of getting the benefit of the officials of the German-American Alliance to stir up feeling in a State, or one State or another, where there was such a fight as I have described on tap.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in 1914 the activities of your bureau included Texas and Iowa and Virginia and Florida?

Mr. GARDINER. It is very likely.

Maj. HUMES. And Maine?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. I do recall the year.

Maj. HUMES. And Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that we were in Illinois, Indiana, or Ohio.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that Mr. Andreae was in there, did you not?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, well, we never went along with Mr. Andreae at all.

Maj. HUMES. Did not you and Mr. Andreae enter into partnership agreements?

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In financing——

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not remember an arrangement that was entered into between Mr. Andreae and Mr. Sunstein and yourself for financing the campaign in Iowa?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not recall it. Do you know what year that was, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; I will show you some of your correspondence, to refresh your recollection.

Mr. GARDINER. I will be very glad to see it.

Maj. HUMES. To further refresh your recollection while we are looking up these exhibits, do you not remember that an agreement was made by which you were to contribute $12,500, Mr. Sunstein $12,500, and Mr. Andreae from his funds, $12,500, in the Iowa fight?

Mr. GARDINER. It may be; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I will show you Exhibits Nos. 509 to 530, most of them pertaining to the transaction, to refresh your recollection.

Mr. GARDINER (after examining papers). This is in 1914. Two of theses letters are mine.

Maj. HUMES. Now, what do you say, since your recollection is refreshed, with reference to the agreement in the State of Iowa?

Mr. GARDINER. I should say it was made.

Maj. HUMES. As I have outlined?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you forwarded to Mr. Andreae your share and the share of Mr. Sunstein in the bill, and he forwarded it with his share to the people in Iowa?

Mr. GARDINER. I judge so; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How did you secure the funds from Mr. Sunstein?

Mr. GARDINER. I suppose he sent it to me by check.

Maj. HUMES. He sent you a check?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. I do not recall it, however.

Maj. HUMES. The record indicates that each time you sent a check—for each of three times you sent a check—for about $8,200, or two-thirds of $12,500, including yours and Mr. Sunstein's?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. On what account was that check drawn?

Mr. GARDINER. That was a United States Brewers' Association check, I judge. It was not my check.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that Mr. Sunstein's funds were deposited in the accounts of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not mean——

Maj. HUMES. (continuing). And then reimbursed?

Mr. GARDINER. I think that is very likely; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the treasurer, at that time, of the United Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall..

Maj. HUMES. Was it not Mr. Schmidt at that time?

Mr. GARDINER. No; probably Mr. Huepfel, although I do not know the date, or what year he was treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever interest yourself in individual Congressmen?

Mr. GARDINER. Never.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Exhibit No. 726, with reference to the election of a Congressman in the State of Illinois, and ask you if that is your letter and if you were not interested in that contest [handing witness exhibit]?

Mr. GARDINER (after examination). Yes, this is my letter; but I do not recall the situation. I do not recall the circumstances. Who was Mr. Edmund B. Lord? I do not recall him.

Maj. HUMES. You are the man who is vouching for him in that correspondence. That is not my letter.

Mr. GARDINER. I have no doubt I knew him at the time I wrote this letter, but upon my word, I do not recall him now.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go into Virginia that same year?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj HUMES. Have you any idea how much you expended in the State of Virginia?

Mr. GARDINER. I have not.

Maj. HUMES. Was it a considerable sum?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not think it was so very much.

Maj. HUMES. But you did spend some money down there, did you?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you go into Maine?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That year?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; Mr. McDermott was up there a lot. I was up once, I think.

Maj. HUMES. And you had a number of your men up there making a survey of the State, did you not?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not in Virginia have an agreement with the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association that there they were to defray half of the expense and you half?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that. I thought that the proportion was always one to two. It may have been that there are letters there stating that, and if so, of course, it is correct.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a letter signed by yourself, Exhibit No. 801, to Mr. Andreae. I read an extract from that letter as follows:

Mr. Gibson and I conferred in Richmond the other day about the participation of your bureau in the Virginia campaign and he asked me if I thought a survey would be necessary in the State. I told him that I did not think so, although I confessed my inability to decide that matter from a practical understanding of the survey work, but I added that I would like the Andreae bureau to take part in the campaign with us, lending us its cooperation in the direction of utilizing the factors that have so far been nationalized in accordance with the understanding you and I had on this subject when the matter was discussed at our Chicago meeting.

Now, what was it that had been nationalized?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. At the Chicago meeting, between you and Andreae?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that. It was probably at the time—I think it was in Chicago when the arrangement concerning Iowa was made, and probably there were some general facts taken into consideration there.

Maj. HUMES. A survey was made down there by Mr. Andreae, was there not?

Mr. GARDINER. Down in Virginia?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think it was; although I had forgotten it. This is back four years, you know.

Maj. HUMES. And you further say in this letter:

I therefore suggested to Mr. Gibson, in view of its probable cost, that every element of expense that could be cut out, would be a great advantage and I hoped the assistance of your bureau could be secured without cost to the general fund.

What general fund were you referring to?

Mr. GARDINER. I was referring to the general fund participated in by Mr. Sunstein, representing the distillers, and myself, as representing the brewers; that we wanted to keep the drafts on that fund as low as possible.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the United States Brewers' Association made an appropriation to you each year of so much, and you had that much to utilize and use?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall as to that, major, but I think this, that if you did make such an appropriation it was more or less elastic. If I could possibly get along with less, I did it, but if I had to have more, I got it.

Maj. HUMES You go on to say here:

One-half of the cost, whatever it may be, must be borne by Mr. Sunstein and myself out of our general fund and it seems to me that the burden we are already under is so great that any easement of it will be a decided advantage to the general cause.

What did you mean by "our general fund," referring to yourself and Mr. Sunstein?

Mr. GARDINER. As I say, I think that was the general fund to which he contributed one-third and I contributed two-thirds.

Maj. HUMES. The Virginia people were to pay one-half?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I judge so from that.

Maj. HUMES. And you were to pay the other half?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That was the common practice, was it not, getting people locally to pay one-half of the expense and you to pay the other half?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; when we could get them to do it, but frequently we could not; more frequently than otherwise.

Maj. HUMES. Did they not frequently raise more money locally for political campaigns than the United States Association contributed?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think that was the case in most instances; but of course there were exceptions to it.

Maj. HUMES. You discussed going into Kansas that year, did you not?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not think we ever thought of going into Kansas.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that matter up?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not think so. I do not think we would have been crazy enough to think of that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not write to Mr. Andreae on May 14, 1914?

On my return from a visit to Virginia I find your letter of the 11th instant with the inclosed letter of Mr. Kander, appealing for support in a contemplated campaign in Kansas. I have no doubt an investigation would disclose the possibilities attending a campaign of the character indicated by Mr. Kander, but in view of the financial condition in which I am at present surrounded, it is impossible for me to take on any new assignments. I therefore return Mr. Kander's letter inclosed herein.

And then you go on and discuss the Virginia campaign.

After that did not Mr. Andreae make a preliminary survey out in Kansas?

Mr. GARDINER. He very likely did. I do not know as to that. But I know that I never seriously thought of going into Kansas, because I thought it would be absolutely futile.

Maj. HUMES. What were your activities in Texas that year?

Mr. GARDINER. The activities in Texas were, I think, not direct. We made contributions there. I remember that I was down there once, and I do not think I ever went back. I went over to Galveston from New Orleans.

Maj. HUMES. A good deal of money was spent there, was it not?

Mr. GARDINER. There must have been, by the Texas people. My recollection is that our contributions were not very heavy.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Julius Moersch, of Minnesota?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I have known him a long time.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that he attended a conference in Philadelphia between you and Hexamer and the rest?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think it very likely he did so.

Maj. HUMES. Does not that refresh your recollection?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think it was in Hexamer's office.

Maj. HUMES. What year was that?

Mr. GARDINER. 1913.

Maj. HUMES. November or December, 1913?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; 1913. I wanted, Major, to be particular about the year, because there has been no connection with any German or German Alliance since the United States entered into the war.

Maj. HUMES. You knew, did you not, though, that Mr. Andreae's relation was continuing?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I was never in touch or communication with Mr. Andreae, except as those letters indicate. I occasionally saw him in Philadelphia. He sometimes called me up when he came to Philadelphia, and there were other times when he was there that he did not. More frequently the latter.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the men that were on the pay roll of your bureau?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, Mr. McDermott handled all of that matter, and I think there was Mr. Thompson, and I really do not recall their names.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Rau?

Mr. GARDINER. That was a long while ago. I do not recall his name, even.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. GARDINER. He afterwards went with the Malthouse outfit.

Maj. HUMES. You employed speakers, too, did you?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In disbursing the funds that came into your possession, one way of disbursement was to pay them to the committees of the local brewers of the retail liquor dealers?

Mr. GARDINER. Usually we communicated with the local brewers.

Maj. HUMES. That is, I mean the wet committee in a State under operation was either presided over by a brewer, or he was an important man on the committee, and you put your money in through him?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you also put money in the State by way of direct contributions to political committees?

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You always maintained your own organization?

Mr. GARDINER. Absolutely so, so far as I recall.

Maj. HUMES. What were the elements, when you went into a State, that you organized and brought together under one control?

Mr. GARDINER. We usually did not organize those, major. As I recall, they were organized by the men themselves; and they would say: "Here, there is going to be a contest here, and we stand a chance of winning it, and we want you to help us. A, B, C. D, and E are members of our committee," and they would describe them to us. "They are men of reliability and responsibility." There was usually a lawyer on the committee to see that the bounds of prudence were not overstepped.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not the practice for you to make your contributions through this lawyer? Was not that the usual practice?

Mr. GARDINER. No.

Maj. HUMES. Did not the local brewers' association usually employ a lawyer who was practically the campaign manager?

Mr. GARDINER. That may be the case; yes. I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. To your recollection, was not that true in almost every State campaign that you went into?

Mr. GARDINER. My thought was, when I spoke just now, that they were brewers that were on the committee.

Maj. HUMES. Well, brewers were on the committee; but were not most of your financial connections with the attorneys for the local association?

Mr. GARDINER. They have been, but I do not recall.

Maj. HUMES. That was true in Iowa, was it not?

Mr. GARDINER. It was true in Iowa; yes.

Maj. HUMES. It was true in Texas, was it not?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not remember how the disposition of it was made in Texas. I would not have recalled in Iowa, except that you showed me that letter.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not really, when you went into a State, take general supervision of the organization work of the campaign, in order to follow out any general plan that you had found to work successfully as a result of your experience?

Mr. GARDINER. We recommended it to the committee, and they followed, I think, unless they had a better plan.

Maj. HUMES. And they had to adopt your plan of campaign, or a plan that was satisfactory to you, or you did not contribute?

Mr. GARDINER. Exactly.

Maj. HUMES. The result was that your organization dominated the method of campaign in each State that you went into?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; although we did not feel that it was domination in that way. We thought we were acting in the best interests of everybody concerned.

Maj. HUMES. Did you contribute money directly to candidates?

Mr. GARDINER. We did not.

Maj. HUMES. You made it a point to carry on your activities separate and independent from political committees and individual candidates, except in so far as your organization cooperated with a political committee or with a candidate's campaign?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I judge so; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, is it not a fact that in campaigns you and your force sought pledges and promises from candidates prior to election?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not recall any, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You made it a point to find out what the candidate was for, what he represented, and how he would stand on various questions; did you not?

Mr. GARDINER. We would not make contributions, of course, to a dry candidate; but my testimony has just been that we did not make contributions to candidates, as I understand it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, in these States that you went into, investigate all of the candidates, and prepare a list of candidates that you would support?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall anything of the kind, Major. My though is that we went into those States entirely on the wet-and-dry issue.

Maj. HUMES. Let me ask you one question directly. In Texas, for instance, was not your fight very largely for an individual candidate?

Mr. GARDINER. No. I do not even know who the individual candidate was. You mean the governor?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the Ferguson-Ball fight? When those names are mentioned, does it refresh your recollection?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I recall. I was going to say "Ferguson," although I do not remember at all contributing in that campaign—I mean, Ferguson's campaign. My memory is that we contributed in a wet-and-dry campaign in Texas.

Maj. HUMES. Was not the issue the election of a governor, and its relation to the wet-and-dry issue?

Mr. GARDINER. It may have been, but I do not recall it. Mr. McDermott would know more about that then I.

Maj. HUMES. For instance, in the State of Iowa did not the local committee that you were assisting to finance prepare a schedule of the candidates for every office to be elected in the State, and in every senatorial and legislative district, and was not that list prepared by the State organization with which you were cooperating?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that.

Maj. HUMES. And was not that list subsequently sent from Iowa to Chicago, to Mr. Andreae's bureau, and by him delivered to Mr. Keller, with instructions that that was the list of candidates that the German-American Alliance was to support?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that at all.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Exhibit No. 237, a letter from Mr. Andreae to Mr. Joseph Keller, dated May 19, 1914:

DEAR MR. KELLER: I am today in receipt from Mr. Thuenen, of the inclosed list of candidates who are to be supported by the German-American Alliance, which I forward to you for your information.

And attached to it is a list of candidates for every office in the State. Do you mean to say that you had no knowledge that that practice was carried on?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not say that, but I do say that I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. To get to a subject nearer home, then, Mr. Gardiner, is it not a fact that, in your dual capacity as chairman of the organization committee or bureau and as president of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, it has been the common practice to prepare a list of candidates for all of the offices to be elected in the several elections, and that list is sent out by the organization of the State Brewers' Association down through the local organizations for the purpose of promoting the cause that you were contending for?

Mr. GARDINER. Of course in Pennsylvania the contest there was always on the question of local option, and the State association probably was interested in those candidates.

Maj. HUMES. Was the local option question involved in congressional and senatorial elections?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not recall going into congressional elections at all, even in Pennsylvania.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that in 1914 there was prepared by the organization of which the State Brewers' Association was a part a complete schedule of all of the candidates for every office to be elected, and that that was submitted through the organization for support?

Mr. GARDINER. You mean through the Republican organization?

Maj. HUMES. I am speaking about through the organization of which the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association was a part. I have accepted your statement that instead of working through a political organization, you organized your own organization in a political unit.

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. In the States outside of those that you have mentioned we did that. In Pennsylvania I did not take any particularly active part. I was usually away; and while, as I say, it may be true that the State association was interested in candidates there, my memory is at fault on it, and I do not recall the fact.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that in every election the organization which the State Brewers' Association is a part of, and which it helps to finance, prepares that schedule of candidates?

Mr. GARDINER. They may.

Maj. HUMES. You have seen those lists, Mr. Gardiner?

Mr. GARDINER. In Pennsylvania?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDINER. Well, probably I have. I do not recall them.

Maj. HUMES. It is a matter of common knowledge, is it not?

Mr. GARDINER. Very likely.

Maj. HUMES. And it is also a matter of common knowledge, is it not—it is a matter within your knowledge—that those lists are made up as a result of a conference between the representatives of the State Brewers' Association and certain politicians?

Mr. GARDINER. It may be.

Maj. HUMES. For instance, were you not present at a conference in 1914 in the office of the State Brewers' Association, or one of the adjoining rooms? I believe the Philadelphia Lager Beer Association had offices in connection with the office of the State Brewers' Association there, did they not?

Mr. GARDINER. They used the same offices.

Maj. HUMES. But in that general suite of offices, there was a conference between certain representatives of the brewing interests and certain representatives of political organizations, party organizations?

Mr. GARDINER. There may have been; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. At which candidates were selected?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. And that in making the selection it was agreed that certain men from both parties in certain districts should be supported?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, well, I think that was always the case.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at that meeting there were selected a certain number of Republicans and a certain number of Democrats who were to be supported by your organization?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that, sir. I do not dispute it, but I really do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, what is the assessment of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know. It has been so long since we made any that I do not know. I think it was probably a cent or two cents a barrel when we used to have them.

Maj. HUMES. To refresh your recollection, I show you Gardiner Exhibit 1, and ask you if that is the schedule of assessments of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association for 1914 and 1915?

Mr. GARDINER. There was a committee appointed who drew up this schedule, but I do not know whether it was put into effect, Major. I think the rule——

Maj. HUMES. To refresh your recollection, that is a schedule that was furnished me by Mr. Ettla.

Mr. GARDINER. Then it is.

Maj. HUMES. We are safe in assuming that it is correct, then; are we not?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, perfectly.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Ettla was secretary of the State association; was he not?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. He is emeritus now.

Maj. HUMES. How much did you raise each year in the Pennsylvania State Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You were the president of the association.

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; but I was usually away, and I did not take any active part in those financial campaigns.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that your plan of organization in Pennsylvania was to organize first the State Brewers' Association and the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association united in the State at large? You have always been in alliance there; have you not?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not think so. We had nothing whatever to do with organizing the liquor associations in Pennsylvania.

Maj. HUMES. I say, you are cooperating.

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes; yes.

Maj. HUMES. But you unite for the purpose of a campaign. Then you organize the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association; do you not?

Mr. GARDINER. There is such an association.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not through the retail liquor dealers' association that you carry the organization into every political division of the State?

Mr. GARDINER. Probably.

Maj. HUMES. They handle the matter in each county?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What portion of the funds expended in Pennsylvania did the State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association contribute?

Mr. GARDINER. I have not the least idea, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, were you not the one dependable man in Pennsylvania in whose personal honesty everybody was satisfied to rest the cause?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, I hope so.

Maj. HUMES. And who was trusted with everything of a financial nature?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I did not have much to do with the financial operations there, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that because all of the elements in Pennsylvania felt that none of the funds would stick in your pockets as they passed through——.

Mr. GARDINER. They never did.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). You were more largely depended upon than anyone else?

Mr. GARDINER. It may be.

Maj. HUMES. And do you not know more about these activities in Pennsylvania than any other one man?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Who does know more than you?

Mr. GARDINER. I should think Ettla would know a great deal more than I.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that the elements in Pennsylvania that were working together trusted and confided in Charlie Ettla as they confided in you?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; to a large extent they did.

Maj. HUMES. How was the organization of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association carried on?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know. I never had anything to do with the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association.

Maj. HUMES. Was there not an alliance between the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, as represented by Neil Bonner, the State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, and the State Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. No; not that I recall. In my time we always worked separately.

Senator OVERMAN. You always worked separately, but to a common end?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes; to a common end. Neil Bonner, Major, is a very peculiar man, and they tell me he is pretty hard to get along with.

Maj. HUMES. Was not he really one of the most dependable field men, however, in 1914?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know. He never made any reports to me as to what was going on.

Maj. HUMES. Were you present at the conference where the general harmony committee was organized, and in which Neil Bonner represented the National Federation of Retail Liquor Dealers?

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You know that there was such a meeting?

Mr. GARDINER. I heard so. I was not present.

Maj. HUMES. Did you know that he represented the national body of retail liquor dealers in that joint harmony committee? Did you not know that?

Mr. GARDINER. I knew that he represented something; I did not know what.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, Mr. Bonner was to the retail liquor dealers what Mr. Sunstein was to the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, and what you were to the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; absolutely.

Maj. HUMES. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a photograph of a letter which closes: "Keep this communication confidential. Fraternally yours, Neil Bonner."

It is dated September 10, 1914. Have you ever seen that?

Mr. GARDINER (after examining letter). No, Major; I do not recall this particular letter, but I think I have seen a hundred or more like it. I do not mean of that particular brand, but along that character, probably. Neil is great on writing and sending out those letters.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

Mulholland, Pottsville; A. J. Twarowski, Nanticoke; M. S. Geary, Smithport.]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., September 10th, 1914.

MY DEAR SIR: I am addressing you this letter trusting that you will consider it as strictly confidential, and will immediately become active among your patrons, by requesting them to register their names as a voting citizen next Tuesday, September 15th. Unless they register they will be unable to vote in November.

You must fully realize that the coming election in November means more to every liquor dealer, regardless of the fact of his being a retailer, wholesaler, or brewer, than it ever has in the history of Pennsylvania.

Our enemies are well organized, and are about to make a determined effort to elect members to the coming legislature who will support their bills in favor of local option, anti-treating, holiday closing, and other measures, all or any of which, if passed, will practically mean the loss of hundreds of dollars monthly and yearly to every one of us. To some of our fellow dealers, it will mean that they will lose their license privilege, and in such instance, who knows where they will apply for a new license, perhaps across the street from where you are located now.

You cannot help reading the papers and realizing that there are but two candidates now for the office of Governor. If Vance McCormick, the Democratic nominee, wins the fight, your license will not be in force many more years.

We must also assist in the re-election of Senator Penrose.

For once in our business life, we are forced to defend our homes and business. Will you help us by urging your patrons to register.

Write out a notice and place it on your mirrors or back of your bar, calling the attention of every customer to the fact that he should register Tuesday, September 15th, without fail.

You can do much to help us out of our trouble if you will do so.

Keep this communication confidential.

Fraternally yours,

NEIL BONNER.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that done in cooperation with the other two organizations that were part of the triumvirate?

Mr. GARDINER. Not with our association; no, sir. I think that was entirely independent.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that your association in 1914 raised approximately $300,000?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. That was used in that year, and was not that about the amount that you raised and used this year?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, no.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in the year 1914 you raised and disbursed for political purposes in Pennsylvania $294,114.49?

Mr. GARDINER. Not that I know of. They may have done it, but I do not know of it.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to your bank account in the Northwestern National Bank, and ask you if that was not the amount that you collected that year. I will state that these are totals that have been made up, the additions. If you want to add them yourself, you can do so.

Mr. GARDINER. Not at all, if you have done it.

Maj. HUMES. Does it surprise you any—to get this on the record briefly—to know that your association collected in Pennsylvania in 1910 the sum of $121,275; in 1911 $104,209; in 1912 $179,191; in 1913 $146,554; in 1914 $294,114.49, and in 1915 $196,754?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; it does.

Maj. HUMES. Does that surprise you any?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; it does. I did not know that they did it.

Maj. HUMES. And you were the president of the association?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have the dues been reduced? Are they less in the new association than they were in the old association?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know what the dues are in the new association, because I did not attend its meeting or reorganization or have anything to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, you say that the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, of which you were president, went out of business in 1916?

Mr. GARDINER. 1917. They dragged along for a year without any meeting or anything else.

Maj. HUMES. Well, they went out of business about the time that the cases in the western district of Pennsylvania came up for final disposition?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. They went out of business because of the assurance and the promise that was given to the court at the time of sentence that they would desist from the practices of the past?

Mr. GARDINER. Positively; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you have not been connected with them since?

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. But the other individual brewers, many of whom were defendants in that case, immediately after the disbanding of that organization started a new organization by the same name? Is that correct?

Mr. GARDINER. That is correct. Now, I will tell you why they did it, Major. Our attorneys received from you a statement that if we were going to have an organization, an association, it must be incorporated, as the United States Brewers' Association was; and we put it up to our lawyers, and they said it was impossible to incorporate an association whose members were corporations, and we told our attorneys to submit that to you, and I understand that he did it.

Maj. HUMES. I never heard of that. The fact remains, then, that in an effort to make it appear that the defendants in that case had kept their promise to the court the association was dissolved, and a new association with the same name, that was not handicapped by any promises to the court, was organized? Is that correct?

Mr. GARDINER. That is correct; but, Major, before dealing harshly on that matter, I should like to consult with the attorney who gave us that information. He is a man whom you know.

Maj. HUMES. It is only a question of the facts. I know that the promise was made, as you say, to the court. Why did not you join this new association, Mr. Gardiner?

Mr. GARDINER. Because I am all through with this work, sir—positively all through.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not because, among other things, you proposed to keep the word that you gave to the court through your attorney?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, I would not like to say that the other men who joined were not equally high-minded.

Maj. HUMES. I am not asking that. I am asking you your reason.

Mr. GARDINER. I would not join the association.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know of any financial records of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association showing receipts or expenditures of money, except those books that are before you?

Mr. GARDINER. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. All the rest have been destroyed, have they?

Mr. GARDINER. That was what we testified to in Pittsburgh. I believe.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDINER. That was the treasurer's testimony, which I relied on. I did not destroy them myself.

Maj. HUMES. And your practice, I believe, was at the end of every month—so you stated at that time, and so your treasurer stated—that at the end of each month, when the bank-book was balanced, the checks and the check stubs were destroyed?

Mr. GARDINER. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. Why was that practice adhered to?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know. We always did it.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not an unusual business practice?

Mr. GARDINER. No; they had been doing it there for years.

Maj. HUMES. You do not do it in your own business, do you, Mr. Gardiner?

Mr. GARDINER. No.

Maj. HUMES. And Mr. Schmidt does not do it in his own business, does he?

Mr. GARDINER. I could not say as to that; presumably not.

Maj. HUMES. You know his character as a business man sufficiently well to be able to answer that, I think, on general principles.

Mr. GARDINER. I would say no, but I have no positive knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Then why, when he was responsible for a fund of approximately $300,000, would he follow that practice?

Mr. GARDINER. I could not tell you that.

Maj. HUMES. You also know that the allegation of the United States Brewers' Association is that they followed that practice; do you not?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think it was referred to here yesterday; was it not?

Maj. HUMES. I think so.

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Why was that necessary?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know, sir. I never have been an officer of that association, other than its president from 1905 to 1907, and I have been vice president since.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that expenditures made by the United States Brewers' Association by every department, except those made by you personally, have been criticized or questioned in some way from time to time at the meetings?

Mr. GARDINER. No; I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Are not the minutes full or criticism of expenditures?

Mr. GARDINER. They have no minutes. They did not have in that association, Major, any minutes.

Maj. HUMES. In what association?

Mr. GARDINER. In the Pennsylvania association.

Maj. HUMES. Oh! I am speaking of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes—I do not know as to that, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Why did not the Pennsylvania State Association keep any minues?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, you recollect that I testified to that in Pittsburgh. I have no objection to repeating it here. We never kept minutes in that association, from the time of its organization. At each meeting of the board, or of the association, the secretary made his notes of the proceedings, and subsequently they were filled in, written out in full; and they were kept until the subsequent meeting, when they were read and destroyed. You recollect that was my testimony in Pittsburg, possibly.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; I remember that very well. Why was it necessary, as soon as the minutes were read, to destroy them?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know, except that it was the custom we had adopted.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner, was it not because the activities of the association were entirely political in their nature, and it was better policy to preserve no record of the transactions? Is not that a fact?

Mr. GARDINER. Possibly I can not answer that, because there were other things that occurred at those meetings than political discussions, and they were all treated the same way. They all received the same treatment.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that there was no other real purpose of the Pennsylvania State Association or of any of the State associations, for that matter, than political activities?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, no; that is not a fact, Major. There are a great many things undertaken and carried into effect by those State associations.

Maj. HUMES. What has ever been carried into effect by the one of which you were president, for instance?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, we took up this question of labor; and there is an awful lot of manipulation there with the labor people up and down the line, one way or the other, that required the attention of poor old Charlie Ettla until he got too old to attend to it, and then they would take younger men and put them into it, and endeavor to straighten out difficulties and arrange better understandings between the men and their employers. Now, I do not mean with regard to their votes, or anything of that kind, because you never had to bother with anything like that in Pennsylvania, but to smooth out any misunderstandings that occurred with those men on labor conditions, hours of labor, rates, and matters like that, which are now largely attended to by the unions. They come in now and tell us what we must pay and what hours we must have. [Laughter.]

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the matter being brought up in your association as to the number of aliens in this country, and of an organized effort being made to get them naturalized, in order to increase the voting power, on the theory that the aliens would be more likely to be favorable to the cause that you were advocating?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir. An old friend of yours was interested in that to a large extent.

Maj. HUMES. Who is that?

Mr. GARDINER. Jim Mulvihill.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, yes; he was the chairman of the committee. Now, there was a committee appointed by your State association consisting of James P. Mulvhill, George Edel, Mr. Cusick of Scranton, Mr. Fuhrman of Shamokin, and Adam Scheidt of Norristown, to take charge of that?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you organized offices in Philadelphia, Scranton, and Pittsburgh, did you not?

Mr. GARDINER. Not in Philadelphia.

Maj. HUMES. Your local organization had an office?

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes; they would meet there occasionally, but there was not much done in Philadelphia.

Maj. HUMES. You were getting into the mining region more especially?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. Philadelphia was looked after by the downtown organization, not ours.

Maj. HUMES. And the purpose of this committee was to get these foreigners naturalized?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. So as to increase their voting power?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you figured you could make two or three hundred thousand votes in that way?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. Jim said he would do better than that, I think.

Maj. HUMES. An arrangement was entered into by which these offices that you opened were given the appearance and the earmark of labor offices? Is not that true?

Mr. GARDINER. Well, I do not know. I never was in one of their offices. I never saw one.

Maj. HUMES. You know the way the thing was worked? You know the policy of it?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes, sir; just as you state it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not also a fact that an arrangement was made with active labor leaders to allow the use of their names on the doors of these offices, to try to persuade the foreigners that—

Mr. GARDINER. That it was all right.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). That you were trying to bring into the fold, that labor was trying to help them?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And that was the camouflage that was used?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is that still in operation?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not believe it is. I do not think it is, but I do not know positively.

Maj. HUMES. It was costly. Was it successful?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes. Cusick said that he was very successful in his department, and Jim always maintained that it was a good thing, and so did George Edel. Personally, I do not know anything about its operation except what those men stated.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to the funds of the United Brewers' Association, how was this money that was used by your bureau placed in your hands?

Mr. GARDINER. Through checks of the association.

Maj. HUMES. The association would give you a check for a given amount?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who would deliver it to you?

Mr. GARDINER. It would come by mail.

Maj. HUMES. Would the check be made payable to you?

Mr. GARDINER. No, made payable to the man for whom it was intended.

Maj. HUMES. Is that the way you always handled it?

Mr. GARDINER. To the best of my recollection, yes. It is some time since I had any transactions of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not true that one of the common practices, while Mr. Schmidt was the treasurer, was to have Mr. Brockmeier turn the currency over to you?

Mr. GARDINER. No, I don't think so; I think it was in checks.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Brockmeier really took care of this matter for Mr. Schmidt, did he not?

Mr. GARDINER. I judge he did. The checks were made out by him; those I received of Mr. Schmidt.

Maj. HUMES. And the principal amount of the funds collected by the United States Brewers' Association was expended either through your organization or, during its life, through Mr. Andreae's organization?

Mr. GARDINER. No, the funds that were intended for me were separate and distinct from those intended for Mr. Andreae, but they would come from the same general source.

Maj. HUMES. What I mean to say is this: The major portion of the funds that were collected by the United States Brewers' Association were expended through either your organization or Mr. Andreae's organization?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact that a very much larger fund was raised by the brewers' association of each State than was raised by the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. GARDINER. I think that is positively incorrect. That is my only answer to that. I can not conceive of a State association raising more money than the national association.

Maj. HUMES. I am speaking about the proportionate amount, the number of cents per barrel assessment. In the State that was ordinarily higher than in the national association.

Mr. GARDINER. I know 10 or 12 years ago in a western State they told me the assessment to save that State was made on the brewers at 50 cents a barrel, but it did not save the State.

Maj. HUMES. You also know there were several States where the State assessment was 20 cents a barrel?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not recall that. I heard you mention that to-day.

Maj. HUMES. I say that because that figure has been called to my attention coming from some correspondence of various States. You would not consider that unusual?

Mr. GARDINER. No; not in a desperate fight.

Maj. HUMES. The State associations collected a larger assessment than the United States Association?

Mr. GARDINER. Yes; per barrel, but, of course, the sum total was not larger. I remember that in that 50-cent case, two brewers, both of them old men, when told that the assessments would have to be made at that rate, or they would be ruined, said they could not do it. One man said, "I can not do it, it is impossible; I could not raise the money." Another gentleman there went over to him and put his arm around his shoulder and said, "Yes, you can, you give me your note and I shall put up the money for you."

Maj. HUMES. Of course the aggregate amount raised by the brewers' associations in all of the States would be very much larger than the aggregate amount raised by the United States Brewers' Association.

Mr. GARDINER. Oh, yes; if assessments like that prevailed, but they were most unusual, and in that case, in this particular State that I refer to, there were very, very few brewers.

Senator OVERMAN. What State was that?

Mr. GARDINER. Nebraska. There were probably three or four or five breweries. Of course they are all closed now.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the Nebraska brewers organized outside of the State so as to cover up their activities?

Mr. GARDINER. I do not know as to that, but I was in Omaha and heard that incident that I have just related, but I do not know how their fight was conducted. We had nothing to do with it. They conducted it alone.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, the situation with reference to Mr. Gardiner is just as it was with Mr. Fox. We could go on indefinitely with these matters, but the matters that we have inquired about are largely matters of record, and unless there is some particular line of inquiry, I think we are through.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee has no questions to ask.

Maj. HUMES. Very well; that is all.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will stand adjourned until half-past 10 to-morrow morning.

(Accordingly, at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., the committee adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 21, 1918, at 10:30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, you may proceed. The other members of the committee will doubtless be in in a few moments.

Maj. HUMES. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, as completing the testimony of Mr. Feigenspan, that the letter addressed to you showing the percentage upon assessments in New Jersey be inserted in the record and printed in connection with his testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. That will be put in its proper place with regard to his testimony on that matter.

(The letter is printed in Mr. Feigenspan's testimony, ante, as Feigenspan Exhibit No. 2.)

Maj. HUMES. This letter shows that the assessments in New Jersey for the year 1915 were 2 cents a barrel, and the dues one-half cent a barrel; that the total amount collected was $82,182.42.

In 1916 the dues amounted to one-half cent a barrel and there were assessments of 1.1 cents per barrel, making a total collection of $48.402.20.

In 1917 there were dues collected of one-half cent per barrel, and assessments of 1½ cents a barrel, making a total of $64,686.20.

In 1918 there was an assessment of 2 cents per barrel, no dues being collected for the year, the aggregate assessment amounting to $58.206.22.

Senator OVERMAN. That is in addition, now, as he said, to the assessments and collections by the national association.

Maj. HUMES. There is no connection between the collections and assessments of the National and the State associations. This is entirely separate and apart.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit the minutes of an executive session of the United States Brewers' Association held at Atlantic City, N. J., at the Shelburne Hotel, October 3, 1913, and especially to call attention to the speech made at that time by Mr. Percy Andreae.

Senator OVERMAN. He was the man whom they had in charge of this association of commerce and labor?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I call that to your attention in connection with the subsequent meeting held on the same day, at which the National Association of Commerce and Labor was organized, and Mr. Andreae's speech gives a rather comprehensive outline of the things that they had in mind at that time.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it a long speech?

Maj. HUMES. About 20 pages.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not put it in the record and state what it is?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I suggest that it just be submitted and printed in the record. I also submit, with a view of showing the bringing together of the different elements, the retailers and the wholesalers, the speech on the same occasion of Mr. Farley, the president of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association. I want to call attention to two or three extracts from the speech of Mr. Andreae, so that you will understand the connection of it with other testimony. I read from it as follows:

Now, gentlemen, at the desire and at the request of those whom you choose to represent you on the national committee of brewers acting in conjunction with the Trustees of the U. S. Brewers' Association, I have agreed to place my time and my services at the disposal of the industry for the purpose of inaugurating a movement of the kind I have indicated. I am frank to tell you that the main condition which I have stipulated in accepting the task entrusted to me was that I must have an entirely free hand, and not be subject to the interference or the dictation of boards or committees.

I read further as follows:

Gentlemen, I believe that among those of you who know me there are none who need my assurance on this one point; namely, that if the plan referred to contained one single feature which could not bear exposure in the full light of day, I would not be its author (applause) nor would I undertake under any circumstances to share in the responsibility or the work attaching to it. I believe, and have always believed, that a just cause can only win by just means, and that no cause that requires improper means to win with has any right to win at all. (Applause.) But I am going to ask you to consider with me, from the purely practical point of view, what hope there would be for the success of an undertaking such as is now in contemplation, an undertaking fraught with many delicate features, and involving alliances, which the slightest misconstruction or misconception of our intentions would place in jeopardy. If I were obliged to herald all details concerning it to the world at large, which I would certainly be doing if I confided them to the knowledge of several hundred men.

Then further:

We hear the constant cry from the professional politician: "Get the liquor question out of politics." Do you really believe he means it? Why, gentlemen, this question in its political aspect is one of the main sources from which the politician derives his sinews of war in politics. And why? Because we brewers supply them, and make it a paramount object to the politician to keep the prohibition movement alive. I say make that question expensive to him instead of profitable, and you will see how soon his tactics will change.

Senator OVERMAN. I see here in this printed speech he says:

There are, roughly, five hundred congressional districts in the United States, and I venture to say that of these there are very few in which the Anti-Saloon League has not perfected an organization for the purpose of supporting candidates who favor its cause, and opposing candidates who do not favor it. In how many districts have we and our friends even the merest rudiments of such an organization?

He says again:

Sentiment alone, however, is useless, unless it knows how to express itself at the polls.

Proceed, Major.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

Gentlemen, these friends of ours, and I mean by "these friends" certain important organizations that are in principle friendly to us, take this view of our attitude towards them, and in stating that view I am offering no opinion of my own regarding its justice or injustice, but merely recording the facts. They say we flatter ourselves that we hold them in the hollow of our hand; that we expect them to rush to our aid at our mere command, when the need arises, and that in the interim we leave them to shift for themselves, on the assumption that they need no support and encouragement from us, because they are with us and ready to fight for us anyway. In other words, they claim that we call for their army to come to our aid, when the enemy is upon us, and in time of peace we contribute nothing, or next to nothing, in effort or means, to maintain that army and increase its efficiency. Yet this army, with the proper support and encouragement, could not only be doubled and trebled in numbers, but, with the adequate means and methods, could be so organized that its efficiency as an active force at the polls, working under systematic direction, would be increased tenfold.

Gentlemen, within a month of that incident and the wholesome lesson it brought home to me, the most important department of our league in Ohio was inaugurated, namely, the department which has in charge the investigation of the local political conditions throughout the State, with the possibilities of party alignment and the searching examination into the character and records and the public and private associations and affiliations of every candidate for office. It is due entirely to the work of this department and to the implicit confidence of the rank and file of our organization in the unerring accuracy of that work, that Ohio has today a legislature, which, in spite of a large majority of its counties being still "dry" under the county option law, is almost as overwhelmingly liberal as five years ago it was overwhelmingly dry.

This work, and the systematic organization that requires to be maintained in every county and senatorial district of the State to render it effective at election time, is the most expensive part of the entire Ohio organization, and when I tell you that the allied industries in that State have in the past five years spent nearly a million dollars in building up and perfecting this organization, and that they do not regret one penny of the vast sum thus expended, you will readily conceive that the results obtained by the organization have been valuable.

Now, is there any need for me to explain the application of all this to our contemplated national organization? I blame no man for the fact, which is notorious, that two men out of every three who are returned to Congress will vote for prohibition mesures, whenever a prohibition measures comes up for deliberation upon the floor of Congress. But I do say this, that it is unreasonable for us to expect the man or the men whom we have placed in charge of our interests in Washington to save us from Congressional prohibitory legislation, so long as we permit the Anti-Saloon League to elect our Representatives in the Congress.

Gentlemen, here is the one argument in favor of organization, and organization at any cost, which overshadows every other argument that could be offered. It is this position of imminent danger which confronts our industry in Washington, a position into which we have drifted, from one cause, and one cause only: The lack of such organization in the past. As has been pointed out to you in another place, the passage by the Congress of the United States of the Hobson resolution to amend the Federal Constitution so as to prohibit forever the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic beverages in this country will involve our industries for all time to come in a struggle to prevent at least thirteen out of the forty-eight States of the Union from ratifying that resolution.

It is, of course, this last bulwark of our rights and liberties that we must first proceed to strengthen at any cost, by organizing in enough States to prevent the ratification of such a resolution by the necessary three-fourths of the legislatures of the country. But, while we are accomplishing this task, it would surely be the height of folly if, in the face the bitter lessons of the past, we failed at the same time to strengthen our position in that important outer fortification of ours, the utter neglect of which has brought us to the desperate condition we find ourselves in today. I means the Congress at Washington.

There are roughly five hundred congressional districts in the United States, and I venture to say that of these there are very few in which the Anti-Saloon League has perfected an organization for the purpose of supporting candidates who favor its cause, and opposing candidates who do not favor it. In how many such districts have we and our friends even the merest rudiments of such an organization? In practically none. Is it then to be wondered at that two-thirds of the Members of Congress are ready to obey the behests of the Anti-Saloon League, and that even the remaining one-third regard us as hopelessly weak and inefficient, and therefore unworthy of consideration.

Yet I assent confidently, that in a large majority of those districts the real sentiment of the voters is in two cases out of three in favor of liberal measures. Sentiment alone, however, is useless, unless it knows how to express itself at the polls. And, in order to impart that knowledge to the multitude of our friends, it is first necessary that we obtain it ourselves. To acquire that knowledge, and apply it in practice through your organization, requires a corps of trained experts. I will accept no hearsay reports. Every fact must be ascertained and every personality investigated on the ground itself, and in addition we must have the record of urban and rural populations in each district, showing the proportion of the so-called foreign element; the character of the saloon element, with the names of those fitted to lead and direct the others in election work; the strength of the labor organizations and their affiliations, whose interest is enlisted by our friends in the labor movement for the sake of the hundreds of thousands of our brothers whose livelihood is threatened by prohibition. In short, there is work here, if it is to be done systematically and effectively, for a very large staff of capable and experienced men, and when they have completed it, and we have dissected and tabulated it, and planned our fight in each district on the foundation it gives us, then our real work only commences, and every organization affiliated with us, including labor bodies, liberty leagues, alliances of so-called foreign citizens, saloo keepers' associations and others, is called upon to send out its representatives who, with the knowledge imparted to them from our headquarters proceed under our direction to rally their forces at the polls and there bring our labors to their final conclusion.

I also call particular attention to the following:

If I asked you to state who are the best, the strongest, and the staunchest friends our industry possesses in this country, you would give me only one correct answer. They are the millions and millions of falsely described foreign citizens, to whom American in reality owes as much of her greatness to-day as she does to the descendants of her original settlers, and, gentlemen, certainly a goodly portion of her enlightenment and her intellectual supremacy. Do you realize that the greatest disaster that could overtake our industries to-day would be the loss or the gradual disappearance of those broad ideals of life, that passionate love of personal freedom, that sturdy spirit of individual independence, and that hatred of cant and hypocrisy, which these millions and millions of men of German, Austrian, Bohemian, Swiss, or other descent, or which their fathers before them, brought over with them from the old country? What keeps those ideals, that love of liberty, that independent spirit, and that hatred of hypocritical pretense alive in these people? One thing, and one only. The language in which they learned to formulate their views of life and their ideals of manhood and citizenship. What is the main influence that keeps that citizenship. What is the main influence that keeps that language alive in our country, and transmits it from generation to generation? It is the foreign press.

Gentlemen, I tell you that the death of every foreign newspaper in this country, with few solitary exceptions, means the removal of a stone in the foundation upon which our industry is based. And how many of them are gradually going under, not for lack of readers, but for lack of those means which every newspaper requires in order to maintain and increase its circulation: The income from its advertising columns?

Don't starve the foreign press, but feed it, help it, support it, wherever you find it and however small you find it, to the very utmost limit of your means and powers. I am not asking this of you as a sacrifice, because it is no sacrifice. You will profit by it twofold. For doesn't a man seek such channel of advertisement as reach those who are likely to buy his product, rather than those who are not likely to buy it? Advertising is paid for in exact proportion to the circulation of the advertising medium. When you advertise in a

English paper, you reach a reading public of which probably only 50 or 60 per cent are ever likely to respond to your advertisement. When you advertise in a foreign-language paper, you reach a reading public, of which nearly a hundred per cent are likely purchasers of your product. In the one case you get 50 or 60 cents on the dollar invested as a return. In the other case you get 100 cents. Is there a question of which is best as a mere business proposition?

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that you include the whole of those minutes in this record.

Maj. HUMES. Very well.

MINUTES OF AN EXECUTIVE SESSION OF THE UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION, HELD IN ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., AT THE SHELBURNE HOTEL, OCTOBER 3, 1913, AT 3 P. M.

From U. S. B. A. files.

The meeting was called to order by the President of the Association, Colonel Ruppert, Jr.

The PRESIDENT. The first speaker of the afternoon will be Mr. Andreae, who will now address you. (Applause.)

Mr. ANDREAE. Mr. President and Gentlemen, I believe I shall be acting in accordance with the desire of all present here today if, in addressing you, I dispense with all formal preamble and plunge at once into the subject which is uppermost in the minds of everyone of us.

That subject is the proposed organization of the liberal elements in this country against those who have banded themselves together for the purpose of depriving these liberal elements of their right to the free exercise of their own judgment, and to the enjoyment of those things which, in that judgment, they are privileged and fitted to enjoy. For, let it be understood that the so-called liquor question is not, nor has it ever been, a question of the right of the brewers, distillers and wine-growers of the country to sell their product to the thirty or forty odd million of their fellow-citizens who desire to buy it. This, like most other things connected with this fanatical movement, is a mere hypocritical subterfuge, designed to deceive the multitude. The question, on the contrary, is whether the thirty or forty million citizens of this country whom we serve with our product shall have the right to the opportunity of buying that product. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, these citizens are the consumers of our product, and as the consumers of our product, they are the only judges of whether the industry which they have made what it is today is a legitimate and desirable one or not. Now, gentlemen, when we are combatting the forces of these people, we are not only trying to save our own commercial existence, but we are fighting the battle for the hundreds of thousands of those who are dependent upon our industry for their daily bread and butter.

It is this fact which, in view of the threatened wholesale destruction of our business, renders it not only a matter of expediency, but a matter of actual obligation for us to take the initiative in rallying around us the millions and millions of those who have made our industry what it is today.

Now, gentlemen, at the desire and at the request of those whom you choose to represent you on the national committee of brewers acting in conjunction with the Trustees of the U. S. Brewers' Association, I have agreed to place my time and my services at the disposal of the industry for the purpose of inaugurating a movement of the kind I have indicated. I am frank to tell you that the main condition which I stipulated in accepting the task entrusted to me was that I must have an entirely free hand, and not be subject to the interference or the dictation of boards or committees.

This may sound arrogant and dictatorial, but I can assure you that it is neither. Nor does it mean that I think I am all-wise, and require no counsel and advice. Far from it. I merely reserve the right to choose my own advisers and counsellors, and no one who realizes the character and the magnitude of the work I have undertaken will believe that it could be accomplished under any other conditions. An army—and it is an army, if you please, that is to be called into existence—must have a leader, and to trammel that leader with restrictions, and curtail his authority, would not only cripple the leader himself, but destroy the efficiency of his army by nullifying its confidence in him and his ability to lead it. If the leader blunders and fails, remove him and select another, but while he is the leader—of your creation, of course—let friend and foe alike know that he speaks with unquestioned authority, and that his word is subject to no one's revision. (Applause.)

Now, I have been asked at the various meetings of our joint National Committee—and I dare say the same question is in the minds of many of the gentlemen present here today, what are the specific details of the plan I propose to pursue in order to accomplish the purpose I have in view? It has been intimated to me, indeed, in certain quarters that unless these details are supplied broadcast, some brewers will refuse to contribute their share to the necessary defense fund.

Gentlemen, I believe that among those of you who know me there are none who need my assurance on this one point; namely, that, if the plan referred to contained one single feature which could not bear exposure in the full light of day, I would not be its author (Applause) nor would I undertake under any circumstances to share in the responsibility or the work attaching to it. I believe, and have always believed, that a just cause can only win by just means, and that no cause that requires improper means to win with has any right to win at all. (Applause). But I am going to ask you to consider with me, from the purely practical point of view, what hope there would be for the success of an undertaking such as is now in contemplation, an undertaking fraught with many delicate features, and involving alliances, which the slightest misconstruction or misconception of our intentions would place in jeopardy, if I were obliged to herald all details concerning it to the world at large, which I would certainly be doing if I confided them to the knowledge of several hundred men.

I want to tell you gentlemen that we have far more to fear from the cowardice of some of our friends than we have to fear from the aggressiveness of our enemies, (applause), and it is we ourselves who are mainly responsible for the cowardice of many of those who are our friends. You will not misinterpret my frankness in saying this. To be afraid to speak the truth, for fear of giving offense at an important juncture like the present one, would be fatal.

Let any man here present cast his eye over our past history, and ask himself what has been the main source of our troubles. He will find only one true answer to the question. It is the unfortunate policy we have pursued in the past, both individually and collectively, of feeding our enemies and starving our friends. Ask any man engaged in political affairs,—and how many are there in this country who are not either directly or indirectly so engaged?—which pays best: to be the enemy of the brewer, or to be his friend. In nine cases out of ten, if the man is honest, his answer will be that it is most expedient to pose as the brewer's enemy, because to be his enemy means to be coaxed and wheeled by the brewer, and patted on the back by the prohibitionist, whilst, to be his friend, means only too frequently to be neglected and treated with indifference by the brewer, and hounded and persecuted by the prohibitionist; in brief, because the brewer will rather spend his time and his efforts in the vain endeavor to win over his thousands of enemies than devote that time and those efforts toward organization and protecting his millios of friends.

We hear the constant cry from the professional politician: "Get the liquor question out of politics." Do you really believe he means it? Why, gentlemen, this question in its political aspect is one of the main sources from which the plitician derives his sinews of war in politics. And why? Because we brewers supply them, and make it a paramount object to the politician to keep the prohibition movement alive. I say make that question expensive to him instead of profitable, and you will see how soon his tactics will change.

These are not mere notions, which I have evolved out of my inner consciousness. They are true echoes of the sentiments of those very friends of our to whom I have referred, and it would surprise, and I think pain, some of you to hear, as I have heard, the expressions of bitterness and utter scepticism of our good sense and our good faith on the part of the the leaders among those friends, whose efforts on our behalf in the past have been either ignored entirely, or forgotten in our blind rush to appease and mollify those whose efforts have been directed against us.

Nor is my reference to these facts here a digression from the subject I started to discuss; namely, the specific details of the plan of organization which I have in view. It has, on the contrary, the most important bearing on that subject.

Gentlemen, these friends of ours, and I mean by "these friends" certain important organizations that are in principle friendly to us, take this view of our attitude towards them, and in stating that view I am offering no opinion of my own regarding its justice or injustice but merely voicing the facts, [illegible] say we flatter ourselves that we hold them in the hollow of our hand; that we expect them to rush to our aid at our mere command, when the need arises, and that in the interim we leave them to shift for themselves, on the assumption that they need no support and encouragement from us, because they are with us and ready to fight for us anyway. In other words, they claim that we call for their army to come to our aid, when the enemy is upon us, and in time of peace we contribute nothing, or next to nothing, in effort or means, to maintain that army and increase its efficiency. Yet this army, with the proper support and encouragement, could not only be doubled and trebled in numbers, but, with adequate means and methods, could be so organized that its efficiency as an active force at the polls, working under systematic direction, would be increased tenfold.

Gentlemen, there can be no more doubt of the truth of this fact than there is doubt of the fact that I am standing here and addressing you. And if this were the only direction in which my energies, and the efforts of those working with me, were to be spent, the result would go a long way towards reversing the situation in the country as between ourselves and the prohibitionists. But it is merely one of many, and even if I went into the most specific of details regarding the method of building up and sustaining the already existing organizations that stand ready and willing to place their fighting material in the field in our cause, I should only have told you one half, and by far the smaller half, of what waits to be done in order to accomplish our end. For what can the most perfect and extensive organization avail us, without the means, the knowledge, and the directing force that are requisite to move it in the field?

Let me illustrate this point by a concrete example. I was conferring quite recently with the head of a certain organization, which numbers its members by the millions. It is recognized as one of the most powerful in numbers, and one of the most determined in sentiment among the organizations of the country, and incidentally I may say that the very basic principle of the organization is the principle of personal liberty. In the course of our conversation I put the following question to this gentleman. "Is it not a fact," I asked him, "that, in spite of the number of your members, and in spite of their enthusiastic allegiance to the cause for which your organization stands, not ten per cent of those members possess sufficient knowledge of the attitude of candidates for office towards that cause to enable them to vote for the right man when election time comes? And does not the reason for this lie in the further fact that you do not possess the means and the method of acquiring that detailed knowledge at headquarters, and, even if you did posses it, that you lack the means and method of communicating it to your individual members throughout the country, and thus enabling them to vote for the man who favors their cause, and against the man whose record shows that he opposes it, instead of vice versa?"

His answer was this: "You are right, in all but your estimate of the percentage of our members who have sufficient knowledge of the records of candidates for office to vote for the right man at election. That percentage is unfortunately not ten per cent, but scarcely five."

I then enquired whether, with the proper means and system of organization, such as I had outlined to him, that percentage could not be raised to fifty per cent, whereupon he answered with great emphasis: "I will guarantee one hundred per cent." (Applause)

Gentlemen, I know that he is right. And herein lies the pith and marrow of the work that really confronts us. Forming an orgainzation, strong in numbers, powerful in sentiment, and enthusiastic in purpose, is one thing. Making that organization effective in the only place where it can really prove effective, namely at the polls, is quite another thing.

Let me once more illustrate my meaning by an actual concrete experience, for I am giving you experiences here, not propounding mere theories.

During the first year of our campaign in Ohio I used to address many meetings of the Personal Liberty League and other kindred associations throughout the state, on which occasions I naturally dilated upon the merits of our cause, and discoursed, as eloquently as I knew how, upon the principles of personal liberty and other cognate subjects. Once when I had sat down, feeling fairly well satisfied with my performance, a man in the audience rose and said: "What's the use of shooting this personal liberty stuff at us? We know all about that, or we wouldn't be here. Tell us whom to vote for, and we'll do the rest." (Applause)

When the meeting was over, I sought out this man, and asked him whether he expected me to be better informed about the character and leanings of candidates in his own district than he was himself. His answer was terse and blunt. "You bet I do," he said. "How should I know who's right and who ain't? They all talk right to us, when they want our votes, and when they're elected they go back on us. We'll vote for the right man quick enough, if you'll find out and tell us who he is. If you can't, this organization may as well close up shop, for it will never amount to more than a gab-fest." (Applause.)

Gentlemen, within a month of that incident and the wholesome lesson it brought home to me, the most important department of our League in Ohio was inaugurated, namely the department which has in charge the investigation of local political conditions throughout the state, with their possibilities of party alignment, and the searching examination into the character and records and the public and private associations and affiliations of every candidate for office. It is due entirely to the work of this department, and to the implicit confidence of the rank and file of our organization in the unerring accuracy of that work, that Ohio has today a legislature, which, in spite of a large majority of its counties being still "dry" under the county option law, is almost as overwhelmingly liberal as five years ago it was overwhelmingly dry.

This work, and the systematic organization that requires to be maintained in every county and senatorial district of the state to render it effective at election time, is the most expensive part of the entire Ohio organization, and when I tell you that the allied industries in that state have in the past five years spent nearl a million dollars in building up and perfecting this organization, and that they do not regret one penny of the vast sum thus expended, you will readily conceive that the results obtained by the organization must have been valuable.

Now, is there any need for me to explain the application of all this to our contemplated national organization? I blame no man for the fact, which is notorious, that two men out of every three who are returned to Congress will vote for prohibition measures, whenever a prohibition measure comes up for deliberation upon the floor of Congress. But I do say this, that it is unreasonable for us to expect the man or the men whom we have placed in charge of our interests in Washington to save us from congressional prohibitory legislation, as long as we permit the Anti-Saloon League to elect our representatives in the Congress. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, here is the one argument in favor of organization, and organization at any cost, which overshadows every other argument that could be offered. It is this position of imminent danger which confronts our industry in Washington, a position into which we have drifted, from one cause, and one cause only: the lack of such organization in the past. As has been pointed out to you in another place, the passage by the Congress of the United States of the Hobson resolution to amend the Federal constitution so as to prohibit forever the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic beverages in this country will involve our industry for all time to come in a struggle to prevent at least thirteen out of the forty-eight States of the Union from ratifying that resolution.

It is, of course, this last bulwark of our rights and liberties that we must first proceed to strengthen at any cost, by organizing in enough States to prevent the ratification of such a resolution by the necessary three-fourths of the legislature of the country. But, while we are accomplishing this task, it would surely be the height of folly if, in face of the bitter lessons of the past, we failed at the same time to strengthen our position in that important outer fortification of ours, the utter neglect of which has brought us to the desperate condition we find ourselves in to-day. I mean the Congress at Washington.

There are roughly 500 congressional districts in the United States, and I venture to say that of these there are very few in which the Anti-Saloon League has not perfected an organization for the purpose of supporting candidates who favor its cause, and opposing candidates who do not favor it. In how many such districts have we and our friends even the merest rudiments of such an organization? In practically none. Is it then to be wondered at that two-thirds of the members of Congress are ready to obey the behests of the Anti-Saloon League, and that even the remaining one-third regard us as hopelessly weak and inefficient, and therefore unworthy of consideration?

Yet I assert confidently that in a large majority of those districts the real sentiment of the voters is in two cases out of three in favor of liberal measures. Sentiment, alone, however, is useless, unless it knows how to express itself at the polls. And, in order to impart that knowledge to the multitude of our friends, it is first necessary that we obtain it ourselves. To acquire that knowledge, and apply it in practice through your organization, requires a corps of trained experts. I will accept no hearsay reports. Every fact must be ascertained and every personality investigated on the ground itself, and in addition we must have the record of urban and rural populations in each district, showing the proportion of the so-called foreign element; the character of the saloon element, with the names of those fitted to lead and direct the others in election work; the strength of the labor organizations and their affiliations, whose interest is enlisted by our friends in the labor movement for the sake of the hundred of thousands of their brothers, whose livelihood is threatened by prohibition. In short, there is work here, if it is to be done systematically and effectively, for a very large staff of capable and experienced men, and when they have completed it, and we have dissected and tabulated it, and planned our fight in each district on the foundation it gives us, then our real work only commences, and every organization affiliated with us, including labor bodies, liberty leagues, alliances of so-called foreign citizens, saloonkeepers' associations, and others, is called upon to send out its representatives, who, with the knowledge imparted to them from our headquarters, proceed under our direction to rally their forces at the polls and there bring our labors to their final conclusion.

Gentlemen, there is in my opinion nothing that can save our industry from annihilation at the hands of our organized enemy excepting systematic work of this kind, and without it the strongest and most enthusiastic organization of our friends would be ineffective and amount, as my blunt but shrewd friend of the Ohio Personal Liberty League expressed it, to nothing more than a gab-fest.

Moreover, the value of this work to the industry in each State wherein it is accomplished will be very appreciable. For it is impossible to obtain and use, as I have described, the political knowledge concerning congressional districts in any State without at the same time acquiring the same data concerning the counties and senatorial districts of that State, for the simple reason that a congressional district is made up of representative and senatorial districts, and you cannot know the conditions of the larger unit without ascertaining those of the smaller units of which it is composed. It will therefore merely remain with the interests in each particular State to put to practical use the knowledge obtained concerning those smaller units, in order to accomplish within their State what we have accomplished in Ohio. They will find that nearly half the expense of organizing within the State for that purpose has thus been taken off their hands by the national organization.

Our Ohio friends are fully alive to this fact, and in signing the agreement to contribute the three cents a barrel to the national work, they figured, and figured rightly, that this national work will result in considerably lessening the future expense of maintaining their State organization.

Gentlemen, I so often refer to Ohio that I feel almost the need of apologizing for doing so. But there are others outside of Ohio who can testify to the efficacy of Ohio's plan of campaign. Our workers have recently been active in the State of Iowa, where they went at the request of the Iowa brewers. We have only scratched the surface of the ground in that State, and it would be folly for me to make any claim regarding what can ultimately be accomplished there. But I know what our friends in Iowa think of our methods, so far as they have seen them in practice, and I hope one or the other of the gentlemen from Iowa will presently give you their opinion on the subject.

I think I am at liberty also to state that the brewers of the Dominion of Canada, who have studied our Ohio methods, have recently decided to organize on identically the same lines, and have asked for the permanent services of one of our leading workers, whom we sent there at their request to instruct them in the details of our work, and whom they have now decided to place in charge of their organization, and I may say that they have raised a sum, to be expended under his direction, which in proportion far exceeds that which the brewers of this country are asked to contribute to the defense of our American industry.

It took time, gentlemen, and bitter experience before we learned in our individual States that a certain percentage of our earnings required to be spent annually in the defense of our general business. (Applause.) Are we to await those same bitter experiences nationally before we decide to insure our industry against nation-wide destruction, which is surely coming if we remain idle, and fail to be warned in time of the approaching storm? We are practically all agreed that it is about to burst upon us, and if it cost the industry 6 or even 10 cents a barrel per annum to finance a plan of organization that will ward off the complete annihilation which it threatens, it would be cheap at the price. (Applause.) It is in the carrying out of such a plan that lies the only salvation of all we have invested in our business today. And I say—and say it emphatically—that no one in our industry who respects himself, who takes pride in his business, and who values the opinion in which he is held by his fellow-brewers and his customers, should hold back and refuse to pay his share in the common treasury toward the fund which will save him all he possesses, if anything at all can save it. (Applause.) To say that he can not afford it, is to say that he has nothing to save. To say that he does not believe in the necessity of combatting our foes in this thorough and radical manner, is to confess to an ignorance and a blindness to obvious facts which are almost too shocking to be conceivable. To say, lastly, that he won't contribute his share because he knows others will provide the means, and he will get the benefit for nothing, is to admit—well, my vocabulary fails to supply me with terms adequate to express my sentiments in his regard. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, forgive me, if I express myself thus strongly. I am not presuming—God forbid that I should—to tell any one of you that I know his own business better than he does. But I do presume to say that there is no valid reason why any brewer can refuse to share with his colleagues the cost of saving the industry he lives on, excepting one, and that one reason is that he does not believe in or approve of the method of procedure suggested. But if that is his reason, it is duty to suggest a plan that is better, one that is more effective, and one that is more certain to accomplish what we seek to accomplish. If he cannot do that, I have no cause to apologize to him for what I have said. (Applause.)

Now, I do not pretend that I have given you more than the roughest outline of the plan of campaign I propose to pursue. It would be physically impossible, even if it were politic, for me to elaborate upon all the manifold details that are comprised in this plan, and explain how they are to be handled. But there are a few further points on which I wish to touch here, because it is important that you should know them.

The first is that no work of the kind I have described can be successfully accomplished without the cooperation of the orgnizations in the States in which it is undertaken, and that no such work should be undertaken in any State without the consent of and a full understanding with the brewing industry located in that state. Moreover, the aid of the national organization should be extended to every State in which the industry desires to organize on similar lines within the State itself, the only proviso being that the expense of such organization within the State—and I consider that there is nothing of graver importance—must be borne by the local industry.

The second point is that of finance. I have asked that all funds to be used for these purposes be held by a Treasurer, and that not one cent of those funds be required to pass through my hands, but that they be disbursed according to my directions, and that vouchers for all expenditures be kept and submitted for audit to such an auditing committee as your Board may see fit to appoint.

These, of course, are details of a more or less formal nature. There are others, however, of a more far-reaching kind, in the carrying out of which I must ask, and I feel sure I shall receive, the loyal assistance of every one of you, and, with your permission, I am going to dwell upon these at somewhat greater length.

If I asked you to state who are the best, the strongest, and the staunchest friends our industry possesses in this country, you could give me only one correct answer. They are the millions and millions of falsely described foreign citizens, to whom America in reality owes as much of her greatness today as she does to the descendants of her original settlers, (applause), and, gentlemen, certainly a goodly portion of her enlightenment and her intellectual supremacy. Do you realize that the greatest disaster that could overtake our industry today would be the loss or the gradual disappearance of those broad ideals of life, that passionate love of personal freedom, that sturdy spirit of individual independence, and that hatred of cant and hypocrisy, which these millions and millions of men of German, Austrian, Bohemian, Swiss, or other descent, or which their fathers before them, brought over with them from the old country? What keeps those ideals, that love of liberty, that independent spirit, and that hatred of hypocritical pretense alive in these people? One thing, and one only. The language in which they learned to formulate their views of life and their ideals of manhood and citizenship. And what is the main influence that keeps that language alive in our country, and transmits it from generation to generation? It is the foreign press. (Applause).

Gentlemen, I tell you that the death of every foreign newspaper in this country, with few solitary exceptions, means the removal of a stone in the foundation upon which our industry is built. And how many of them are gradually going under, not for lack of readers, but for lack of those means which every newspaper requires in order to maintain and increase its circulation: the income from its advertising columns?

Don't starve the foreign press, but feed it, help it, support it, wherever you find it and however small you find it, to the very utmost limit of your means and power. (Applause.) I am not asking this of you as a sacrifice, because it is no sacrifice. You will profit by it two-fold. For doesn't a man seek such channels of advertisement as reach those who are likely to buy his product, rather than those who are not likely to buy it? Advertising is paid for in exact proportion to the circulation of the advertising medium. When you advertise in an English paper, you reach a reading public of which probably only fifty or sixty per cent are ever likely to respond to your advertisement. When you advertise in a foreign language paper, you reach a reading public, of which nearly a hundred per cent are likely purchasers of your product. In the one case you get fifty or sixty cents on the dollar invested as a return. In the other case you get a hundred cents. Is there a question of which is best as a mere business proposition?

But mark this further point. When you advertise in a foreign paper, you are helping to increase the circulation of a paper that is fighting for you from one year's end to the other. (Applause.) When you advertise in an English paper, you are not unfrequently helping to maintain a paper that is fighting editorially against you. Your advertising agents do not realize this, as you do, or should do. Let them, therefore, deal with the English press, which is entitled to, and should receive, your full consideration, but let the head of every firm which advertises see to it personally that the foreign press receives its due proportion of your patronage, and if possible a goodly measure over and above that proportion. (Applause). If you will do this, you will help me wonderfully. In fact, I do not know of anything more important to the success of my work than this.

Among other directions in which our organization must do active creative work, and where your individual assistance will be enlisted, are these.

There are two hundred and fifty thousand retailers in this country. Organizations of retailers exist in practically every State and locality. The plans are already laid to invite all these associations into the general fold, without in the slightest degree affecting the separate identity and the autonomy of every one of them. They should be strengthened and their leaders brought into the most intimate touch with us. Every customer of yours should be urged to join his local association, and in due course you will receive visits from accredited field-men of ours from the ranks of these associations, and they will enlist your influence and personal effort to induce every man in the retail trade with whom you deal to join the organized body of retailers.

Let me say here that this influence and persuasion is likely to be mutual, for the retailer is fully alive to the precarious situation which confronts him, and it will not be long before you will find, I think, that the saloon keeper is as much interested in knowing and seeing to it that the brewer from whom he draws his supplies is a member of and a contributor to the organization for the defense of his business, as the brewer will be concerned to know that his customer belongs to it. (Applause.)

When you consider that, at a very conservative estimate, every saloon keeper in the country has ten friends among the voters who are interested in seeing his business saved from destruction, you can easily calculate what an army of friends we have in this body of men alone. And not one in ten of this vast army votes intelligently on our question today, simply from lack of proper knowledge and systematic direction.

Again, in the allied industries and trades and their employees you have another powerful wing of the general army. It has been asserted in some of our committee meetings that the associations known as the Manufacturers' & Dealers' clubs or societies, which were formed with so much flourish of trumpets about five years ago, were practically a failure. If this is so, and I am not prepared to admit the truth of the assertion, it is due to the fact that they were launched, like so many others, upon a wave of enthusiasm, and then left to shift for themselves, without direction and encouragement.

Now, you have here a body of men who are as deeply interested as we are in the purpose for which our contemplated organization is to be formed, and who, as regards their ability to assist in perfecting it, are second to none of those I have already mentioned. They have in their ranks some of the best and ablest workers whom it has been my privilege to know, and they have the same reason that we have to contribute of their financial means to the fund required to carry on this work. It is proposed that these men shall form their own organization, to work in conjunction with and under the direction of the national organization, and that they shall establish among each other, as we do, such basis of annual assessment as may be proper and necessary, first to maintain their own organization, and second to provide the general exchequer with an annual contribution towards the main campaign fund, which shall be commensurate with the very large interests they have at stake.

In this case, too, your individual assistance will be enlisted to prevail upon every firm you deal with to join this association and contribute its share towards the general defense fund.

Don't, pray, misinterpret this last remark, or misconstrue similar allusions I have made regarding the influence and the persuasion which the brewer can bring to bear upon his customer and the manufacturer he deals with, or vice versa. I am not advocating coercion. I hate the very name of it. But men who are dependent upon each other in business are surely entitled to rely upon each other in the defense of that business against a common foe, and the man who is vitally interested in the success of such defense, and yet stays at home and refuses to share the burden and the responsibility attached to it be he brewer, saloon keeper, manufacturer, or dealer, should at least be known to the general body of those who, in fighting the battle for all, are also fighting his battle. (Applause.)

In short, whether producer, seller, or consumer, the cooperation of every one is needed in this movement to make it successful. Nor is it only from the liberal men of the country that such cooperation is to be expected. It is as important today that the liberally inclined women should organize and work in the interest of the principles they believe in as it is that the liberal men should do so. Women's liberty leagues have already been started in some of the larger cities, and the plan is to ask every organization interested in this movement to form its woman's auxiliary, and enlist the sympathy, the enthusiasm, and the active influence of our women throughout the country in the furtherance of sane and sober principles of legislation, which will aim to regulate and elevate, instead of confiscating and destroying, that which offends no one but the narrow-minded, the fanatic and zealot, who believes that the Almighty has issued a general ban on all the joys and pleasures He has placed within the reach of men, because there are, and always will be, some few who misuse and abuse them to their own and their fellow-man's detriment.

Now, I have the strongest belief in the efficiency of our women, not only in this, but in another even more important direction. It means the correction and remedying of that which is objectionable and injurious in the surroundings of the American saloon today. For mark this, gentlemen,—and I cannot emphasize the fact too strongly—without a sincere attempt on our part to accomplish this, no organization we may perfect, let it be ever so powerful, can, in my judgment, hope to prove permanently successful.

I used the word "attempt" advisedly. There is much conception, not only among our would-be reformers, but among ourselves, in regard to this all important question, and it is to this misconception, in my humble opinion, the the failure of those who have endeavored to correct existing evils in the liquor traffic is mainly due. I say, and I have said it repeatedly, that the root of these evils lies not in the saloon, but in the community. The saloon trade as a whole can no more justly be held responsible for the delinquency of those of its members who pander to the depraved tastes and desires of a certain proportion of the community than, for instance, the ministry of the country as a whole can be held responsible for the unhappily notorious frequency of moral crimes among its individual members, and, perhaps significantly enough, just among those who belong to that section of the ministry which is particularly fierce and uncompromising in its denunciation of the evils of the saloon and the iniquity of the drink-seller. Incidentally, if I were asked which I considered more dangerous to the people at large, the delinquent saloon-keeper, who attracts to his place mainly the already vicious and morally corrupt of the community, and breaks the law by catering to their evil desires and pleasures, or the delinquent clergyman, whose moral turpitude, springing within himself, spreads contagion among thousands of pure and innocent members of his flock, I should not require one moment to consider what is the true answer to the question. In fact, as every experienced man knows, there is cleaning up to do in all trades and professions. But does any experienced man think it would conduce to the elevation of the moral tone among our clergy, if all the high minded, respectable ministers in the country were held up to and treated with the contempt of their fellow-men, because some members of their fraternity are morally vile and lecherous?

Yet this is just what is done in the case of the saloon trade. The saloonkeeper as a whole is judged by the fractional percentage of those who disgrace his trade, and wrongly so. The clergyman is judged by the large percentage of those who lend dignity to his profession, and rightly so. When this contradiction is once rectified and the respectable saloonkeeper receives the encouragement and consideration which he deserves, the greatest obstacle in the path of the reformer will be removed, and I believe that the influence of our women in this direction, if they are intelligently organized and advised can be of greater force than any other influence I could mention. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, I could continue almost indefinitely discoursing upon the multifarious angles of this question of organization. But I have said enough, I trust, to convince you at least of the magnitude of our task, and of the impossibility that any man could accomplish it without the assistance of many, many capable lieutenants and co-workers. I do not claim that there is anything especially new or original in what I have set forth here. Indeed, the only really new feature in the plan I have discussed is that which you, and you alone can supply, namely, the means of carrying it into effect.

It would be mere supererogation, after all that has been said on that subject, for me to dwell upon the urgent need of applying these means. If the lesson recently conveyed to us in the passage of the Webb bill by the Congress at Washington has not taught us that need, nothing I or any one else could say will do so.

Gentlemen, we are face to face with absolute destruction, and unless we provide the means of carrying out a plan such as I have described to you, we shall go under.

Let me say to you in conclusion, to bring this incontrovertible truth home to you, that currying the favor of political parties, enlisting the support of political leaders, and relying on the promises of political wirepullers, will not save us from ultimate destruction. All it will do, as it has done in the past, is to emphasize to those to whom we thus appeal our utter weakness, and our incapacity to meet the enemy they have learned to fear with our own weapons, which we have at our command, if we will only avail ourselves of them. There is only one thing the politician respects, there is only one thing the legislator respects; and there is only one thing the governing powers generally, not only in this country, but in all countries, respect. It is votes. They are the only basis of political power, and in a commonwealth like ours the only legitimate basis of such power.

I say to you, gentlemen, that the greatest of all ironies perpetrated in the many reckless attacks made upon the so-called liquor interests of America, is the accusation that they have engaged in politics. This, in the real sense of the term is just what they have not done. It is true that the liquor question has been made a political issue, but not by them. It is true that legislation has been hampered and State and municipal administrations have been tainted and corrupted by this all-pervading question, but not owing to them. It is owing solely and simply, to the fact that the prohibitionist has become a potent and intelligent factor in politics, while the brewer has not, and the politician, the legislator, and the municipal boss have made capital out of the fact.

I do trust that the day is now about to dawn, when this condition of things will be altered, to the benefit of the industry as well as to the benefit of the community at large; when the phrase "The brewer in politics" will no longer mean what it means today: a helpless begging for fairness and justice, and a clumsy and pitiful attempt to win the good graces of those who are merely the doorkeepers that guard the entrance to the political arena, where the enemy of the brewer and his friends has entrenched himself; but when it will mean, on the contrary, the intelligent marshalling of the forces of sane and sober citizenship, and the legitimate assertion of the rights and privileges of that citizenship, not at the threshold of the political arena, but within it.

When that day dawns, gentlemen, the reign of the fanatic and the zealot will be over. Whether it will ever dawn, depends at this moment, I verily believe, on your courage and determination alone, and upon that wisdom which cheerfully suffers the temporary sacrifice for the sake of the ultimate triumph of a just and glorious cause. (Prolonged applause.)

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the next speaker to address you will be Mr. Fox, the Secretary of the Association. (Applause.)

Mr. FOX. Gentlemen, what I have to say here this afternoon is entirely unofficial. It has not been submitted to the officers, or Trustees of this Association, but it is offered in the hope that it will arouse a practical discussion of a vital and pressing question which is just as important as any of the matters which Mr. Andreae has so eloquently presented. Mr. Andreae has very kindly left my field open to me, and I know he agrees with me that all of our efforts in all other directions will be found futile, will at least mean going over the same fights again and again, if we do not satisfy the public of this country in regard to the conduct of the retail trade.

I believe it must be clear to all of you who have been on the firing line that the agitation against the saloon is more real and more general than the agitation against alcohol. If we only had to deal with the men who are total abstainers, we should not have much of an organization to combat. I do not believe that any considerable percentage of the men of this country are total abstainers. Even among physicians, with whom it is customary today to inveigh against alcohol, you will find that very few are total abstainers. If you had attended the convention of the medical men of this country in Atlantic City a year or two ago, you would have found ample evidence in the beer gardens and the hotels of Atlantic City during the evenings of the convention. The doctors do not practice what they preach, and a very goodly percentage of the ministers are not total abstainers. Even the Anti-Saloon League does not attempt to pledge its adherents to total abstinence. I believe it is true that the popular taste for light beverages is increasing, and that there is a growing tolerance of the use of alcoholic beverages in moderation.

In almost every locality, however, the saloon is the subject of just reproach. Of course, the men who make their living by promoting this sentiment against these saloons, are not interested in the improvement of conditions. The worse the saloons are, the more capital they can make out of them. It must be evident to all of us, therefore, that there is no common ground upon which we can meet with men who are engaged in the professional prohibition and Anti-Saloon League movement.

The criticism of the saloon comes very largely; not altogether, but very largely from those who do not patronize it and who have no first hand knowledge of it. I say not entirely, because I have heard recently among leaders of workingmen's organizations that the workingman really cares nothing about the elaborate saloons that we provide for him, that they have a sort of feeling that the money for the elaborate fixtures that are provided are taken out of the beer that we provide, and he would rather have a larger measure and simpler surroundings.

Of course, we are handicapped in our local license campaigns by the indefensible character of disreputable saloons. And it seems to me that we make a mistake in the arguments we use in our campaigns. The trend of our argument is that the open saloon is much better than the secret speak-easy. Is not this a tacit admission that after all it is only the lesser of two evils that we have to offer? In the long run all our efforts to organize our friends and educate the liberals will go for naught if we are merely trying to win their support of "a necessary evil." The thing we are fighting for must be good in itself and we must ourselves believe it is good in itself if we are to have any permanent success.

Now, I do not agree at all with some of those, even amongst our own members, who fear sometimes that the saloon must go. If it were merely a drinking place, it might be obliterated, but the saloon is essentially a social institution which is deeply rooted in the habits and the customs of all nations, and none of the various substitutes for it have meet with any marked measure of success.

This last week, in "The Survey," which is the official organ in the philanthropic work in this country—I am just going to read one or two paragraphs from it, because it is the strongest and most illuminating statement of the saloon question that I have seen anywhere. It is entitled: "What the Church May Learn from the Saloon" and it deals specifically with conditions in New York City.

It says that: "Between one and two million men spend a part of every day in saloons, thirteen thousand bars are supported by this vast army.

Is thirst alone what all these men are seeking to satisfy?

If it were there would not be a saloon in the city. Every grocer would sell liquor. Men would order their drinks by telephone and drink them at home.

The saloon exist because liquor is not all men want. Three-fourths of the saloon's patrons are impelled thither by one of the finest cravings of the soul, the craving for human fellowship.

This demand cannot and ought not to be repressed. It is the most wholesome thing in the world. The saloon, or something which will afford a comradeship as free and democratic is becoming more indespensible every day."

And then the article goes on a little later to compare the saloon and its substitute, which, in this case, is spoken specifically as the church. It says:

"The majority of church houses have steps leading up to the door—the saloon avoids even a door-step. The 'substitute' is seldom conspicuous, and often has a little sign, so modestly unobtrusive that one may pass it twice, and then ask a policeman where it is. If he knows, you are fortunate. The saloon dazzles with lights and glitters with advertisements of liquor. The policeman knows where it is. The door of the 'substitute' is locked, and you wait in the cold until someone with three other jobs lets you in, looks you over to determine whether you have come to beg or to donate, and asks your business. The saloon has a push-door; touch it, you are inside, and nobody asks your business. Ring the bell at the door of most churches on Monday morning and you will wait until Wednesday for an answer."

Just let me give you one more paragraph:

"A rich man may take his car to his private club or entertain at home. The poor man has hardly room in his flat for his family, and he can not afford to be a member of any private club. He goes to the public club, the saloon.

In a word, the saloon is the poor man's club. To him it seems the purest democracy in America. It is his society. To destroy it would leave him without social standing, the most precious thing in life, even to a tramp." (Applause).

Mr. FITGER. Who wrote that, Mr. Fox?

Mr. FOX. It is written by Frank Charles Laubach, in "The Survey."

Now, gentlemen, after all, what do we ourselves really know, thoroughly know, about this institution which dispenses our beverages? Has anybody really made a thorough study of the saloon, from the standpoint of its patrons? Is it not the fundamental thing to do, to make a sort of saloon-survey in every community where the license system prevails? It would not be very difficult to find out how many regular customers a place has; how many of them live nearby, and also the extent to which it thrives on casual trade. Some saloons serve as a noon-hour resting place and lunch room for workingmen, and the saloon may perhaps serve several totally different groups at different times of the day. Now, how should we go about it? I think it would involve dividing the day into periods, taking a sort of census of each saloon during such period, and, when you did that, you could tell whether it was worth while to fight so fiercely for early opening or against early closing. You would also know if there were too many saloons, and you would know which are the ones that are not needed. Incidentally we should all know to what extent the saloon is catering to the mass of the people, and it would be very illuminating to compare the saloon census with the number of men who visit other places of public recreation.

Now, if I were license commissioner, say, under the commission form of government which, by the way, seems destined to make such strides in our municipal system, I should want first hand information of this kind, before I undertook to decide in favor of one against the other. If I were a brewer I think I could regard such information as the very foundation of saloon credit system. The looseness with which this department of the brewer's business is conducted, is simply amazing. There is not any branch of manufacturing or merchandising in this country in which the average customer gets such a large line of credit; for, of course, the money advanced for the license and for furnishing the saloon, fitting it up, should be charged against the credit account. As a brewer, I think perhaps, if I was undertaking this study, I would want to know how much money a saloon takes in each week, I would want to know how it is divided, that is to say, how much for beer, how much for wines or whiskey, and how much for soft drinks and cigars. Incidentally, would not this give us a line on the feasibility of separating beer and whiskey licenses, as a business proposition?

Now, I believe it would pay groups of brewers in our cities to organize a system of this kind for their mutual benefit, and that it would go a long way towards giving stability to the retail trade. It would have to be done, or at any rate, it should best be done in cooperation with the organized retailors, as a matter of common concern, by a corps of competent inspectors, who would act as a check upon the brewer collectors. I will say here that in no other business that I know anything about does the merchant rely upon his salesmen alone—and, of course, the collector corresponds to the salesman—for credit information about his customers, and that is what the brewer very often does. In no other business is the personality of the customer a greater feature than in the saloon business.

But a survey of the saloon for trade purposes will not win the confidence of the public or satisfy the many fair minded men who are not cranks, but who feel sure that there are too many saloons, and have been led to believe that a considerable percentage of them are run in loose and lawless fashion. I want to urge that we invite the cooperation of disinterested civic bodies, such as local boards of trade, chambers of commerce, civic and municipal leagues and whatever organizations there may be in the respective communities that are impartial and that really represent the business interests and the business men of the communities on this line, to take the matter up without prejudice. I think it is probable that the financing of such an investigation would have to be done by the brewers, and then, after the survey is completed, and a recommendation is made as to the license policy or as to a saloon zone, or as to the elimination of such saloons, then it is going to be necessary for the brewer, the wholesaler, and the retailer to get together and talk it all over and find out what is the best way to carry out the recommendations that will be made, however drastic they may be. Here, of course, comes the rub. Ten years ago we may have said that this could not be done, but we know that it has been done. We know what was the history of the inception of the Brooks Law in Pennsylvania. We have had an object lesson recently of the way in which the men in the retail trade in Ohio have gotten together and met the situation, which is going to wipe out, as I understand it, Mr. Andreae, some three thousand five hundred saloons. The City of Buffalo has done something of this kind. Whatever it may be, it will involve the amalgamation of decent places. It may be that the brewers themselves and the organized retailers will have to decide where the line shall be drawn territorially, but whatever it is I believe there is enough business ability and horse sense in the wholesale and retail trade to solve this, as a plain business proposition.

I do not believe we can afford to wait for legislative enactment to improve saloon conditions. Even if we could close up all the disorderly and disreputable places tomorrow, we should not be satisfying the public. Incidentally, I believe that the percentage of these places is grossly exaggerated even by the brewers themselves. There is, however, a general feeling that the number of saloons should be limited to the requirements of the retail trade. That is to say, that the licenses should be granted from the standpoint of the reasonable convenience of the public, without intruding upon what are called "residence districts." Remember that public opinion is the grandfather of the law. We can not win public opinion with saloons that are the pest holes of the community. The saloon may be law abiding and yet thoroughly objectionable. I have known of small cities where the corner saloon has been the lounging place for loafers so that women avoided it and take the other side of the street, if they possibly can. You and I have seen many saloons where empty beer kegs line the sidewalks and dribble stale beer into the gutters. The right kind of a saloon ought to advertise itself by its attractiveness from the outside, just as a first-class restaurant does. Perhaps the time will come very shortly when the saloon shall be run openly from the street.

Whether it is possible to transplant the Continental beer garden to this country is perhaps debatable. The Continental cafe or beer garden is homogeneous, while the American saloon, as a rule, is cosmopolitan. I believe, however, that something along the line of a cafe-club that would serve as a family resort is needed. With the spread of woman suffrage the women are going to pass judgment upon the saloon, and I do not believe that a place which is a reputable family resort is going to be opposed by the ordinary woman. In fact, I think that we are going to have some great surprises; that it is quite possible we shall find that women will be demanding clean and comfortable accommodations of a respectable character, and it will not be many years until it will pay to cater to them. I do not believe that reasonable women have any quarrel with the saloon or public house as it ought to be: that is, a place where a man and his wife can get what food and drink they wish.

In conclusion, gentlemen, let me say that the time has come to strike the scales from our eyes and regard this whole question from the standpoint of the community. We have got to realize that the public is intensely concerned in this question, that the public is going to settle it for us, whether we want it or not, and that is what the public demands, and that the consideration of it as a matter of community welfare is the only course that is worth considering. (Applause.)

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the next speaker who will address you is Mr. Farley, President of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association. I take pleasure in introducing Mr. Farley to you. (Applause.)

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President and Gentlemen; I consider it a very high compliment to be invited to open the debate on the question of a practical plan for the betterment of conditions in the retail trade as I believe that it is the first time during your existence of over fifty years that a representative of the Retail Liquor Trade has been privileged to appear before you.

For too many years there has been an everwidening chasm between the Brewer and the Retail Liquor Dealer, over which it seemed impossible to settle the manifest distrust that has existed to a very marked extent—for altogether too long a time.

For twenty years it has been the policy of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, of which I have the honor to be President, that there should exist the greatest harmony between the three great branches of the Liquor Trade—the Brewer, the Wholesale Liquor Dealer and the Retail Liquor Dealer,—and that all should work in perfect harmony for the protection of our common interests, for we are told "A house divided against itself must fall."

It has never been our intention in any way to interfere with the organic working of each of these branches but all should work along its own individual lines and should so work that there would be no clash but perfect unison existing.

When Dewey steamed into Manila Bay and fought that wonderful—Battle—it was not he that planned that most wonderful coup. It was a higher authority—the Naval Board of Strategy at Washington. There, away from the smoke and din of battle, with all the necessary data before them, these old, experienced and wise men conceived and planned. Dewey simply carried out their plans with wonderful dexterity.

So with our battles,—some plan should be devised by which the plan of battle may be worked out and each given his part to play and I assure you every Retailer will do his duty. (Applause.)

Two years ago and again this year I was invited to attend the convention of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, and I believe that I was instrumental in casting across this chasm that lies between us, substantial cables, and I trust that my presence here to-day will result in the final chain being forged upon which a most substantial suspension bridge will be built to span this chasm, upon which our Board of Strategy will be the better able to plan and lay out a more successful campaign.

In 1862, two years after Lincoln had assumed the reins of Government, we had what is known as the "Off Elections," and at that time the Democrats swept the country and again secured control of Congress. The day after the election, there was a Cabinet Meeting, and, while waiting for the President, the members of the Cabinet discussed the result of the election and were wondering "what was the matter with the people." Just then Lincoln entered the Chamber, and, overhearing the conversation, said: "Gentlemen, we must not wonder what is the matter with the people—they are all alright but let us ask ourselves the question "What is the matter with us." (Applause.)

That is exactly the question we must ask ourselves today. Notwithstanding that after over half a century of the most strenuous fight—our enemies claim that forty per cent. of the country is dry, yet the consumption of Malt and Spirituous Liquors per head is steadily increasing. The consumption per capita was 4.08 gallons in 1850 and 23 gallons in 1911. That proves most conclusively that the people are not prepared, or in a mood to abolish the Liquor Trade. Then what is the matter with us? And, I hear you say, with one voice: "The manner in which the saloon is conducted."

Yes, my friends, I believe that the stench in the nostrils of the people is the Dive Saloon, and the thorn in the side of the legitimate traffic in this brothel. Now, what is the remedy? Resolutions will not eradicate the evil. Drastic measures is the only remedy—the way to do a thing is to do it.

From my wide experience, I fail to find the man, who, by hard and persevering work, has accumulated enough money with which to establish himself in business, asking no favors from any one, will invest in a saloon of doubtful reputation. He does not desire to risk his "all" in such a place. Invariably, you will find the management of a Dive Saloon in the hands of an unprincipled fellow who has nothing to lose and all to gain and is willing to take desperate chances for that gain.

A few years ago, when you met in Milwaukee, resolutions were adopted condemning the Dive Saloon, which were published broadcast throughout the country.

In the Chicago papers, almost on the same page that those resolutions appeared, there was an account of the raiding of a saloon and the full history of the place given. It was a typical "Dive" in every sense of the word. The Brewer who was selling the beer, and whose sign was over the door, was asked what he was going to do in the face of the resolutions passed by his own organization. He offered many excuses but the most important was that if he refused to sell beer to the man, some other brewer would.

Another instance has come to my notice, where a certain Brewer in a Western State desired to increase his barrelage and sent out his representative to drum up trade. Where he found a village or small city, with from five to ten well conducted saloons doing a profitable business, he would buy a lot and put up a shack and install a man—one of those who had nothing to lose and all to gain—until it was proverbial that the saloons of this particular brewery were the Dives. That was not all. It was not long before he commenced to "reap the whirl wind." Damage suits accumulated, caused by the misconduct of his tenants, until some thirty thousand dollars in judgments had to be settled, and worse still, the indignation of the people was aroused. Adverse results in Local Option elections swept the State, and laid low nearly all of his saloons, together with scores of legitimate places. What did it profit that man to swell his barrelage a few hundred, only to be eventually wiped out of business?

I have yet to learn that a Dive is a profitable investment. The management may charge $1.00 a bottle for beer, or give for five cents a "pony" of beer, of which 1,000 go to a barrel, but it can hardly be compared to a respectable working man's saloon that serves an honest 16 ounces of beer to a glass, as a desirable investment for the Brewer.

The Brewing Industry, which landed in this country with the "Mayflower," has given to history many of our greatest names in philanthropic and other benevolent work; names that are cherished by the sons and grandsons and great-grandsons of these founders of our country, and yet we find in too many instances these honored names are now blazed upon the lintels and door posts of some of the most disreputable plague spots that bring so much censure on our business.

You all know that what I have said is only too true. We see all these errors in the "other fellow," but let us indulge in a little self-examination. Self-examination is good for the soul, good for the body and good in a commercial way. Let each one stop and examine his own business and if one of these Dives exist among your customers, advise him to change his methods, and if that is not done, do not hesitate to take drastic means to exterminate the evil.

The good book tells us "If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out." Let us purify our business and thereby steal the ammunition from the enemy.

Gentlemen, resolutions will not cure this evil. "Dangerous diseases require heroic treatment." These Dives are the ammunition of our enemy. They must be blotted out at all hazard.

What brought Ohio back into the license line but a thorough scrutiny of the saloons and a radical weeding out of the Dives. There are Brewers, and large ones at that, who will not, under any circumstances, cater to this trade and I am pleased to say that the one that supplies my saloons in New York City, will not allow a keg or a case of their beer to enter a place that has no license or certificate to traffic in Liquor. (Applause). If all would follow in their laudable footsteps the wind would soon be taken "out of the sails of our enemy" and we would see a brighter and a clearer future before us.

Another point,—and that is, we must build up our forces. What think you that after over fifty years you have not one half of the Licensed Brewers on your roll. The same can be said of our friends, the Wholesalers, and of our Retailers' Organization. Can we not help one another to bring recruits to our rank?

It was only the other day that the President of a newly organized State Association said to me: "If the Brewers will help us—we will be a success. If they fight us, our progress, if any, will be slow." Why should the Brewer object to the Retail Trade Organization? Is it not to aid you in the protection of your and our business? The Brewer cannot exist without the Retailer, neither can the Retailer exist without the Brewer.

Some years ago, the late Joseph Miller, the respected Secretary of the Ohio Brewers' Association, declared in your Convention at Buffalo that he would sooner have the little saloon-keeper on the outskirts of the City that played pinochle with his customers at night than the wealthiest Brewer as a political factor. Mr. Miller was right. The Brewer cannot get along in his political campaign without the saloonkeeper. Then, why object to their uniting to aid you in your fight?

I represent here today over seventy-five thousand thoroughly organized, well disciplined retail liquor dealers, resting on their arms, keeping the camp fires burning and awaiting orders. Can you afford to ignore them? Let us all endeavor to close up ranks and help each other in so doing, and let us bring over 100,000 retailers, who are not now members, into the fold.

The retailers know that for nearly half a century your organization, unaided and alone, has done yeoman work in the protection of our trade. We appreciate your efforts in the past.

Two years ago, in addressing our friends, the Wholesalers, I told them that we appreciated their work and desired to show our appreciation by extending to them our patronage, rather than to the "drone" who failed to contribute his share but willing to enjoy all the advantages of organization. I suggested to them that they should adopt some plan by which we could select the "sheep from the goats." They grasped the idea and adopted a stamp plan by which on every invoice sent out, the stamp of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association is affixed. The result is that the Retailers are forcing the delinquent ones into the Wholesalers' Association, and to bear their share of the burden. (Applause).

Could not a similar plan be adopted by which the Retailer could tell who were and who were not his friends among the Brewers? By the display of some kind of a card for the keg beer and a stamp on every bottle of beer sold over the bar.

Give us your aid to build up our organization by inducing your customers to joint in with us, and we, in return, can help build up your organization. A reciprocity arrangement could easily be worked out and put into effect. So, let us hope that upon the great suspension bridge that we are so rapidly building over the destructive chasm that has for so long separated us, we can meet on a common level and devise many plans and schemes for the advancement of all the people interested in the trade, which is the greatest producer of revenue to support our National, State and Municipal Governments, and let this be our motto: "United we stand, divided we fall." (Applause.)

The PRESIDENT. The next speaker to address you, gentlemen, will be Mr. Ware, of Baltimore.

(Mr. Ware thereupon addressed the convention upon the license system in Baltimore).

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, please keep your seats. We have two more speakers to address you, and I can assure you that their speeches are going to be very short, and then we are going to have Mr. Gardiner, who will make the last talk of the day that I am sure will be very interesting to all of us. Therefore, I ask you gentlemen to indulge us a little while longer until we get through here. Mr. Austen.

(Mr. Austen stated that he had nothing of pressing importance to bring before the meeting.)

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Huber, did you wish to say something?

Mr. HUBER. No.

The PRESIDENT. Then, gentlemen, the next speaker will be Mr. Gardiner.

Mr. GARDINER. Mr. President, and gentlemen, in deference to the lateness of the hour, I shall detain you but a few moments. I think it must have been under a misapprehension that I knew something of the topic that I was assigned to speak on the subject of organization. While I have been somewhat intimately associated during the past few years with movements that date from the origin of that work, nevertheless, I feel that I know possibly less about the subject now than I did sometime ago; but I shall make a brief effort at least to deserve your attention for, as I have said before, a few minutes.

When we consider what organization has accomplished in the development of world work, any elaborate reference to it would seem both unnecessary and untimely in this presence and on this occasion.

Historians tell us how valuable it was in the early life of the Ancient Greeks and Romans and experience teaches us how necessary it is in every walk of present day life. Yet in the face of all our knowledge of its many benefits and advantages, it is more than strange, it is amazing, that there are so many who, while acknowledging its virtue when applied to the affairs of others, turn from it entirely when offered the opportunity to appropriate it to themselves.

Where is the successful politician who has not attained his success as the result of organization? The body politic of every society progresses surely and swiftly under the caressing quality of its power. Scarcely a church whose physical condition is not improved by the active organization within its holy walls.

Man is dependent upon his fellow man; no man can successfully be a law unto himself.

Military authorities know and will tell you that a hundred men organized can successfully ten times that number arrayed in an individual capacity.

Macaulay in one of his ever living epics, has testified to his knowledge of organization.

Victor Murdock, Congressman from Kansas, speaking on organization, says: "What is organization? What underlies it? Self surrender in the individual, that is all." Then he concludes: "Everyone must learn it. Society would not get along without it. No domestic tranquility is possible in its absence, or business or professional or political success".

Organized cooperation therefore intelligently directed and applied will overcome all obstacles and its proper operation enlighten and broaden the man whose vision is narrowed by selfishness or dimmed by prejudice.

When we who are engaged in this work go about among you all, it requires no specific ability to discover that you are as alive to the necessity of organized effort as are we; yet when the time comes to apply it in individual cases often there is hesitation and too frequently refusal. This cannot be due to the lack of appreciation of the value of organization because as I have said in discussing its merits, one scarcely ever runs counter to a dissenting opinion. Necessarily therefore the cause of all this indifference must be sought elsewhere and it is in the hope of finding it that I am taking this as my subject today.

Those who oppose us are evidently as alive to the value of organized work as we are and infinitely more alert and thorough in utilizing it to the utmost. Unlike us they take time by the fore lock and organize patiently and months ahead in readiness to strike a blow at a given time.

We, on the other hand, wait until the blow has been struck and then cry aloud for organization, our opponents meanwhile skipping lightly away to another theatre of action, where sleeping giants in all likelihood again await their coming only to be in their turn taken by surprise and driven to rout.

Many, indeed most of our defeats are such, not because of inherent weakness in the cause itself but rather are they our Waterloos as the result of unpre-voted to a man for a candidate for governor who was a pronounced prohibitionist. You know that, don't you? (Cries of "Yes.")

No doubt whatever about it, they did not do it purposely, but they did it, because they had not the knowledge that is required to make their vote effective at the right place, and that is at the polls.

Now, gentlemen, the organization that we suggest is an organization, either of individual firms or of existing manufacturers' associations, taking either associations or members, and then let in any feature that you think desirable into your organization. What I ask, is this—and it may seem immodest coming from me myself, in asking it—but I ask that the organization, as far as the purposes I have outlined are concerned, shall accept my leadership. I do not want to have any office in the association. I merely ask you to accept my leadership in matters that concern the polls, and the question that is practically the one absorbing question for all of us, and that is the fight against the fanatical prohibition movement, and all that enters into that fight. When the word goes out from our headquarters that such and such is required to be done in this locality or that locality, national or local, that you accept that word as final, and believe that it is the one right thing to do, and do it blindly. There is nothing in my scheme that needs shun exposure in the full light of day. We all know that all of our various industries, whether they are railroads, franchise holders, or others, have been compelled, more or less, by a vicious system and corrupt system, to do all kinds of things which in themselves were either illegal or immoral; we know that; I do not suppose there is any industry or financial circle in this country that has not been drawn into that vortex. The day has gone by for that kind of thing; the day should have never existed. I want to say to you gentlemen I believe that a just cause (and I know that our cause is just, or we would not have forty million customers) can only win by just means, and that no cause that requires improper means to win has a right to win at all.

That is the principle I go by, and I believe that if we carry on our organization along sensible, rational and practical lines, it can accomplish that which we have failed to accomplish in the past; for what has been our great trouble? I am now speaking of the point of view of the body I represent, and that is the people who make beer and other drinks in this country. What has been the main source of trouble? I must be perfectly frank; I say that it has been the unfortunate policy that has been pursued in the past, individually and collectively, of feeding our enemies and starving our friends. (Cries of "That is right.") I want to tell you gentlemen, ask any man engaged in political affairs—and how many are there in this country who are not directly or indirectly so engaged—which pays best, to be the enemy of the brewer or to be his friend? In nine cases out of ten, if the man is honest, his answer will be that it is most expedient to pose as the brewer's enemy, because to be his enemy means to be coaxed and wheedled by the brewer and patted on the back by the prohibitionist; whilst to be his friend, means only too frequently to be neglected, and treated with indifference by the brewer and hounded and persecuted by the prohibitionist. (Cries of "That is right.")

Now, I am criticising myself and my colleagues, because the brewer will rather spend his time and his efforts in the vain endeavor to win over his thousands of enemies than to devote that time and those efforts towards organizing and protecting his millions of friends; that is true; you must know it.

Now, where can you expect our friends to stand when they feel that in time of war, we rush to them to come to our aid, just beckoning you know, and in the interim, we leave them to shift for themselves, on the assumption that—well, they do not need any support or encouragement; they are our friends anyway, and they are just handy when we call for them—instead of helping them to maintain the army that they place in the field at our disposal at a moment's notice; instead of helping them to maintain that army and increase its efficiency.

Gentlemen, I say that if we were to act sensibly in that matter, this army is capable of not only being doubled and trebled and quadrupled in numbers, but with adequate means and methods, it can be so organized that its efficiency as an active force at the polls, working under systematic directions from one headquarters, would be increased ten fold.

Now, I do not want to go further into details. There are so many angles to this question of organization, that I could talk till midnight on the subject, but the whole point in the question is this: ONE CENTRAL HEADQUARTERS AND ONE CENTRAL HEAD is required, in order to make every organization an effective one; and, therefore, gentlemen, I conclude by repeating—if you will organize as I central head is required, in order to make every organization an effective one: and, therefore, gentlemen, I conclude by repeating—if you will organize as I ask you to organize with the understanding—well, I will put it as bluntly as I can, that you will accept me as the leader of your organization."

Further, I call attention especially to the following:

"Now, collect that money, and see that it is distributed to one center alone; in other words, that none of it goes astray, and is not spent in some of those silly little elections where a lot of saloon keepers are put out at so much per day to do election work, which amounts to nothing in nine cases out of ten, whereas, while all that money is being spent in that direction, we are losing our lives in Washington.

"What does it matter to me whether a little locality goes dry; what does it matter to me, gentlemen, if the State of Illinois, where my business is, goes wet, if at Washington they declare for nation-wide prohibition? I have spent all my money in Illinois, but the United States itself is my chief business. The one thing that we have got to do is to protect our business where it may be destroyed for good and all, and that is in Washington."

Further, I call especial attention to the following:

"You would have rather too many vice presidents, Mr. Chairman, if you did that, but allow me to explain it along the line of other organizations generally. Take the brewers' organization. We have our national association—the United States Brewers' Association; we have in every State our local State association; then we have in the cities local associations, and in some cases there are individuals who will not belong to the State associations, but they will to the national; there are some who will not belong to the national, but they will to the State association, in others words, do not ged rid of your existing associations, but let every man who is a member of every State or local association join the national association and let these associations as a body be a member of the national association. You take the retailers: they have in every State, and generally in every city of any size, a retailers' association. Then they have in the State their State association, to which not always all belong; some won't belong to the local, but will belong to the State. The national association consists of memberships, or rather delegateships, I should say, from the various State associations. That is just slightly different from our Brewers' Association. Now, I am going—that is part of our scheme—to get the retailers to come in just in the same way, and accept general leadership from one headquarters. Not that I say I am the one man who simply says this is to be done. I want to consult with all these organizations: I want to have them in constant touch with me, and I want to have their advice, knowledge, experience and counsel, so that I feel that everything that is known at headquarters can be at a moment's notice disseminated all over the country.

"Gentlemen, take our organization in Ohio—I do not want to digress, but these matters are of great interest and they are the meat of the whole subject—our organization in Ohio is such that I can go to the telephone here, call up our headquarters at Cincinnati, and say: 'Call a stenographer to the 'phone,' and I dictate to him a statement. I say: 'I want that statement to be in the hands of the members of the Personal Liberty League of Ohio, within twenty-four hours.' In twenty-four hours that statement will be in the hands of 150,000 people, voters in the State of Ohio, and among those 150,000 voters are several thousand who are good for a large number of votes, besides their own. We have the address of every member and the necessary number of envelopes ready, stamped, in triplicate, and when a statement has gone out, giving instructions with regard to either the candidates, or to the question which is up before them, simply telling them what the personal Liberty League desires in that particular matter, when that set has gone out, there are thirty girls right there at the table ready to supply the next lot of envelopes, so that there are always three sets of envelopes of 150,000 each, stamped and addressed ready to go out.

"Gentlemen, that is organization! It costs money, and it can only be done if you will get rid of big committees and boards, and put the matters in the hands of one person whom you can fire if he does not make good, and replace by some one else who will make good."

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that you include the whole of those minutes also in our record.

Maj. HUMES. Very well.

(The minutes from which the foregoing extract was taken are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 64.

[Office copy. Please return this copy to the file. See pages 9-11, 16-19. From U. S. B. A. files, by Fox. File 166-A.]

MINUTES OF A MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, HELD AT THE HOTEL DENNIS, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., OCTOBER 3, 1913, AT 10 O'CLOCK A. M.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Percy Andreae, in the Chair, at 10.30 a. m.

The following gentlemen, representing the organizations shown, were present:

Mr. George Armor, Representing the Bond Bottle Sealing Company, Wilmington, Del.

Mr. Ludwig Baer, Representing A. S. Baer & Son, New York City.

Mr. J. C. Staley, Representing Albert Schwill & Co., New York.

Mr. Chas. A. Steinwachs, Representing U. S. Frumentum Co., Detroit, Mich.

Mr. S. V. Stenier, Representing S. S. Steiner, New York City

Mr. M. E. Taber, Representing Taber Pump Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. L. Ullmann, Representing Carl Ullmann & Co. New York City

Mr. Edw. H. Vogel, Representing Barry-Wehmiller Machinery Company, St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. K. Von Eltz, Representing Reisert Automatic Water Purifying Co., New York City.

Mr. Theo. O. Vilter, Representing Vilter Mfg. Co., Milwaukee, Wis. (N. A. of B. E. & S.)

Mr. Arthur J. Wallace, Representing Economic Machinery Co., Worcester, Mass.

Mr. Jno. M. Willen, Representing Manufacturers' & Dealers' Club, Milwaukee, Wis.

Mr. N. G. Williams, Representing Pfaudler Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. Fred Wehmiller, Representing Barry-Wehmiller Machinery Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. Charles Zoller, Representing Charles Zoller Co., New York City.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, I have been asked to call this meeting to order, and the first business that will be before you is the election of a temporary chairman. Now, if some gentleman here will kindly suggest a name.

A VOICE. Mr. Theo. O. Vilter.

The nomination was duly seconded.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, is there any other nomination?

A VOICE. I move the nomination be closed.

The motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.

Mr. ANDREAE. Now, gentlemen, the nomination of Mr. Vilter is before you.

The nomination was unanimously carried.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, Mr. Vilter.

(Here Mr. Vilter took the chair.)

Mr. VILTER. Gentlemen; I thank you for the vote you have given, but I think there are bigger men here than I am, to whom you should have given your vote.

A VOICE. I do not think there are.

Mr. VILTER. What is the order of business? I do not know much about it. Do you Mr. Andreae?

Mr. ANDREAE. Here is something written down. I do not know whether there is any need for a secretary of the meeting, but it might be well to have one.

Mr. VILTER. You have a stenographer.

Mr. ANDREAE. That will be good enough then. Perhaps I had better explain the purposes of the meeting.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Andreae will explain the situation to you gentlemen.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, the purpose for which this meeting was called, is, as you all know, to organize; and I would like, just as briefly as I can, to give you an outline of the factors that have brought about the necessity for calling you together for the purpose of forming an organization of a general character.

You know that we are facing a condition, nationally, which is absolutely unprecedented. There have been in our ranks men who have foreseen that the day would come when we would be face to face in Washington with the question of Nation-wide prohibition. A measure has passed Congress, which is in its effect, and is so intended to be in its effect, a prohibition of the interstate ing with the delegates from each organization representing the parent organization, at some convenient time in the afternoon, and I should like to make that in the shape of a motion.

Mr. VILTER. You offer the motion?

Mr. SCHOTT. State the motion.

Mr. VILTER. The motion was that one member of each organization should meet. As a matter of fact, we have the Association of Brewers' Equipment and Supplies represented here, and then there might be some State allied people here, and they should get together and talk matters over about this organization, and then, shortly after, have another meeting before we leave this town; that is the idea of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Before we adjourn this morning, I suggest that we have a meeting of the organizations and the others, I mean this particularly, and then before the adjournment is taken at all we can get some definite ideas as to what can be accomplished.

Mr. PORGES. As to the plan suggested by the gentleman, there is only one objectionable feature in it. As I understand him, he wants the representatives of these different organizations to come together and have a preliminary meeting. Well, what organizations are properly represented here? I belong to one, but I do not think I have the right to speak for them. Others here belong to other organizations and are in the same position. I think if I understand and appreciate Mr. Andreae's ideas aright we might just as well accept his leadership right now, and have the committee appointed for the purpose of devising means of effecting an organization, in accordance with the ideas as expressed—and maybe, in some cases, not expressed by Mr. Andreae—and this committee should, at the same time, act as a board of nominators, and submit to us before we leave Atlantic City, the names of officers, for which this temporary organization is ready to cast their votes. These officers, it may be understood, can later on, after the organization has been perfected, make room for those that are of more importance, and maybe better fitted; but I understand Mr. Andreae wants us to have an organization perfected before we leave Atlantic City, and the objection to the plan of the gentleman that spoke before me, is that it procrastinates a little.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We are not procrastinating at all, the meeting can take place before noon.

Mr. PORGES. In fact, as I say, I am more inclined to follow the leadership of Mr. Andreae.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not believe you understood Mr. Andreae very well, I am sorry to say.

Mr. PORGES. I am perfectly willing to leave it to Mr. Andreae to enlighten us on that subject.

Mr. ANDREAE. It seems to me the simplest thing is to get to business and decide to elect a committee right now.

Mr. SCHOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think there are delegates here representing different organizations, why not let them appoint a committee to suggest names for president, and go right ahead and elect him, then we could go ahead with the balance of the organization, and get that officered?

Mr. ANDREAE. How would it be gentlemen if those present, who represent State organizations or local organizations, would report and give their names.

Mr. SCHOTT. We have three representatives from the Manufacturers' & Dealers' Club of Cincinnati, with power to act.

Mr. COOPER LYON. We have three from Chicago.

Mr. SAVAGE. We have the President here from the New York Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association.

Mr. HORIX. I am from Cleveland and represent the Manufacturers' & Dealers' League.

Mr. WILLEM. I represent the Manufacturers' & Dealers' Club of Milwaukee.

A VOICE. Mr. S. V. Steiner, the vice-president of the Personal Liberty League of New York, is not here just now, but is in the city.

Mr. ANDREAE. You represent him?

A VOICE. I probably would try very hard.

Mr. ZOLLER. Mr. Andreae proposed this National Association. I want to know, are there any additional taxes to that outside of our organization, and outside of what we have got? For instance, take the National Manufacturers' & Dealers' League, our members pay so much during the year, and they have a man to collect that. I want to know if there will be an additional fee. I understood Mr. Andreae that each member would be taxed additionally for the National League.

Mr. ZOLLER. Outside of our State?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the idea. Now, of course, I do not know how individual State associations handle those matters, or if they handle the matters in this way: That their individual members are assessed, and some are assessed considerably, which is then contributed by your State associations, say, to fights within the State or local fights—that is one side of the matter. We have the same in the Brewers' Association; we have to conduct our States fights and we also have to contribute to our National Association, which is now bound to look after our interests in Washington on a scale that was never known before. I therefore, wish to explain that the question of contributions is the most important of all, but this will fall away—and that point I want to emphasize again, in case I did not make myself properly understood—this will fall away, if you organize as I want you to organize, so that if local brewers, distillers or others come to you and say: "We want you to contribute to our local campaign here and to our local campaign there," I would like this organization to be in a position to say no individual shall contribute individually. Then you will represent yourselves. I am not here to devise the ways and means for you to save money. (Laughter). On the contrary, I want to see as much of it forthcoming as possible, but what I do want to prevent is the unhappy waste of money that I know is going on today.

Therefore if you will organize in such a way that one of your rules will be that an individual firm or a member of this general organization shall only contribute through the National Organization for the purpose for which the National Organization is formed, you will protect yourselves against the individual men who are constantly drawing on you for their local purposes, and at the same time make sure that the money you do contribute—and I hope you will contribute very largely—will be applied effectively and not wasted as in the past.

Mr. ZOLLER. It depends on how the brewers treat us, and we are ready at any time to do that, but I wish to say we have at present in our organization—and I think I should leave that to Mr. Savage, who will explain that—a party that is canvassing in the State of New York; he is going around, and he went out on the 24th of August. Then we have sent money outside to different states, where they asked us for money, so we are not idle in our association. I do not know what the other gentlemen did in the other states. I leave the rest to Mr. Savage.

Mr. ANDREAE. I am well alive to the fact that there is lots of money being spent.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Chairman, in our association in New York, we have worked in our own state since we were organized, and we have contributed considerably to many other states, for instance in the South and the West, and Down East to the amount of several thousand dollars, besides doing our own work in New York State. We have, in our organization, only a paid secretary. This secretary is taking care of the work at the main office but, ranging from thirty to ninety days each year, we send him out through the different counties. Our secretary at the present time is working up at Syracuse and Rochester, and he will stay up there until after election day. I sent him out on the 24th of August. That is the work that we have been doing, and I might say to some of the gentlemen here, that some years ago, we had a National Organization, which we contributed to considerably, but, that, as you all know, was a failure.

Now, I am in favor of a National Organization, such as Mr. Andreae has outlined, and I think it would work, and it can be done, and really, it is the only way to do things. We have tried to do in a small way, in our own State, the same thing that Mr. Andreae has put before us. Of course, our people will be ready and willing to do whatever they can, you may be sure, to help the cause along.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. May I ask the Secretary the number of organizations which have responded?

The REPORTER. About five or six.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In addition, Mr. Taber from Buffalo and myself.

Mr. ANDREAE. Also the Manufacturers' Association of Brewers' Equipment & Supplies is represented.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. A motion was made by Mr. Lilienthal a few moments ago and it was not seconded.

A VOICE. It was seconded.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. I would like to move this: That Mr. Lilienthal withdraw his motion, and that the Vice-President of the first Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association that was ever organized in Chicago be elected as our first President, and that is Mr. Charles J. Lilienthal, probably the best posted man in his line. I think it would expedite matters very much if Mr. Lilienthal would withdraw his motion, and accept the nomination as President.

VOICES. Seconded.

Mr. VILTER. Gentlemen, it has been moved and seconded that Mr. Lilienthal act as President of this new organization.

The resolution was unanimously carried.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Lilienthal, will you take the Chair?

(Here Mr. Charles J. Lilienthal took the Chair.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, I want to thank you for this honor, and I sincerely trust that we shall be able to organize anyway, if we do nothing else. Are there any suggestions regarding the name of the organization? I should like to say in advance to you, that the proposition as I understand it is, that this organization and the State Organizations are to go under the leadership of Mr. Andreae.

A VOICE. And whoever is elected as the successor to Mr. Andreae—if there ever is a successor—to organize all the forces which have one object in view. Am I right?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is our proposition, and that is what we are here now to organize, by states, or rather by cities—in our case I think it would be better nationally.

If anybody has a name to suggest regarding the organization proper, I would like to have it.

A VOICE. I think the natural name would be "The United States Manufacturers' & Dealers' League."

Mr. ANDREAE. The name is very important.

Mr. COOPER LYON. I suggest: "The National League of Commerce & Labor."

Mr. LILIENTHAL. "The National League of Commerce & Labor," that sounds something like a United States Government Department.

A VOICE. That name seems very appropriate to my mind and I second it.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It has been moved that the organization be named, "The National Association of Commerce & Labor." A suggestion made by Mr. Cooper Lyon of Chicago.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. It would seem that that would be conflicting names to some extent with the Department of Commerce & Labor. It is true that we are all laborers, I am sure of that, but I think that it ought to be more clear cut and less meaningless than that would imply.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. What suggestion do you make?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I have not any suggestion, I would rather hear some other suggestions before it was adopted immediately, that is all. It might be all right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Well, the only suggestion that has been made is the "The National Association of Commerce & Labor."

Mr. COOPER LYON. I would leave out, "Manufacturers." The name "Manufacturers" would not oftentimes be properly accepted by those whose votes we want, and I think we should eliminate that name, absolutely.

Mr. ANDREAE. I think Mr. Lyon is right for this reason: That there is the possibility of this misconception, as there are employers' associations. We all have them, and one of the objects usually of an employers' association, is the protection against the organized actions of unions, or others among the employees. Now, we do not want to create that impression that this organization is an organization for the purposes of the employers only, and if you have the word "Labor," only, or "Commerce" only, it would look as though it might be an organization for the purpose of antagonizing the workmen, or protecting the employer against the workmen. Now, there should be no question of one or the other in an organization of this kind, and to my mind that title is an excellent one.

A VOICE. I move that we close on that title.

Mr. COOPER LYON. May I make this suggestion as an afterthought—"The Merchants' & Dealers' League." Would not that be better?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the same thing.

Mr. COOPER LYON. It is synonymous in a measure, that is true. They have the same meaning, but at the same time, they are euphonyous.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. "The United States Association of Commerce & Labor"; that would confound it with the Government.

Mr. VILTER. "National" is better.

Mr. ANDREAE. Do you think that that is any particular reason? You have got a Secretary and a Department of Commerce & Labor; but this is a "National Association of Commerce & Labor." If it has a little taste of Governmental authority, why, so much the better.

Mr. COOPER LYON. Mr. Andreae, I suggest, "The National Anti-Prohibitionist Society."

Mr. ANDREAE. That would not do.

Mr. COOPER LYON. If the word "National," or if the words "United States," would not appeal to you, why not call it "The General Association of Commerce & Labor"?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I am inclined to believe that some word in place of "National," or "United States," would be of advantage, that is my personal opinion.

SEVERAL VOICES. That is right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I think the words, "General Association of Commerce & Labor," would be better.

A VOICE. May I suggest the word "United"?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That would be better, anything that steers clear of the Government.

A VOICE. Why do we want the word "Labor" attached to it?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. To make people think we work.

Mr. ANDREAE. We want them all. I do not think you can better that, and I do not see any objection to the word "National."

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It has been regularly moved that "The National Association of Commerce & Labor" be the name designated for this association. If there are any objections, please state them.

(The motion was put to a vote and carried; there being but two dissenting voices.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. An organization committee, or an organization to move at once, was the object of my motion. You took it on yourselves to elect an officer before you elected your organization proper. Now, I would come back to the story, and that is, that we have an organization committee of the various members of the State organizations and such as are not attached to any organization, to meet in this room right now, to come to the front here, and form an organization, an actual organization. This is what we have to do first, and then select vice presidents and officers to bring this matter to a conclusion.

A VOICE. Why not put that in the form of a motion?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I did, and the motion was withdrawn, and I got an office in the place of it. This is the first time in my experience that you have elected an officer before having an organization, but now you have a name. I am proud of being President of that organization.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The point I wanted to bring out was that we started talking of an organization, but we did not express our opinion as to wheher we want a National one. I am in favor of a big National Organization, but there is no vote upon it. We ought to put that vote.

Mr. FOREMAN. I second hat.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I would like to change it in this one way; that in voting it is to be considered that those who have left their names on the card; that their names and their affiliations, be accepted as their vote, in case they vote in favor. Is that satisfactory? We have all been registered here and it will help in making out the final list to use the cards in taking your vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE. What I wanted to bring out is this: That every man who is vitally interested in the point should absolutely come in unanimously, so that if ever there is a question raised why the meeting was got together, it may be said it was because there was an absolute unanimity of opinion that we ought to have such organization.

(The motion was unanimously carried.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Will the gentlemen who represent the various state and local organiaztions come to the front, and if the other gentlemen will please stay here, the whole matter will be taken care of in ten minutes, and we can go right on forming this organization. I simply want to get the state and local organizations together. Mr. Burger, do not let anybody out. It simply means a suggestion from each for their officers and general committeemen. Gentlemen, will you please come to order here?

(Here Messrs. Willem, Goetz, Lyon, Bartholomay and other gentlemen came to the front.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, you have expressed your opinion on the desirability of going into a National Organization. This is the object of getting the state and local organizations together so that you can select the man from your organization that you want to meet with Andreae a certain number of times further to accomplish something. We have had the path blazed for us. That this is going to be the end of doing nothing but simply getting together and taking lunch and all that sort of thing. Now, there is a tangible thing to get around to. You want to get some persons elected, and I will ask Mr. Andreae when he wants to meet.

Mr. SMOOT. Speaking personally, I do not know whether I have the authority of the National Organization, but I feel I bespeak the choice of all the members of our organization in selecting the name of Mr. Savage who would cooperate.

Mr. BURGER. I do not believe that any of us are duly authorized to speak, and yet there is a certain reliance placed upon us, in conjunction with the former association, with which I have been closely attached, and I would suggest a man whose very residence is in close proximity to that of Mr. Andreae, Mr. H. F. Davenport.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is simply from the delegates from Cincinnati. We understand you are not in a position to tie up anybody but yourself.

Mr. BURGER. I see that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We want to get the general officers of this association, and have you gentlemen go back and finish the details of your organization, so that you can act on Mr. Andreae's suggestions, and that someone will meet and work with him to accomplish the results he is after. That is all we want to do; we cannot levy the assessment now. It is going to take money to get these right men together.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. Representing the Chicago Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association, I present the name of Mr. Cooper Lyon.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Burger, whom do you represent? That is kind of in order, because I know you will have to do the work, and I am going to suggest Mr. Burger.

A VOICE. I will suggest Mr. Carl F. Burger, of Cincinnati.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is an executive committee being formed to get together.

Mr. BURGER. I suggest the name of Mr. Willem, of Milwaukee.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. These gentlemen are to form the first executive committee to organize their own bodies, and this general organization ought to accomplish something. It will be impossible to keep you here long enough to draft By-Laws and go on and do the work that you intend to do under Mr. Andreae's suggestion. This is simply the preliminary organization, to do something and to get to business, and meet with Mr. Andreae in his office within the next ten days, or wherever it may be.

A VOICE. I want to know whether these various gentlemen who are named from their individual cities are to go home and organize their local organizations.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I cannot tell you until they have the meeting here as to what they want to do to accomplish this result. I think, however, it is safe to say, that a local organization will be built up in every case, that would be my idea anyway, and that the local organization will be the nucleus or foundation for the National Organization.

Mr. VILTER. I suggest Mr. Scarborough, of the Chicago National Association of Equipment & Supplies.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We have no delegate for New York here and I would like to get one, if you can get some more people.

(The sub-committee then compiled a tentative list of names.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We only want one representative from each city. We have all the cities represented that are here. The object of this is to select one name from this list to form an executive committee, the one man to be consulted is a man who will give up his time when necessary to go to Chicago, where I understand Mr. Andreae's headquarters are, who will stay at that place as long as it is necessary for him to accomplish the result that Mr. Andreae has started out to do. That is, if he has to stay a week or two, that he will actually be there and do the work. Now, there is no use of putting a lot names on here just for the fun of having them to form a committee. This committee will be the executive committee of the organization, and will have the work to do to raise the funds among other things, and see that their local organizations are established to produce big results locally, if necessary, when called upon. There is no need of putting in here a lot of names of men you know won't do any work.

A VOICE. I can vouch for the names suggested from New York State, such as Mr. Savage.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. They will have to put in their own time and spend their own money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask of this organization, or of Mr. Andreae, whether he will be visiting us?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. For some time Mr. Andreae will be pretty busy in Chicago trying to get this executive committee together. I do not think Mr. Andreae will have any difficulty to meet us. He will be in his regular office, and we will have his advice and his work.

Mr. ZOLLER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the expense will be paid to the different gentlemen who go to Chicago.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is a detail that we are not prepared to take up at the present time, because we have nothing to take the expense from. Let us stick to business, gentlemen, and let us get our organization completed. A lot of the details will take care of themselves later. We must have an executive committee.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Lilienthal, I know there is an organization in Minnesota, and it is a live organization, because I get literature from them, but there ought to be a member from the Twin-Cities, and there ought to be one on this executive board. I cannot suggest the name now, but I can find out from someone who knows.

Mr. PORGES. I want to make a motion that this committee, so far as has been named, together with the additional names that may be suggested and approved by the President, shall be authorized by this meeting to take any action that they see fit to accomplish the purpose for which we were called together here by Mr. Andreae, and after you gentlemen have voted for that, I want to make another motion that we adjourn.

Mr. ANDREAE. I second that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That will be very good, if you will cut it down and simply say that the executive committee to be appointed will have full power to act. I think that will cover everything. We all know that, and we are glad of the opportunity of having some central body to work around and with Mr. Andreae and his organization. The motion is regularly made and seconded that the executive committee be appointed from the list of names suggested, with full power to act with regard to the National Organization.

Mr. ANDREAE. And that the President have power to add to the number.

(The motion was unanimously carried.)

Mr. PORGES. I now come to my second motion that we adjourn.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I can not put a motion to adjourn, gentlemen, because we are not organized; the executive committee has not been organized. We must organize first. What is the next order of business? We must select the officers therefrom and decide on the work to be done. We have here from New York, Mr. Savage and Mr. Baer. Which one of the two gentlemen will get to work? Do not put in your time throwing bouquets at one another, which one will work on this committee?

A VOICE. Mr. Savage, being the President of our organization, is always in close touch.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Savage, Mr. Taber, of Buffalo; Mr. Willem, of Milwaukee; Mr. Burger, I am going to put you in, because I know you will work. Mr. Cooper Lyon, of Chicago, and Mr. Horix. Will you please get together? These gentlemen have been and are today the active secretaries and delegates of the organization that are still in existence and working hard for this result, and I think you can rely on them to give you better service than anybody else can. Mr. Wehmiller, will you devote your time?

Mr. WEHMILLER. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Now, if there are any gentlemen present who have not been mentioned, will you please state your names? We have New York, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis, Philadelphia and Detroit.

Mr. ANDREAE. Is no one here from New Jersey, that is a very active place?

Mr. RONEY. I do not know whether I can subscribe my name and organization to this.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is simply a question of whether you will serve on this work, and you can take up the organization later.

Mr. RONEY. I would not hand my name in to serve on the committee.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Why?

Mr. RONEY. I have not been authorized to do so.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is to appoint you, and then your organization can take exception to it at a later date, and we can change it at a later date, so if you will give us your name and initials.

Mr. RONEY. I have no objection to giving my name, but I should not want my name to appear and have it submitted to our association and then have to withdraw my name.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I want to again say that the motion which is passed gave the appointment of the executive committee to the President, so it is simply a matter of courtesy, of course, to your local organization, to have them add such names as they feel disposed to add, if they take exception to your own.

Mr. RONEY. I am J. A. Roney, of Newark. I represent the entire State of New Jersey.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Then you have a mighty good organization.

Mr. RONEY. I thank you.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Don't you want one of the trade papers in our organization?

Mr. ANDREAE. Certainly.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I suggest the name of Mr. Herbert G. Rich.

(This motion was duly seconded and carried.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We want to select a Vice-President from this committee, and a Secretary and Treasurer. I would like to say that in my opinion the Secretary and Treasurer should be in Chicago, and most of the work will go to the Secretary of an organization of this character, and he must be in close touch with Mr. Andreae.

A VOICE. Let Mr. Andreae suggest the names, he is best able to do that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It will be better to have people who will work with him congenially.

A VOICE. Would it be proper to elect a Vice-President first?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We have got on this feet foremost, this same hurley burley. This must be done according to Hoyle's Rules.

Mr. COOPER LYON. Weber & Fields make those.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. I propose Mr. Cooper Lyon as Secretary.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Cooper Lyon of Chicago as Secretary and Treasurer.

(The motion was carried unanimously.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Will you select the meeting day at your convenience?

Mr. ANDREAE. Yes, as soon as we can get it.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. As a nomination for Vice-President I present the name of Mr. Savage.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, I would like you to withdraw any nomination for Vice-President at the present time. The Vice-Presidents of an organization of this character should be geographically located, and I think the executive committee should have an opportunity to decide just how they want to do this work, and besides that, I think Mr. Andreae will have a lot of work to do, and maybe, will want people we could not select today. There are very few of us here, and I think we ought to get the feeling of our own local organization as to who they want to represent them as Vice-Presidents of this organization, and as permanent officials to be selected. Say within thirty days, or as near to it as Mr. Andreae can, he will call a meeting of this executive board and then we can select the Vice-Presidents from the lists that the local organizations will submit. We want, if possible, to eliminate anything that refers to sentiment, and get down to actual labor. It is unfair to think that Mr. Andreae is going to do all this work for you, he won't, he cannot, it is impossible. You have to do your own work, and only men that will work should be considered for any of these offices. It is no empty honor to have, and it will cost money, and more, work. A motion to adjourn is now in order. We will have a little meeting of our own, that is, the Manufacturers' & Dealers' and Brewers' Supplies; we will have a further meeting right now. Mr. Andreae, we have not expressed our thanks to you for your courtesy, but I think I am expressing the views of everybody in the industry of their desire to work as a unit, instead of just a mere mob, and that is what we have been for twenty-five years—a mob.

Mr. ANDREAE. Much obliged to you, Mr. Chairman.

LIST OF COMMITTEES.

The REPORTER. About five or six.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In addition, Mr. Taber from Buffalo and myself.

Mr. ANDREAE. Also the Manufacturers' Association of Brewers' Equipment & Supplies is represented.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. A motion was made by Mr. Lilienthal a few moments ago and it was not seconded.

Now, we have had many organizations in the past, and they have been scattered all over the country. They have usually been formed upon a wave of enthusiasm, and then left to shift for themselves, without direction or encouragement.

I know that there are some people in the ranks from which I come, among the brewers, who say: "What was the use of these manufacturers' and dealers' clubs and societies that were formed five or six years ago? They were a total failure." I say: "Yes, possibly they were, but I do not think that they were a total failure. I think they did some very good work," and I say this, that if they were a failure, they were a failure for the simple reason that there was no one that could become the centre out of which influence could radiate into all parts of the country, where the membership is distributed, and intimate to every membership that which they were required to do.

Now, I would like to give you as briefly as I can, in two examples, what organization really means. I was discussing quite recently with the head of a certain organization in this country that counts its members by the million, this question of organization. I had outlined to him the plan that I have in view with regard to an organization that shall be general. In the course of our conversation I asked this gentleman, "Is it not a fact that in spite of the number of your members, three millions"—I do not wish to use any names—"in spite of the number of your members, and in spite of their enthusiastic allegiance to the cause for which your organization stands, which is the cause of personal liberty, "is it not a fact that not ten per cent of those members possess sufficient knowledge of the attitude of candidates for election towards that cause to enable them to vote for the right man in their own localities, when election time comes; and is not the reason for that this fact, that you yourselves have not the means and methods to acquire that knowledge at headquarters, and even if you did possess it, that you lack the means and the methods of communicating it to your millions of individual members throughout the country, and thus enabling them to vote for the man who favors your cause, and against the man whose record shows that he does not favor it?"

Do you know what this man answered me? He said, "Mr. Andreae, you are right in all but your estimate of the number of membership who possess sufficient knowledge of the records of candidates for election to enable them to vote for the right man at the polls. Unfortunately," he said, "that is not ten per cent, it is scarcely five per cent."

I then inquired whether with the means and methods of organization, such as I had outlined to him, that percentage could not be raised to, say, fifty per cent. He answered with great emphasis, he brought his fist down on the table, and he said, "Mr. Andreae, with the methods that you suggest. I will guarantee one hundred per cent."

Now, gentlemen, I know that he is right, and there you have the pith and marrow of the work which really confronts our general bodies to-day; but, forming an organization strong in numbers, like for instance, this organization could be enthusiastic in purpose, powerful in sentiment, is one thing; but making that organization effective in the only place where it can really prove effective, namely at the polls, is quite another thing.

Now, I want to illustrate that point to you by giving you another concrete experience. I did not evolve this out of my inner consciousness—those are things I have learned by bitter experience, by being knocked around in trying to bring about certain results with inadequate means: but five or six years ago, when our Personal Liberty League was started in Ohio, during the first campaign I used to go out and address meetings of the Personal Liberty League and other kindred associations throughout the state. On those occasions I naturally dilated upon the justice and merits of our cause, and discoursed upon the beautiful principles of personal liberty and so forth. On one occasion when I has sat down, feeling fairly well satisfied with my little performance, a man in the audience got up. He said: "Say, what is the use of shouting this personal liberty stuff to us. We know all about that or we should not be here, but tell us whom we vote for, and we will do the rest." Well, you can imagine it made me feel a little bit uncomfortable, and it set me thinking; and when the meeting was over—I think this incident was in Cleveland—I sought out this man, and I said to him: "Do you seriously expect me to be better informed regarding the candidates for election, and their record and their character, and their leanings in their own particular district than you are yourself" He said, "You bet I do." He said, "How should I know who is right and who ain't. They all talk right to us when they want our votes and, when they are elected, they go back on us. We will vote for the right man quick enough if you will find out and tell us who he is." Further he said, "If you cannot do that, this organization might just as well shut up shop, for it will never amount to more than a gab-fest." (Laughter.)

Well, now, gentlemen, I want to tell you that those were some home truths, but within a month of that little incident, and the wholesome lesson it brought home to me, the most important department of our League was inaugurated; that is the department that is in charge of the investigation of the local political conditions throughout the State, with their possibilites of party alignment, and the searching examination into the record, the character and the public and private affiliations and associations of every candidate for office. Now, I want to tell you that it is due entirely to the work of that department, the practical work, and to the implicit confidence of the rank and file of our organization in Ohio in the unerring accuracy of that work, that Ohio to-day has a legislature, which, in spite of the fact that a large number of the counties of the State are still dry under the County Option Law, is almost as overwhelmingly liberal as five years ago and it was overwhelmingly dry.

Now, gentlemen, I wanted to give you those two incidents to show you the point I want to make, when I speak of an organization along really practical lines, lines that will be effective, where effectiveness really counts, and that is when the votes count. I say that the day has gone by, when the question that is before the people is merely the question of the right of the brewer, the distiller and the wine grower, to sell his product to the thirty or forty odd millions of his fellow citizens who want to buy it. That contention which the other side has always made is like most things connected with that movement, a mere hypocritical subterfuge, which is designed to deceive the mult tude. The question on the contrary is whether the thirty or forty million citizens of this country whom me serve with our product, shall have the right to the opportun'ty of buying that product. That is the question today, and it is a good thing that it is. Now, I say that if the consumers of our product are willing to forego the right to enjoy it, it is for them to say so. If they are not willing to forego that right, the time has come for them to make that fact known in the only way on which that knowledge can really carry we ght in the proper quarters, and that is by concerted opposition to the organization of those who, by every insidious means in their power, by trickery and treachery and suspicion and deliberate falsification have so worked upon the minds of the people's representatives as to engender in those minds the belief that they are the people, and that therefore the people are asking for our elimination.

Now, gentlemen, that is the whole point. We should organize in such a way that the hundreds of thousands who will follow your lead will follow it intelligently and do not be satisfied with merely having an organization with a president, a vice-president, a secretary and a treasurer, and a certain exchequer, and then sitting down and saying what a fine organization we have. If you had five hundred thousand members, it would not amount to a row of pins unless the organization contains one feature, and that is the feature that will make it a power at the polls. There are not five per cent of the men interested in our question who know how to vote at the polls. I venture to say gentlemen that that five per cent applies to this assembly as well as it does to any other assembly. I know that in the State of Ohio, the saloon keepers have voted to a man for a candidate for Governor who was a pronounced prohibitionist. You know that, don't you? (Cries of "Yes.")

No doubt whatever about it, they did not do it purposely, but they did it, because they had not the knowledge that is required to make their vote effective at the right place, and that is at the polls.

Now, gentlemen, the organization that we suggest is an organization, either of individual firms or of existing manufacturers' associations, taking either associations or members, and then let in any feature that you think desirable into your organization. What I ask, is this—and it may seem immodest coming from me myself, in asking it—but I ask that the organization, as far as the purposes I have outlined are concerned, shall accept my leadership. I do not want to have any office in the association. I merely ask you to accept my leadership in matters that concern the polls, and the question that is practically the one absorbing question for all of us, and that is the fight against the fanatical prohibition movement, and all that enters into that fight. When the word goes out from our headquarters that such and such is required to be done in this locality or that locality, national or local, that you accept that word as final, and believe that it is the one right thing to do, and do it blindly. There is nothing in my scheme that needs shun exposure in the full light of day. We all know that all of our various industries, whether they are railroads, franchise holders, or others, have been compelled, more or less, by a vicious system and corrupt system, to do all kinds of things which in themselves were either illegal or immoral; we know this; I do not suppose there is any industry or financial circle in this country that has not been drawn into that vortex. The day has gone by for that kind of thing; the day should have never existed. I want to say to you gentlemen I believe that a just cause (and I know that our cause is just, or we would not have forty million customers) can only win by just means, and that no cause that requires improper means to win has a right to win at all.

That is the principle I go by, and I believe that we carry on our organization along sensible, rational and practical lines, it can accomplish that which we have failed to accomplish in the past; for what has been our great trouble? I am now speaking of the point of view of the body I represent, and that is the people who make beer and other drinks in this country. What has been the main source of trouble? I must be perfectly frank; I say that it has been the unfortunate policy that has been pursued in the past, individually and collectively, of feeding our enemies and starving our friends. (Cries of "That is right.") I want to tell you gentlemen, ask any man engaged in political affairs—and how many are there in this country who are not directly or indirectly so engaged—which pays best, to be the enemy of the brewer or be his friend? In nine cases out of ten, if the man is honest, his answer will be that it is most expedient to pose as the brewer's enemy, because to be his enemy means to be coaxed and wheedled by the brewer and patted on the back by the prohibitionist; whilst to be his friend, means only too frequently to be neglected, and treated with indifference by the brewer and hounded and persecuted by the prohibitionist. (Cries of "That is right.")

Now, I am criticizing myself and my colleagues, because the brewer will rather spend his time and his efforts in the vain endeavor to win over his thousand of enemies than to devote that time and those efforts towards organizing and protecting his millions of friends; that is true; you must know it.

Now, where can you expect our friends to stand when they feel that in time of war, we rush to them to come to our aid, just beckoning you know, and in the interim, we leave them to shift for themselves, on the assumption that—well, they do not need any support or encouragement; they are our friends anyway, and they are just handy when we call for them—instead of helping them to maintain the army that they place in the field at our disposal at a moment's notice; instead of helping them to maintain that army and increase its efficiency.

Gentlemen, I say that if we were to act sensibly in that matter, this army is capable of not only being doubled and trebled and quadrupled in numbers, but with adequate means and methods, it can be so organized that its efficiency as an active force at the polls, working under systematic directions from one headquarters, would be increased ten fold.

Now, I do not want to go further into details. There are so many angles to this question of organization, that I could talk till midnight on the subject, but the whole point in the question is this: One central headquarters and one central head is required, in order to make every organization an effective one; and, therefore, gentlemen, I conclude by repeating—if you will organize as I ask you to organize with the understanding—well, I will put it as bluntly as I can, that you will accept me as leader of your organization. [Applause.]

Mr. VILTER. Now, gentlemen, Mr. Andreae has given us a real idea of what he really wants done; but just how this will be done is the next question. Now, this organization is, and these few people that are here are such a small representation of our United States organization, that this should go further, and I would like to ask Mr. Andreae as to whether he means that I shall go back to Wisconsin, and the other man to Illinois, and other elsewhere, and then try to make an organization there to confer with Mr. Andreae's headquarters, or that we, as a body shall try to induce people to join us?

Mr. ANDREAE. The latter, Mr. Vilter. Do not let us go and refer these matters back. We are here now, and I want to tell you gentlemen that I think this is a very fine meeting in numbers, and I know it is in quality, and I want you gentlemen not to leave this room until you have organized your National Association, with its president, vice-president, and all necessary paraphernalia to an organization. Then the thing is an accomplished fact. We are going to help you as far as we are able. We believe that every man who is interested in this question as a business proposition, not otherwise, should come into this organization.

There is just one little thing which I omitted in my little talk—it not a little thing, it is rather an important thing, and I will have to go a little further back in order to start from the point that will make you understand what I mean. You know that on former occasions, when the question of contributions from those interested indirectly in the maintenance of the brewing industry and other industries of the country was concerned, the individual brewer or his association, would go to these individuals, and would say, "Well, now, we feel that you ought to pay up so much money towards the fund for the purpose of continuing our fight." Well, now, when we organized, or rather discussed organization on a large scale last February, in the Brewers' Organization, the question came up, "Well, how about the allied industries and trades; what are we going to get from them?" Now, we are talking very frankly. Now, gentlemen, one of the most unpleasant things that I can imagine is the necessity that is imposed upon a man in business, like we are, to go and collect money from those to whom he gives his patronage. I know what occurs, because I have been on both sides of the fence. I have been in the malt business and I know something of what occurs. Say in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania some little local hamlet has a local option election. Now, who cares about that local option election, except the surrounding territory and perhaps the brewer who is interested? But Mr. Maltster, or Mr. Machine Manufacturer, receives a little letter from the brewer who patronizes him, say the man up in Chicago, or up in St. Paul: "We have a local option election in Kalamazoo"—or wherever the hamlet is—"at such a date, and I want you to contribute $50.00 towards that." Meanwhile the maltster and machine men are getting the same request from all sides, and they always give to their customers like good fellows, but the times comes when the limit is reached as to what can be done; and consequently, gentlemen, I think all of you will agree with me that what hurts most is the feeling that nine-tenths of that money is wasted, and so it is. It is no business of an outside concern, whether it is a brewer or maltster or machine man—it is no business of theirs to have to contribute towards a local option election in some other State that is a thousand miles away; their money can be very much better spent. Now, as I say, that is merely an indication of how unpleasant that kind of thing is. I do not think that the brewer thinks very much about it. He simply asks the men who supplies him: "You just contribute, if you don't I will patronize some one else." That is ugly; there is no morals to it, and there is nothing that is respectable about it; I want to get rid of that. Gentlemen, organize and make your own assessment among yourselves. In other words, you say everybody in this association is to be considered interested financially, this man to such an extent, that man to such an extent, in the question. Now, collect that money, and see that it is distributed to one center alone; in other words, that none of it goes astray, and is not spent in some of those silly little elections where a lot of saloon keepers are put out at so much per day to do election work, which amounts to nothing in nine cases out of ten whereas, while all that money is being spent in that direction, we are losing our lives in Washington.

What does it matter to me whether a little locality goes dry; what does it matter to me, gentlemen, if the State of Illinois where my business is goes wet, if at Washington they declare for Nation Wide Prohibition? I have spent all my money in Illinois, but the United States itself is my chief business. The one thing that we have got to do is to protect our business where it may be destroyed for good and all, and that is in Washington.

Now, that is the point I forgot, Mr. Chairman—the question of the finances. We want to get rid of this pulling from all interest of the manufacture. You should protect yourselves against that by making this organization work in conjunction with the general organization; not only in the way of votes at polls, but in the way in which the finances are to be raised.

You can appoint a committee consisting of men from each industry that is in this organization, who can sit down and figure out some fair basis upon which everybody should be assessed, and then, of course, it is the individual's business to say whether he will be assessed or not. You cannot take the money out of his pocket; it has to be voluntary, but it seems to me that, coming from the body to which he belongs, he will give very much more gracefully, than it would if the Brewers' Organization were to say: "Well, now, we want to assess those with whom we are dealing, so much and so much, towards the general fund for the protection of our business."

I think it is a very important feature, not only because it will relieve you of unpleasantness, but because it will save a vast amount of money, which today is foolishly spent. If I had only fifty per cent of the money that is wasted in this country in fighting our cause, for the purposes of a general organization, gentlemen, I would almost come to the point of having enough to carry on a National Organization. (Applause.)

Mr. VILTER. As I understand it, Mr. Andreae, you want a National Organization. Now, we have in the various states—I know I belong to five or six different state organizations of the allied trades—should those state organizations, with their memberships come into the National Organization, and then have possibly a vice-president in the National Organization, who shall be the president of the local organization, is that your idea?

Mr. ANDREAE. You would have rather too many vice-presidents, Mr. Chairman, if you did that, but allow me to explain it along the line of other organizations generally. Take the Brewers' Organization. We have our National Association—the United States Brewers' Association; we have in every state our local State Association; then we have in the cities local associations, and in some cases there are individuals who will not belong to the State Associations, but they will to the National; there are some who will not belong to the National, but they will to the State Association, in other words, do not get rid of your existing associations, but let every man who is a member of every State or local association, join the National Association and let these associations as a body, be a member of the National Association. You take the retailers; they have in every State, and generally in every city of any size a retailers' association. They have in the State their State association, to which not always all belong; some won't belong to the local, but will belong to the State. The National Association consists of memberships or rather delegates, I should say, from the various State associations. That is just slightly different from our Brewers' Association. Now, I am going—that is part of our scheme—to get the retailers to come in just in the same way, and accept general leadership from one headquarters. Not that I say I am the one man who simply says this is to be done. I want to consult with all of these organizations; I want to have them in constant touch with me, and I want to have their advice, knowledge, experience and counsel, so that I feel that everything that is known at headquarters can be at a moment's notice disseminated all over the country.

Gentlemen, take our organization in Ohio—I do not want to digress, but these matters are of great interest and they are the meat of the whole subject—our organization in Ohio is such that I can go to the telephone here, call up our headquarters at Cincinnati, and say: "Call a stenographer to the 'Phone,' and I dictate to him a statement. I say: 'I want that statement to be in the hands of the members of the Personal Liberty League of Ohio, within twenty-four hours.'" In twenty-four hours that statement will be in the hands of one hundred and fifty thousand people, voters in the State of Ohio, and among those one hundred and fifty thousand voters are several thousands who are good for a large number of votes, besides their own. We have the address of every member and the necessary number of envelopes ready, stamped, in triplicate, and when a statement has gone out, giving instructions with regard to either the candidates, or to the question which is up before them, simply telling them what the Personal Liberty League desires in that particular matter, when that set has gone out, there are thirty girls right there at the table ready to supply the next lot of envelopes, so that there are always three sets of envelopes of one hundred and fifty thousand each, stamped and addressed ready to go out.

Gentlemen, that is organization. It costs money, and it can only be done if you will get rid of big committees and boards, and put the matters in the hands of one person whom you can fire, if he does not make good, and replace by some one else who will make good.

Our trouble is red tape. The Anti-Saloon League has no red tape. There are two men there, each has his own department, and those two men govern. Now, if they had not made good, gentlemen, they would have been removed long ago.

Now, I want to put those men in the position that they will not make good. And I want to tell you that we can go one better. I have seen it in Ohio, and there are men here from Ohio who can tell you that what I am saying is not exaggerated, and there is the difficulty that confronts us in Ohio; the moment you succeed—I am speaking now of your own industry—our friends are liable

Whereupon, at 12:00 o'clock Noon, the meeting terminated.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, I have been asked to call this meeting to order, and the first business that will be before you is the election of a Temporary Chairman. Now, if some gentleman here will kindly suggest a name.

A VOICE. Mr. Theo. O. Vilter.

The nomination was duly seconded.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, is there any other nomination?

A VOICE. I move the nomination be closed.

The motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.

Mr. ANDREAE. Now, gentlemen, the nomination of Mr. Vilter is before you.

The nomination was unanimously carried.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, Mr. Vilter.

(Here Mr. Vilter took the Chair.)

Mr. VILTER. Gentlemen, I thank you for the vote you have given, but I think there are bigger men here than I am, to whom you should have given your vote.

A VOICE. I do not think there are.

Mr. VILTER. What is the order of business? I do not know much about it. Do you Mr. Andreae?

Mr. ANDREAE. Here is something written down. I do not know whether there is any need for a secretary of the meeting, but it might be well to have one.

Mr. VILTER. You have a stenographer.

Mr. ANDREAE. That will be good enough then. Perhaps I had better explain the purpose of the meeting.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Andreae will explain the situation to you gentlemen.

Mr. ANDREAE. Gentlemen, the purpose for which this meeting was called, is, as you all know, to organize; and I would like, just as briefly as I can, to give you an outline of the factors that have brought about the necessity for calling you together for the purpose of forming an organization of a general character.

You know that we are facing a condition, nationally, which is absolutely unprecedented. There have been in our ranks men who have foreseen that the day would come when we would be face to face in Washington with the question of Nation Wide Prohibition. A measure has passed Congress, which is in its effect and is so intended to be in its effect, a prohibition of the interstate shipment of liquor. That Bill which is now a law, the Webb Law, passed Congress by a two-thirds majority, in fact it was almost unanimous; and that in spite of the President's veto and in spite of the fact that all of the attorneys connected with the Government declared the measure was an unconstitutional one. Now, there is no one who believes, that is, no one who knows the conditions, who believes that that measure was passed because two-thirds of the members of Congress considered it was a just measure, or believed the measure was a constitutional one. It was passed simply because two-thirds of the members of Congress had such a terror of the power of the Anti-Saloon League, that they passed the measure, whether it was a good one, a bad one, or an unjust one.

Now, when you face a situation of that kind, when more than two-thirds of the peoples' representatives of the National Legislative body, and therefore your representatives, are ready to pass notoriously unconstitutional measures, not from conviction or belief in the justice of the measures, but simply through fear of the power of your organized enemies, and from utter mistrust of your ability to match their political power in the county, you surely must understand that we are face to face with total destruction, unless we arouse ourselves from our slumber and do something.

to one, but I do not think I have the right to speak for them. Others here belong to other organizations and are in the same position. I think if I understand and appreciate Mr. Andreae's ideas aright, we might just as well accept his leadership right now, and have the committee appointed for the purpose of devising means of effecting an organization, in accordance with the ideas as expressed—and maybe, in some cases, not expressed by Mr. Andreae—and this committee should, at the same time, act as a board of nominators, and submit to us before we leave Atlantic City, the names of officers, for which this temporary organization is ready to cast their votes. These officers, it may be understood, can later on, after the organization has been perfected, make room for those that are of more importance, and maybe better fitted; but I understand Mr. Andreae wants us to have an organization perfected before we leave Atlantic City, and the objection to the plan of the gentleman that spoke before me, is that it procrastinates a little.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We are not procrastinating at all, the meeting can take place before noon.

Mr. PORGES. In fact, as I say, I am more inclined to follow the leadership of Mr. Andreae.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not believe you understood Mr. Andreae very well, I am sorry to say.

Mr. PORGES. I am perfectly willing to leave it to Mr. Andreae to enlighten us on that subject.

Mr. ANDREAE. It seems to me the simplest thing is to get to business and decide to elect a committee right now.

Mr. SCHOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think there are delegates here representing different organizations, why not let them appoint a committee to suggest names for president, and go right ahead and elect him, then we could go ahead with the balance of the organization, and get that officered?

Mr. ANDREAE. How would it be gentlemen if those present, who represent State organizations or local organizations, would report and give their names.

Mr. SCHOTT. We have three representatives from the Manufacturers' and Dealers' Club of Cincinnati, with power to act.

Mr. COOPER LYON. We have three from Chicago.

Mr. SAVAGE. We have the President here from the New York Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association.

Mr. HORIX. I am from Cleveland and represent the Manufacturers' and Dealers' League.

Mr. WILLEM. I represent the Manufacturers' & Dealers' Club of Milwaukee.

A VOICE. Mr. S. V. Steiner, the Vice-President of the Personal Liberty League of New York, is not here just now, but is in the city.

Mr. ANDREAE. You represent him?

A VOICE. I probably would try very hard.

Mr. ZOLLER. Mr. Andreae proposed this National Association. I want to know, are there any additional taxes to that outside of our organization, and outside of what we have got? For instance, take the National Manufacturers' & Dealers' League, our members pay so much during the year, and they have a man to collect that. I want to know if there will be an additional fee. I understood Mr. Andreae that each member would be taxed additionally for the National League.

Mr. ZOLLER. Outside of our State?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the idea. Now, of course, I do not know how individual State associations handle those matters, or if they handle the matters in this way: That their individual members are assessed, and some are assessed considerably, which is then contributed by your State associations, say, to fights within the State or local fights—that is one side of the matter. We have the same in the Brewers' Association; we have to conduct our State fights and we also have to contribute to our National Association, which is now bound to look after our interests in Washington on a scale that was never known before. I therefore, wish to explain that the question of contributions is the most important of all, but this will fall away—and that point I want to emphasize again, in case I did not make myself properly understood—this will fall away, if you organize as I want you to organize, so that if local brewers, distillers or others come to you and say: "We want you to contribute to our local campaign here and to our local campaign there," I would like this organization to be in a position to say no individual shall contribute individually. Then you will represent yourselves. I am not here to devise the ways and means for you to save money. (Laughter.) On the contrary, I want to see as much of it forthcoming

they go back on us. We will vote for the right man quick enough if you will find out and tell us who he is." Further he said, "If you cannot do that, this organization might just as well shut up shop, for it will never amount to more than a gab-fest." (Laughter.)

Well, now, gentlemen, I want to tell you that those were some home truths, but within a month of that little incident, and the wholesome lesson it brought home to me, the most important department of our League was inaugurated; that is the department that is in charge of the investigation of the local political conditions throughout the State, with their possibilites of party alignment, and the searching examination into the record, the character and the public and private affiliations and associations of every candidate for office. Now, I want to tell you that it is due entirely to the work of that department, the practical work, and to the implicit confidence of the rank and file of our organization in Ohio in the unerring accuracy of that work, that Ohio to-day has a legislature, which, in spite of the fact that a large number of the counties of the State are still dry under the County Option Law, is almost as overwhelmingly liberal as five years ago and it was overwhelmingly dry.

What I ask, is this—and it may seem immodest coming from me myself, in asking it—but I ask that the organization, as far as the purposes I have outlined are concerned, shall accept my leadership. I do not want to have any office in the association. I merely ask you to accept my leadership in matters that concern the polls, and the question that is practically the one absorbing question for all of us, and that is the fight against the fanatical prohibition movement, and all that enters into that fight. When the word goes out from our headquarters that such and such is required to be done in this locality or that locality, national or local, that you accept that word as final, and believe that it is the one right thing to do, and do it blindly. There is nothing in my scheme that needs shun exposure in the full light of day. We all know that all of our various industries, whether they are railroads, franchise holders, or others, have been compelled, more or less, by a vicious system and corrupt system, to do all kinds of things which in themselves were either illegal or immoral; we know this; I do not suppose there is any industry or financial circle in this country that has not been drawn into that vortex. The day has gone by for that kind of thing; the day should have never existed. I want to say to you gentlemen I believe that a just cause (and I know that our cause is just, or we would not have forty million customers) can only win by just means, and that no cause that requires improper means to win has a right to win at all.

That is the principle I go by, and I believe that we carry on our organization along sensible, rational and practical lines, it can accomplish that which we have failed to accomplish in the past; for what has been our great trouble? I am now speaking of the point of view of the body I represent, and that is the people who make beer and other drinks in this country. What has been the main source of trouble? I must be perfectly frank; I say that it has been the unfortunate policy that has been pursued in the past, individually and collectively, of feeding our enemies and starving our friends. (Cries of "That is right.") I want to tell you gentlemen, ask any man engaged in political affairs—and how many are there in this country who are not directly or indirectly so engaged—which pays best, to be the enemy of the brewer or be his friend? In nine cases out of ten, if the man is honest, his answer will be that it is most expedient to pose as the brewer's enemy, because to be his enemy means to be coaxed and wheedled by the brewer and patted on the back by the prohibitionist; whilst to be his friend, means only too frequently to be neglected, and treated with indifference by the brewer and hounded and persecuted by the prohibitionist. (Cries of "That is right.")

Now, I am criticizing myself and my colleagues, because the brewer will rather spend his time and his efforts in the vain endeavor to win over his thousand of enemies than to devote that time and those efforts towards organizing and protecting his millions of friends; that is true; you must know it.

Now, where can you expect our friends to stand when they feel that in time of war, we rush to them to come to our aid, just beckoning you know, and in the interim, we leave them to shift for themselves, on the assumption that—well, they do not need any support or encouragement; they are our friends anyway, and they are just handy when we call for them—instead of helping them to maintain the army that they place in the field at our disposal at a moment's notice; instead of helping them to maintain that army and increase its efficiency.

Gentlemen, I say that if we were to act sensibly in that matter, this army is capable of not only being doubled and trebled and quadrupled in numbers, but with adequate means and methods, it can be so organized that its efficiency as an active force at the polls, working under systematic directions from one headquarters, would be increased ten fold.

Now, I do not want to go further into details. There are so many angles to this question of organization, that I could talk till midnight on the subject, but the whole point in the question is this: One central headquarters and one central head is required, in order to make every organization an effective one; and, therefore, gentlemen, I conclude by repeating—if you will organize as I ask you to organize with the understanding—well, I will put it as bluntly as I can, that you will accept me as leader of your organization. [Applause.]

Mr. VILTER. Now, gentlemen, Mr. Andreae has given us a real idea of what he really wants done; but just how this will be done is the next question. Now, this organization is, and these few people that are here are such a small representation of our United States organization, that this should go further, and I would like to ask Mr. Andreae as to whether he means that I shall go back to Wisconsin, and the other man to Illinois, and other elsewhere, and then try to make an organization there to confer with Mr. Andreae's headquarters, or that we, as a body shall try to induce people to join us?

Mr. ANDREAE. The latter, Mr. Vilter. Do not let us go and refer these matters back. We are here now, and I want to tell you gentlemen that I think this is a very fine meeting in numbers, and I know it is in quality, and I want you gentlemen not to leave this room until you have organized your National Association, with its president, vice-president, and all necessary paraphernalia to an organization. Then the thing is an accomplished fact. We are going to help you as far as we are able. We believe that every man who is interested in this question as a business proposition, not otherwise, should come in this organization.

There is just one little thing which I omitted in my little talk—it not a little thing, it is rather an important thing, and I will have to go a little further back in order to start from the point that will make you understand what I mean. You know that on former occasions, when the question of contributions from those interested indirectly in the maintenance of the brewing industry and other industries of the country was concerned, the individual brewer or his association, would go to these individuals, and would say, "Well, now, we feel that you ought to pay up so much money towards the fund for the purpose of continuing our fight." Well, now, when we organized, or rather discussed organization on a large scale last February, in the Brewers' Organization, the question came up, "Well, how about the allied industries and trades; what are we going to get from them?" Now, we are talking very frankly. Now, gentlemen, one of the most unpleasant things that I can imagine is the necessity that is imposed upon a man in business, like we are, to go and collect money from those to whom he gives his patronage. I know what occurs, because I have been on both sides of the fence. I have been in the malt business and I know something of what occurs. Say in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania some little local hamlet has a local option election. Now, who cares about that local option election, except the surrounding territory and perhaps the brewer who is interested? But Mr. Maltster, or Mr. Machine Manufacturer, receives a little letter from the brewer who patronizes him, say the man up in Chicago, or up in St. Paul: "We have a local option election in Kalamazoo"—or wherever the hamlet is—"at such a date, and I want you to contribute $50.00 towards that." Meanwhile the maltster and machine men are getting the same request from all sides, and they always give to their customers like good fellows, but the times comes when the limit is reached as to what can be done; and consequently, gentlemen I think all of you will agree with me that what hurts most is the feeling that nine-tenths of that money is wasted, and so it is. It is no business of an outside concern, whether it is a brewer or maltster or machine man—it is no business of theirs to have to contribute towards a local option election in some other State that is a thousand miles away; their money can be very much better spent. Now, as I say, that is merely an indication of how unpleasant that kind of thing is. I do not think that the brewer thinks very much about it. He simply asks the men who supplies him: "You just contribute, if you don't I will patronize some one else." That is ugly; there is no morals to it, and there is nothing that is respectable about it; I want to get rid of that. Gentlemen, organize and make your own assessment among yourselves. In other words, you say everybody in this association is to be considered interested financially, this man to such an extent, that man to such an extent, in the question. Now, collect that money and see that it is distributed to one center alone; in other words, that none of it goes astray, and is not spent in some of those silly little elections where a lot of saloon keepers are put out at so much per day to do election work, which amounts to nothing in nine cases out of ten whereas, while all that money is being spent in that direction, we are losing our lives in Washington.

What does it matter to me whether a little locality goes dry; what does it matter to me, gentlemen, if the State of Illinois where my business is goes wet, if at Washington they declare for Nation Wide Prohibition? I have spent all my money in Illinois, but the United States itself is my chief business. The one thing that we have got to do is to protect our business where it may be destroyed for good and all, and that is in Washington.

Now, that is the point I forgot, Mr. Chairman—the question of the finances. We want to get rid of this pulling from all interest of the manufacture. You should protect yourselves against that by making this organization work in conjunction with the general organization; not only in the way of votes at polls, but in the way in which the finances are to be raised.

You can appoint a committee consisting of men from each industry that is in this organization, who can sit down and figure out some fair basis upon which everybody should be assessed, and then, of course, it is the individual's business to say whether he will be assessed or not. You cannot take the money out of his pocket; it has to be voluntary, but it seems to me that, coming from the body to which he belongs, he will give very much more gracefully, than it would if the Brewers' Organization were to say: "Well, now, we want to assess those with whom we are dealing, so much and so much, towards the general fund for the protection of our business."

I think it is a very important feature, not only because it will relieve you of unpleasantness, but because it will save a vast amount of money, which today is foolishly spent. If I had only fifty per cent of the money that is wasted in this country in fighting our cause, for the purposes of a general organization, gentlemen, I would almost come to the point of having enough to carry on a National Organization. (Applause.)

Mr. VILTER. As I understand it, Mr. Andreae, you want a National Organization. Now, we have in the various states—I know I belong to five or six different state organizations of the allied trades—should those state organizations, with their memberships come into the National Organization, and then have possibly a vice-president in the National Organization, who shall be the president of the local organization, is that your idea?

Mr. ANDREAE. You would have rather too many vice-presidents, Mr. Chairman, if you did that, but allow me to explain it along the line of other organizations generally. Take the Brewers' Organization. We have our National Association—the United States Brewers' Association; we have in every state our local State Association; then we have in the cities local associations, and in some cases there are individuals who will not belong to the State Associations, but they will to the National; there are some who will not belong to the National, but they will to the State Association, in other words, do not get rid of your existing associations, but let every man who is a member of every State or local association, join the National Association and let these associations as a body, be a member of the National Association. You take the retailers; they have in every State, and generally in every city of any size a retailers' association. They have in the State their State association, to which not always all belong; some won't belong to the local, but will belong to the State. The National Association consists of memberships or rather delegates, I should say, from the various State associations. That is just slightly different from our Brewers' Association. Now, I am going—that is part of our scheme—to get the retailers to come in just in the same way, and accept general leadership from one headquarters. Not that I say I am the one man who simply says this is to be done. I want to consult with all of these organizations; I want to have them in constant touch with me, and I want to have their advice, knowledge, experience and counsel, so that I feel that everything that is known at headquarters can be at a moment's notice disseminated all over the country.

Gentlemen, take our organization in Ohio—I do not want to digress, but these matters are of great interest and they are the meat of the whole subject—our organization in Ohio is such that I can go to the telephone here, call up our headquarters at Cincinnati, and say: "Call a stenographer to the 'Phone,' and I dictate to him a statement. I say: 'I want that statement to be in the hands of the members of the Personal Liberty League of Ohio, within twenty-four hours.'" In twenty-four hours that statement will be in the hands of one hundred and fifty thousand people, voters in the State of Ohio, and among those one hundred and fifty thousand voters are several thousands who are good for a large number of votes, besides their own. We have the address of every member and the necessary number of envelopes ready, stamped, in triplicate, and when a statement has gone out, giving instructions with regard to either the candidates, or to the question which is up before them, simply telling them what the Personal Liberty League desires in that particular matter, when that set has gone out, there are thirty girls right there at the table ready to supply the next lot of envelopes, so that there are always three sets of envelopes of one hundred and fifty thousand each, stamped and addressed ready to go out.

Gentlemen, that is organization. It costs money, and it can only be done if you will get rid of big committees and boards, and put the matters in the hands of one person whom you can fire, if he does not make good, and replace by some one else who will make good.

Our trouble is red tape. The Anti-Saloon League has no red tape. There are two men there, each has his own department, and those two men govern. Now, if they had not made good, gentlemen, they would have been removed long ago.

Now, I want to put those men in the position that they will not make good. And I want to tell you that we can go one better. I have seen it in Ohio, and there are men here from Ohio who can tell you that what I am saying is not exaggerated, and there is the difficulty that confronts us in Ohio; the moment you succeed—I am speaking now of your own industry—our friends are liable to lay down. "It is all over; we have won out; now what is the good of worrying and keeping up an organization?" I want to tell you, that as long as we live and our children and our children's children live, you will have to have an organization and provide a certain amount of money out of the earnings of the businesses connected with our industry, and our industry itself, in order to fight the enemy—the organized enemy of our trade, which is the enemy of anything that the Almighty has placed within the reach of man in the way of joys and pleasures. They think the Almighty has issued a general ban on all these joys and pleasures, simply because there are a few that misuse them.

Mr. SCHOTT. Why not organize along the lines of the labor organizations? You have Mr. Gompers at the head of a labor organization. Put Mr. Andreae in the same position, and you can then organize in the different cities and the different branches and affiliate with the National Organization. I think these labor unions are very successful in the way they handle people. We could handle our voters the same way.

Mr. ANDREAE. I agree with you, Mr. Schott, that you can learn a lot from labor unions; they know what organization is. I should explain, as far as I am concerned, that I wish you would arrange that my name does not get into the limelight. Your organization should be a separate organization entirely, with a separate identity, and separate autonomy; it should govern itself absolutely with this understanding, that it forms a part of our general organization, and submits in matters of general policy, and all the details of that general policy and its carrying out, to the dictates, if I may call them the dictates, of the head of the whole organization. If I were to be connected in an official capacity with your organization it would immediately give it a character which is should not possess. Your organization should be, not only in appearance but in actual fact, a separate entity, and a very strong entity. I don't want you to feel that I, who represent the general interest and also the separate interest of my own, in the way of the brewing interests, should have anything to say to you gentlemen, either individually or as an association, excepting as regards the policy that is pursued at election times, in order to bring out the votes of millions and millions of those who are our friends, who are either asleep or too ignorant to know how to make their vote effective. I wish you would count me out of that proposition altogether, and elect your president, vice-president and secretary and treasurer. When it is agreed among the body generally that they will go into this general organization, then your national organization will be one powerful wing of the general army, of which I am supposed to be at the head, and it will be better for me and for the purposes we have in view than if you were to put me at the head of this organization, because I am really at the head of quite a different organization, and I do not want too many people to know it.

Mr. SCHOTT. Mr. Chairman, that was not my intention. My intention was to elect national officers and a president and then to report to you, and get this information how to carry out the plans from you.

Mr. ANDREAE. That is all right.

Mr. SCHOTT. And you not to be known in the matter at all.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I should like to have a census of the number of organizations that are represented here, and I believe it would be well to have a meeting with the delegates from each organization representing the parent organization at some convenient time in the afternoon, and I should like to make that in the shape of a motion.

Mr. VILTER. You offer the motion?

Mr. SCHOTT. State the motion.

Mr. VILTER. The motion was that one member of each organization should meet. As a matter of fact, we have the Association of Brewers' Equipment and Supplies represented here, and then there might be some State allied people here, and they should get together and talk matters over about this organization, and then, shortly after, have another meeting before we leave this town; that is the idea of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Before we adjourn this morning, I suggest that we have a meeting of the organizations and the others, I mean this particularly, and then before the adjournment is taken at all we can get some definite ideas as to what can be accomplished.

Mr. PORGES. As to the plan suggested by the gentleman, there is only one objectionable feature in it. As I understand him, he wants the representatives of these different organizations to come together and have a preliminary meeting. Well, what organizations are properly represented here? I belong to one, but I do not think I have the right to speak for them. Others here belong to other organizations and are in the same position. I think if I understand and appreciate Mr. Andreae's ideas aright, we might just as well accept his leadership right now, and have the committee appointed for the purpose of devising means of effecting an organization, in accordance with the ideas as expressed—and maybe, in some cases, not expressed by Mr. Andreae—and this committee should, at the same time, act as a board of nominators, and submit to us before we leave Atlantic City, the names of officers, for which this temporary organization is ready to cast their votes. These officers, it may be understood, can later on, after the organization has been perfected, make room for those that are of more importance, and maybe better fitted; but I understand Mr. Andreae wants us to have an organization perfected before we leave Atlantic City, and the objection to the plan of the gentleman that spoke before me, is that it procrastinates a little.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We are not procrastinating at all, the meeting can take place before noon.

Mr. PORGES. In fact, as I say, I am more inclined to follow the leadership of Mr. Andreae.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not believe you understood Mr. Andreae very well, I am sorry to say.

Mr. PORGES. I am perfectly willing to leave it to Mr. Andreae to enlighten us on that subject.

Mr. ANDREAE. It seems to me the simplest thing is to get to business and decide to elect a committee right now.

Mr. SCHOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think there are delegates here representing different organizations, why not let them appoint a committee to suggest names for president, and go right ahead and elect him, then we could go ahead with the balance of the organization, and get that officered?

Mr. ANDREAE. How would it be gentlemen if those present, who represent State organizations or local organizations, would report and give their names.

Mr. SCHOTT. We have three representatives from the Manufacturers' and Dealers' Club of Cincinnati, with power to act.

Mr. COOPER LYON. We have three from Chicago.

Mr. SAVAGE. We have the President here from the New York Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association.

Mr. HORIX. I am from Cleveland and represent the Manufacturers' and Dealers' League.

Mr. WILLEM. I represent the Manufacturers' & Dealers' Club of Milwaukee.

A VOICE. Mr. S. V. Steiner, the Vice-President of the Personal Liberty League of New York, is not here just now, but is in the city.

Mr. ANDREAE. You represent him?

A VOICE. I probably would try very hard.

Mr. ZOLLER. Mr. Andreae proposed this National Association. I want to know, are there any additional taxes to that outside of our organization, and outside of what we have got? For instance, take the National Manufacturers' & Dealers' League, our members pay so much during the year, and they have a man to collect that. I want to know if there will be an additional fee. I understood Mr. Andreae that each member would be taxed additionally for the National League.

Mr. ZOLLER. Outside of our State?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the idea. Now, of course, I do not know how individual State associations handle those matters, or if they handle the matters in this way: That their individual members are assessed, and some are assessed considerably, which is then contributed by your State associations, say, to fights within the State or local fights—that is one side of the matter. We have the same in the Brewers' Association; we have to conduct our State fights and we also have to contribute to our National Association, which is now bound to look after our interests in Washington on a scale that was never known before. I therefore, wish to explain that the question of contributions is the most important of all, but this will fall away—and that point I want to emphasize again, in case I did not make myself properly understood—this will fall away, if you organize as I want you to organize, so that if local brewers, distillers or others come to you and say: "We want you to contribute to our local campaign here and to our local campaign there," I would like this organization to be in a position to say no individual shall contribute individually. Then you will represent yourselves. I am not here to devise the ways and means for you to save money. (Laughter.) On the contrary, I want to see as much of it forthcoming as possible, but what I do want to prevent is the unhappy waste of money that I know is going on to-day.

Therefore if you will organize in such a way that one of your rules will be that an individual firm or a member of this general organization shall only contribute through the National Organization for the purpose for which the National Organization is formed, you will protect yourselves against the individual men who are constantly drawing on you for their local purposes, and at the same time make sure that the money you do contribute—and I hope you will contribute very largely—will be applied effectively and not wasted as in the past.

Mr. ZOLLER. It depends on how the brewers treat us, and we are ready at any time to do that, but I wish to say we have at present in our organization—and I think I should leave that to Mr. Savage, who will explain that—a party that is canvassing in the State of New York; he is going around, and he went out on the 24th of August. Then we have sent money outside to different states, where they asked us for money, so we are not idle in our association. I do not know what the other gentlemen did in the other states. I leave the rest to Mr. Savage.

Mr. ANDREAE. I am well alive to the fact that there is lots of money being spent.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Chairman, in our Association in New York, we have worked in our own state since we were organized, and we have contributed considerably to many other states, for instance in the South and West, and Down East to the amount of several thousand dollars, besides doing our own work in New York State. We have, in our organization, only a paid Secretary. This Secretary is taking care of the work at the main office but, ranging from thirty to ninety days each year, we send him out through the different counties. Our Secretary at the present time is working up at Syracuse and Rochester, and he will stay up there until after election day. I sent him out on the 24th of August. That is the work that we have been doing, and I might say to some of the gentlemen here, that some years ago, we had a National Organization, which we contributed to considerably, but, that, as you all know, was a failure.

Now, I am in favor of a National Organzation, such as Mr. Andreae has outlined, and I think it would work, and it can be done and really, it is the only way to do things. We have tried to do in a small way, in our own State, the same thing that Mr. Andreae has put before us. Of course, our people will be ready and willing to do whatever they can, you may be sure, to help the cause along.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. May I ask the Secretary the number of organizations which have responded?

The REPORTER. About five or six.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In addition, Mr. Taber from Buffalo and myself.

Mr. ANDREAE. Also the Manufacturers' Association of Brewers' Equipment and Supplies is represented.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. A motion was made by Mr. Lilienthal a few moments ago and it was not seconded.

A VOICE. It was seconded.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. I would like to move this: That Mr. Lilienthal withdraw his motion, and that the Vice-President of the first Manufacturers & Dealers' Association that was ever organized in Chicago be elected as our first President, and that is Mr. Charles J. Lilienthal, probably the best posted man in his line. I think it would expedite matter very much if Mr. Lilienthal would withdraw his motion, and accept the nomination as President.

VOICES. Seconded.

Mr. VILTER. Gentlemen, it has been moved and seconded that Mr. Lilienthal act as President of this new organization.

The resolution was unanmously carried.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Lilienthal, will you take the Chair?

(Here Mr. Charles J. Lilienthal took the Chair.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, I want to thank you for this honor, and I sincerely trust that we shall be able to organize anyway, if we do nothing else. Are there any suggestions regarding the name of the organization? I should like to say in advance to you, that the propostion as I understand it is, that this organization and the State Organizations are to go under the leadership of Mr. Andreae.

A VOICE. And whoever is elected as the successor to Mr. Andreae—if there ever is a successor—to organize all the forces which have one object in view. Am I right?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is our proposition, and that is what we are here now to organize, by states, or rather by cities—in our case I think it would be better nationally.

If anybody has a name to suggest regarding the organization proper, I would like to have it.

A VOICE. I think the natural name would be "The United States Manufacturers' & Dealers' League."

Mr. ANDREAE. The name is very important.

Mr. COOPER LYON. I suggest: "The National League of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. LILIENTHAL. "The National League of Commerce & Labor," that sound something like a United States Government Department.

A VOICE. That name seems very appropriate to my mind and I second it.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It has been moved that the organization be named, "The National Association of Commerce & Labor." A suggestion by Mr. Cooper Lyon of Chicago.

Mr. SCHOEMAKER. It would seem that that would be conflicting names to some extent with the Department of Commerce & Labor. It is true that we are all laborers, I am sure of that, but I think that it ought to be more clear cut and less meaningless than that would imply.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. What suggestion do you make?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I have not any suggestion, I would rather hear some other suggestions before it was adopted immediately, that is all. It might be all right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Well, the only suggestion that has been made is "The National Association of Commerce & Labor."

Mr. COOPER LYON. I would leave out, "Manufacturers." The name "Manufacturers" would not oftentimes be properly accepted by those whose votes we want, and I think we should eliminate that name, absolutely.

Mr. ANDREAE. I think Mr. Lyon is right for this reason: That there is the possibility of this misconception, as there are employers' associations. We all have them, and one of the objects usually of an employers' association is the protection against the organized actions of unions, or other among the employees. Now, we do not want to create that impression that this organization is an organization for the purposes of the employers only, and if you have the word "Labor," only or "Commerce" only, it would look as though it might be an organization for the purpose of antagonizing the workmen, or protecting the employer against the workmen. Now, there should be no question of one or the other in an organization of this kind, and to my mind that title is an excellent one.

A VOICE. I move that we close on that title.

Mr. COOPER LYON. May I make this suggestion as an afterthought—"The Merchants' & Dealers' League." Would not that be better?

Mr. ANDREAE. That is the same thing.

Mr. COOPER LYON. It is synonymous in a measure, that is true. They have the same meaning, but at the same time, they are euphonious.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. "The United States Association of Commer & Labor;" that would confound it with the Government.

Mr. VILTER. "National" is better.

Mr. ANDREAE. Do you think that that is any particular reason? You have got a Secretary and a Department of Commerce & Labor; but this is a "National Association of Commerce & Labor." If it has a little taste of governmental authority, why, so much the better.

Mr. COOPER LYON. Mr. Andreae, I suggest "The National Anti-Prohibitionist Society."

Mr. ANDREAE. That would not do.

Mr. COOPER LYON. If the word "National," or if the words "United States," would not appeal to you, why not call it "The General Association of Commerce & Labor?" It would be general in its work and general in its field.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I am inclined to believe that some word in place of "National," or "United States," would be of advantage, that is my personal opinion.

SEVERAL VOICES. That is right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I think the words, "General Association of Commerce & Labor," would be better.

A VOICE. May I suggest the word "United?"

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That would be better, anything that steers clear of the Government.

A VOICE. Why do we want the word "Labor" attached to it?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. To make the people think we work.

Mr. ANDREAE. We want them all. I do not think you can better that, and I do not see any objection to the word "National."

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It has been regularly moved that "The National Association of Commerce & Labor" be the name designated for this association. If there are any objections, please state them.

(The motion was put to a vote and carried; there being but two dissenting votes.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. An organization committee, or an organization to move at once, was the object of my motion. You took it on yourselves to elect an officer before you elected your organization proper. Now, I would come back to the story, and that is, that we have an organization committee of the various members of the State organizations and such as are not attached to any organization to meet in this room right now, to come to the front here, and form an organization, an actual organization. That is what we have to do first, and then select vice presidents and officers to bring this matter to a conclusion.

A VOICE. Why not put that in the form of a motion?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I did, and the motion was withdrawn, and I got an office in the place of it. This is the first time in my experience that you have elected an officer before having an organization, but now you have a name, I am proud of being President of that organization.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The point I wanted to bring out was that we started talking of an organization, but we did not express our opinion as to whether we want a National one. I am in favor of a big National Organization, but there is no vote upon it. We ought to put that vote.

Mr. FOREMAN. I second that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I would like to change it in this one way; that in voting it is to be considered that those who have left their names on the card; that their names and their affiliations, be accepted as their vote, in case that they vote in favor. Is that satisfactory? We have all been registered here and it will help in making out the final list to use the cards in taking your vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE. What I wanted to bring out is this: That every man who is vitally interested in the point should absolutely come in unanimously, so that if ever there is a question raised why the meeting was got together, it may be said it was because there was an absolute unanimity of opinion that we ought to have such organization.

(The motion was unanimously carried.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Will the gentlemen who represent the various State and local organizations come to the front, and if the other gentlemen will please stay here, the whole matter will be taken care of in ten minutes, and we can go right on forming this organization. I simply want to get the State and local organizations together. Mr. Burger, do not let anybody out. It simply means a suggestion from each for their officers and general committeemen. Gentlemen, will you please come to order here?

(Here Messrs. Willem, Goetz, Lyon, Bartholomay and other geneltmen came to the front.)

Mr LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, you have expressed your opinion on the desirability of going into a National Organization. This is the object of getting the State and local organizations together, so that you can select the man from your organization that you want to meet with Mr. Andreae a certain number of times further to accomplish something. We have had the path blazed for us. That this is going to be the end of doing nothing but simply getting together and taking lunch and all that sort of thing. Now, there is a tangible thing to get around to. You want to get some persons elected, and I will ask Mr. Andreae when he wants to meet.

Mr. SMOOT. Speaking personally, I do not know whether I have the authority of the National Organization, but I feel I bespeak the choice of all the members of our organization in selecting the name of Mr. Savage who would cooperate.

Mr. BURGER. I do not believe that any of us are duly authorized to speak, and yet there is a certain reliance placed upon us, in conjunction with the former association, with which I have been closely attached, and I would suggest a man whose very residence is in close proximity to that of Mr. Andreae, Mr. A. F. Davenport.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is simply from the delegates from Cincinnati. We understand you are not in a position to tie up anybody but yourself.

Mr. BURGER. I see that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We want to get the general officers of this association, and have you gentlemen go back and finish the details of your organization, so that you can act on Mr. Andreae's suggestions, and that someone will meet and work with him to accomplish the results he is after. That is all we want to do; we can not levy the assessment now. It is going to take money to get these right men together.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. Representing the Chicago Manufacturers' & Dealers' Association, I present the name of Mr. Cooper Lyon.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Burger, whom do you represent? That is kind of in order, because I know you will have to do the work, and I am going to suggest Mr. Burger.

A VOICE. I will suggest Mr. Carl F. Burger, of Cincinnati.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is an executive committee being formed to get together.

Mr. BURGER. I suggest the name of Mr. Willem, of Milwaukee.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. These gentlemen are to form the first executive committee to organize their own bodies, and this general organization ought to accomplish something. It will be impossible to keep you here long enough to draft by-laws and go on and do the work that you intend to do under Mr. Andreae's suggestion. This is simply the preliminary organization, to do something and to get to business, and meet with Mr. Andreae in his office within the next ten days, or wherever it may be.

A VOICE. I want to know whether these various gentlemen who are named from their individual cities are to go home and organize their local organizations.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I can not tell you until they have the meeting here as to what they want to do to accomplish this result. I think, however, it is safe to say that a local organization will be built up in every case, that would be my idea anyway, and that the local organization will be the nucleus or foundation for the National Organization.

Mr. VILTER. I suggest Mr. Scarborough, of the Chicago National Association of Equipment & Supplies.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We have no delegate for New York here and I would like to get one, if you can get some more people.

(The sub-committee then compiled a tentative list of names.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We only want one representative from each city. We have all the cities represented that are here. The object of this is to select one name from this list to form an executive committee, the one man to be consulted is a man who will give up his time when necessary to go to Chicago, where I understand Mr. Andreae's headquarters are, who will stay at that place as long as it is necessary for him to accomplish the result that Mr. Andreae started out to do. That is, if he has to stay a week or two, that he will actually be there and do the work. Now, there is no use of putting a lot of names on here just for the fun of having them to form a committee. This committee will be the executive committee of the organization, and will have the work to do to raise the funds among other things, and see that their local organizations are established to produce big results locally, if necessary, when called upon. There is no need of putting in here a lot of names of men you know won't do any work.

A VOICE. I can vouch for the names suggested from New York State, such as Mr. Savage.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. They will have to put in their own time and spend their own money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask of this organization, or of Mr. Andreae, whether he will be visiting us?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. For some time Mr. Andreae will be pretty busy in Chicago trying to get this executive committee together. I do not think Mr. Andreae will have any difficulty to meet us. He will be in his regular office, and we will have his advice and his work.

Mr. ZOLLER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the expense will be paid, to the different gentlement who go to Chicago.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is a detail that we are not prepared to take up at the present time, because we have nothing to take the expense from. Let us stick to business, gentlemen, and let us get our organization completed. A lot of the details will take care of themselves later. We must have an executive committee.

Mr. VILTER. Mr. Lilienthal, I know there is an organization in Minnesota, and it is a live organization, because I get literature from them, but there ought to be a member from the Twin-Cities, and there ought to be one on this executive board. I can not suggest the name now, but I can find out from someone who knows.

Mr. PORGES. I want to make a motion that this committee, so far as has been named, together with the additional names that may be suggested and approved by the President, shall be authorized by this meeting to take any action that they see fit to accomplish the purpose for which we were called together here by Mr. Andreae, and after you gentlemen have voted for that. I want to make another motion that we adjourn.

Mr. ANDREAE. I second that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That will be very good, if you will cut it down, and simply say that the executive committee to be appointed will have full power to act. I think that will cover everything. We all know that, and we are glad of the opportunity of having some central body to work around and with Mr. Andreae and his organization. The motion is regularly made and seconded that the executive committee be appointed from the list of names suggested with full power to act with regard to the National Organization.

Mr. ANDREAE. And that the president have power to add to the number.

(The motion was unanimously carried.)

Mr. PORGES. I now come to my second motion that we adjourn.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I can not put a motion to adjourn, gentlemen, because we are not organized; the executive committee has not been organized. We must organize first. What is the next order of business? We must select the officers therefrom and decide on the work to be done. We have here from New York, Mr. Savage and Mr. Baer. Which one of the two gentlemen will get to work? Do not put in your time throwing bouquets at one another—which one will work on this committee?

A VOICE. Mr. Savage, being the President of our organization, is always in close touch.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Savage, Mr. Taber, of Buffalo; Mr. Willem, of Milwaukee; Mr. Burger, I am going to put you in, because I know you will work. Mr. Cooper Lyon, of Chicago, and Mr. Horix. Will you please get together? These gentlemen have been and are to-day the active secretaries and delegates of the organizations that are still in existence and working hard for this result, and I think you can rely on them to give you better service than anybody else can. Mr. Wehmiller, will you devote your time?

Mr. WEHMILLER. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Now, if there are any gentlemen present who have not been mentioned, will you please state your names. We have New York, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and Detroit.

Mr. ANDREAE. Is no one here from New Jersey, that is a very active place.

Mr. RONEY. I do not know whether I can subscribe my name and organization to this.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is simply a question of whether you will serve on this work, and you can take up the organization later.

Mr. RONEY. I would not hand my name in to serve on the committee.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Why?

Mr. RONEY. I have not been authorized to do so.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. This is to appoint you, and then your organization can take exception to it at a later date, and we can change it at a later date, so if you will give us your name and initials.

Mr. RONEY. I have no objection to giving my name, but I should not want my name to appear and have it submitted to our association and then have to withdraw my name.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I want to again say that the motion which is passed gave the appointment of the executive committee to the President, so it is simply a matter of courtesy, of course, to your local organization, to have them add such names as they feel disposed to add, if they take exception to your own.

Mr. RONEY. I am J. A. Roney, of Newark. I represent the entire State of New Jersey.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Then you have a mighty good organization.

Mr. RONEY. I thank you.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Don't you want one of the trade papers in our organization?

Mr. ANDREAE. Certainly.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I suggest the name of Mr. Herbert G. Rich.

(This motion was duly seconded and carried.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We want to select a Vice-President from this committee, and a Secretary and Treasurer. I would like to say that in my opinion the Secretary and Treasurer should be in Chicago, and most of the work will go to the Secretary of an organization of this character, and he must be in close touch with Mr. Andreae.

A VOICE. Let Mr. Andreae suggest the names, he is best able to do that.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It will be better to have people who will work with him congenially.

A VOICE. Would it be proper to elect a Vice-President first?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We have got on this feet foremost, this same hurley-burley. This must be done according to Hoyle's rules.

Mr. COOPER LYON. Weber & Fields make those.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. I propose Mr. Cooper Lyon as Secretary.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Cooper Lyon of Chicago as Secretary and Treasurer.

(The motion was carried unanimously.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Will you select the meeting day at your convenience?

Mr. ANDREAE. Yes, as soon as we can ge it.

Mr. BARTHOLOMAY. As a nomination for Vice-President I present the name of Mr. Savage.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Gentlemen, I would like you to withdraw any nomination for Vice-President at the present time. The Vice-Presidents of an organization of this character should be geographically located, and I think the executive committee should have an opportunity to decide just how they want to do this work, and besides that, I think Mr. Andreae will have a lot of work to do, and maybe will want people we could not select to-day. There are very few of us here, and I think we ought to get the feeling of our own local organization as to who they want to represent them as Vice-Presidents of this organization, and as permanent officials to be selected. Say within thirty days, or as near to it as Mr. Andreae can, he will call a meeting of this executive boards and then we can select the Vice-Presidents from the lists that the local organizations will submit. We want, if possible, to eliminate anything that refers to sentiment, and get down to actual labor. It is unfair to think that Mr. Andreae is going to do all this work for you, he won't, he cannot, it is impossible. You have to do your own work, and only men that will work should be considered for any of these offices. It is no empty honor to have, and it will cost money, and more, work. A motion to adjourn is now in order. We will have a little meeting of our own, that is, the Manufacturers' and Dealers' and Brewers' Supplies; we will have a further meeting right now. Mr. Andreae, we have not expressed our thanks to you for your courtesy, but I think I am expressing the views of everybody in the industry of their desire to work as a unit, instead of just a mere mob, and that is what we have been for twenty-five years—a mob.

Mr. ANDREE. Much obliged to you, Mr. Chairman.

OFFICERS.

Charles J. Lilienthal, President, Cleveland.
Cooper Lyon, Secretary, Chicago.
Wm. Bartholomay, Jr., Treasurer, Chicago.

Whereupon, at 12.30 o'clock, noon, the meeting terminated.

Maj. HUMES. I now submit the summary of the bank accounts of the United States Brewers' Association as far as they have been obtainable on subpœna, and as far as they are in the possession of the committee at the present time.

Senator NELSON. Has that been identified?

Maj. HUMES. The bank books themselves have been introduced and identified. The passbooks themselves mean very little unless we have them summarized, and I am submitting now the summary of what those bank books show.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Maj. HUMES. In 1913 there was deposited in the account of the United States Brewers' Association in the Commercial Trust Co. of New Jersey $27,302.25, in the Northwestern National Bank in Philadelphia $33,887.91, and in the Germania National Bank in New York $543,012.74. The period covered in no instance, for 1913, covers a period prior to July. The total deposits were $576,900.65.

Senator NELSON. By the national association, or the local associations?

Senator OVERMAN. That is the national association.

Maj. HUMES. That is the national association.

In 1914 there was deposited in the account of the United States Brewers' Association in the Commercial Trust Co. of New Jersey a total of $577,822.37, in the Northwestern National a total of $432,412.75, and in the Germania National Bank of New York a total of $394,250.12, making total deposits in the three bank accounts, the possession of which the committee has, of $1,404,485.24.

Senator NELSON. That was for 1914?

Maj. HUMES. 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. That was election year.

Maj. HUMES. In 1915 the deposits in the Commercial Trust Co. aggregated $393,650.61, in the Northwestern National Bank $295,441.46, and in the Germania National Bank $360,000, making total deposits of $1,049,091.07.

Senator NELSON. That was in 1915?

Maj. HUMES. 1915; yes, sir.

In the case of 1916 we have the figures for only a portion of the year, the balance of the records having been destroyed, according to the testimony. There was deposited that year, according to the records we have, being only the early part of the year, in the Commercial Trust Co. $86,165.44 and in the Germania National Bank $10,000, making $96,165.44, most of the records for that year being destroyed.

In 1917 the deposits in the Central Union Trust Co. were $538,678.15 and in the Federal Trust Co. $209,981.49, making a total of $748,659.64.

Senator NELSON. That was 1917?

Maj. HUMES. 1917.

In 1918 there appears to have been deposited in the Commonwealth Bank of New York amounts aggregating $165,000 and in the Federal Trust Co. deposits amounting to $200,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you got the sum total of it all, outside of the destroyed records?

Maj. HUMES. Not for the whole period. We did not make the total for the whole; we made it by years.

Capt. LESTER. The total for the period from 1913 to 1918, inclusive, as far as the records show, is $4,457,941.22.

Maj. HUMES. For part of that time the records are destroyed.

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. With 1916 practically eliminated, those are the records that we have possession of here. What I wanted to do was to call attention to the advertising account, because my recollection is that the advertising account clearly shows that the figures which we have for 1918 are not a complete record of the receipts, because there would have been insufficient money collected to have paid that advertising account of $537,000 which has been submitted, and there are now in the Federal Trust Co. as a reserve account, four deposits, two of $50,000 each and two of $100,000 each, aggregating $300,000. That account is in the name of J. Liebmann, chairman United States Brewers' Association. In the Federal Trust Co. there is also an account against which nothing has been drawn, apparently deposited October 22, 1917, aggregating $109,981.49, the account being in the name of the United Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. All these amounts that you have given here appear in these pass books?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. However, the reserve accounts that I have referred to are included in the general total that we gave by years.

Senator OVERMAN. This is the amount of money that they have on hand now?

Maj. HUMES. Apparently so; yes, sir; in addition to the balance that there may be in their current checking account.

Senator NELSON. A moment ago you stated that some of the accounts had been destroyed for 1916, but that their advertising account showed that they spent a good deal more than you have given in the figures here.

Maj. HUMES. That was my recollection. You will remember that Mr. Fox produced an advertising account——

Capt. LESTER. That was for 1917.

Maj. HUMES. The totals would include that, if it was 1917. I thought it was a 1918 account.

Senator NELSON. I would suggest that you put in the record the difference between the deposits you have ascertained and the advertising account, so as to show how much they had incurred for advertising beyond what you have got in your account of deposits.

Maj. HUMES. I will check that as soon as I get that account. The reporter has the account, and I can not get it at this time.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN A. McDERMOTT.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. McDermott, where do you live?

Mr. McDERMOTT. New York City.

Maj. HUMES. What is your position with the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Manager of the organization bureau.

Maj. HUMES. For how long have you been engaged in that position?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Going on 11 years.

Maj. HUMES. You entered the service of the association about the same time that Mr. Fox did, then?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When you were originally employed what were your duties, and in what capacity were you employed?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I was employed originally by an organization committee, under which I worked for, I think, about three years, until Mr. Gardiner took charge of the work. My work, to start out with, was the organization of the brewers in the different States into State associations and combating the prohibition movement in the wet-and-dry State, county, and city local-option fights, as the fights would arise in different parts of the country.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand, your first duty was to organize State brewers' associations in the States where they were not already organized?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have anything to do with promoting the organization of retail liquor dealers' associations as well, encouraging that work?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Where we were in a State fight, or a county fight or anything of that kind, if they were not organized, I organized them; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You organized them as the emergency arose?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Absolutely.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any working agreement, or were you in touch with the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association in that work?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir; just in the same way.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in carrying on your work you cooperated with the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association in organizing the State bodies of each organization in the several States in which you operated?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not know that I ever organized any State wholesale liquor dealers' association.

Maj. HUMES. I say, you cooperated?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Oh, yes.

Maj. HUMES. You worked together in order each to organize his own branch of the trade?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. When was the organization bureau of which you were manager first really organized as an organization bureau?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. When I started it.

Maj. HUMES. It was simply carried as a committee at that time, was it not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I was appointed as manager of the organization bureau and hired several assistants to assist me in the State local-option fights and to carry on the work.

Maj. HUMES. And Mr. Gardiner became the head of the organization bureau two or three years after you entered the employment of the association?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How was the organization bureau composed? What did it consist of?

Mr. McDERMOTT. It consisted of myself and a corps of assistants, as the occasion required in the different States. Some of the men I hired permanently by the year and others I would hire temporarily for a month or two or three, as the occasion would arise, in a State or local-option fight.

Maj. HUMES. What I mean is this: Was the organization bureau itself, the central body, a committee that was appointed?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The organization committee—I worked under the chairman of that the first three years, and then after that Mr. Gardiner had entire and sole charge.

Maj. HUMES. The organization committee had charge of what you call the organization bureau?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. To whom were you responsible for your work?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Gardiner.

Maj. HUMES. And you reported to no one but Mr. Gardiner?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No one but Mr. Gardiner.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner was held solely responsible for the work of that bureau?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And his operations were accepted on faith by the association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I presume so. I have never known anything different.

Maj. HUMES. In carrying on the work of the organization bureau, what elements did you first start out to organize?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The first element we started out to organize was the trade itself in the States; and out of the trade would be formed a committee which would select a campaign manager for that State or for that campaign, and in some cases we furnished campaign managers or furnished experts to help them, to stay there until the fight was over. In a number of cases I did so myself.

Maj. HUMES. The first thing you did was to organize the trade?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. To organize brewers' associations and get them to go out and organize retailers and to form your cooperative committees with the allied interests in the State?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you direct your energies toward an attempt to organize the labor element or to dominate or influence or organize labor?

Mr. McDERMOTT. In a number of these State campaigns and in the local-option campaigns there would be a number of local unions that would be individually interested because of the loss of their positions and because of the fact that they had taken a stand against prohibition and passed resolutions; and some local labor man would become active in the campaign to look after that interest.

Maj. HUMES. In how many States of the Union did you during your activity undertake to organize and conduct campaigns or supervise the conducting of campaigns?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That would be a pretty hard question to answer from memory, Major, because I have been in a great many of the State campaigns in the last 11 years, outside of some of the States that were able to take care of themselves, like Ohio, where I have never done anything except to consult or confer with them in an advisory capacity. The same was true in Missouri; but in the Western States——

Maj. HUMES. Have you not ever sent your organizers into Ohio to assist in the organization of that State?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No, sir. In the Southern and Western States, where the trade was weaker than in Ohio or Missouri, I have sent my organizers and have been there myself.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you undertook to build up and keep in touch with an organization in practically every State in the Union?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I tried to, the best I could; yes.

Maj. HUMES. I think I can save time by asking you a question backward. Can you name any State in the Union, and if so what State, where you never did interest yourself, and from which you never received reports, and which you never attempted in any way to organize?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri. By that I mean, Major, that I have never been active in those States toward the organization of our trade, although I have from time to time heard reports from those States by representatives of the trade.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. In other words, what you mean to say is that in the case of those particular States you did not personally go into the States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; our bureau did no work in the States.

Senator OVERMAN. You speak of organizing the allied interests. What were they? Name some of the allied interests to which you refer.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Where we would go into a State, Senator, and there were a number of people doing business with the brewers or with the retailers or with the hotels or anything of that kind, we tried to organize them as an allied interest, because of their doing business with our people.

Senator OVERMAN. That is, the hotels, bottling establishments, and so on?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Any persons who did business with us.

Senator OVERMAN. Any persons who did business with the brewers at all?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Or with the trade.

Senator OVERMAN. There must have been a great many allied interests.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. There were, in a number of States.

Senator OVERMAN. What was your method of organizing them? Did you get up an association of those men?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In some cases, yes; or they would join the association that would be organized to fight prohibition in that State or in that community.

Senator OVERMAN. Was there an effort made to raise money from those allied interests?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I guess there was, in some cases. That was generally left to the local committee.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Exhibit 52, and ask you if that is not a summary of the political situation in practically every State in the Nation, that was prepared by the organization bureau? I think it is almost alphabetically arranged; is it not, Mr. McDermott?

Mr. MCDERMOTT (after examining paper). This is a report, Major, that I made, I think, about seven or eight years ago.

Maj. HUMES. I just picked that out as a sample. It covers practically every State in the Union?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. It is a report on the conditions as they looked to me at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you made regular or practically regular monthly reports to the board of trustees, or to Mr. Gardiner, of the political situation in the several States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Not monthly reports. I presume I reported to Mr. Gardiner, maybe sometimes to the board, from time to time, on the conditions, on what they looked to me to be.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not prepare a written memorandum?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; I think I did.

Maj. HUMES. Between months? I do not mean that every month you included every State; but each month you would report upon the condition in a certain number of States that you had gotten in touch with during that month?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I presume I did.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Exhibits Nos. 154 to 165, and ask you if those are not reports that you made from time to time to the association of your activities and the result of your investigations?

Mr. MCDERMOTT (after examining papers). These are all the same, Major. I do not think there is any question about it.

Maj. HUMES. They are the monthly reports you made, or the periodical reports, at least?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I think there are some in here that are not mine.

Maj. HUMES. They are either all yours or else they are reports that your men made to you?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not think that there are any reports that my men made to me.

Maj. HUMES. In those exhibits there might have been one or two, in the middle, that may have been misplaced. I thought they were all of the same class.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; some of the things in here are not mine.

Maj. HUMES. All of those reports showing reports of the various States are yours, are they not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

(At this point, at 12 o'clock m., the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, November 22, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m. in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN A. McDERMOTT—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. It is a fact, is it not, that periodically you submitted to the trustees of the United States Brewers' Association, or at least prepared for their information, a schedule of the political situation in practically every State in the Union?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Well, I did when I was working under the organization committee, but after Mr. Gardiner took charge I reported to him, and I do not believe I ever submitted any of those reports after that.

Maj. HUMES. After you commenced working under the direction of Mr. Gardiner you made your reports to Mr. Gardiner as your chief, and he made the reports to the association?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. He may have done so; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. To the board of trustees?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you not attended meetings of the board of trustees when these reports were made?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. At times; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the men you had working for you making these surveys and making reports to you from time to time?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I did not have anybody making surveys like the Andreae surveys, if that is what you mean.

Maj. HUMES. Making investigations; we will call it that.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I had organizers and regular men—Mr. William Dietrich, of Chicago, and Mr. George J. Thompson, of Chicago.

Maj. HUMES. What was Mr. Thompson's business while he was in your employ?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Thompson had been connected with the Cigar Makers' International Union, and he was well acquainted with the labor leaders in the different cities and counties, and he did his particular work amongst those people.

Maj. HUMES. And his business was to go out and undertake to organize the labor organizations in places in which you were interested?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In the places in which we would have a fight.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, what was Mr. Dietrich's specialty?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. He was a sort of chief organizer. He helped to organize States, and in some cases did regular organization publicity work.

Maj. HUMES. Whom else did you have?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I have had a number of men, on and off, during those years.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Grau?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I had Mr. Grau for two or three years.

Maj. HUMES. What was his specialty?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. He was a speaker and organizer, also.

Maj. HUMES. What class of the public did he especially appeal to?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Well, he appealed to the allied trades and public meetings he addressed in different parts of the country, until he quit me and went with the maltsters.

Maj. HUMES. He left you and went with the maltsters?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did he continue his activities in that field after he entered the employ of the maltsters?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I think not.

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Barth ever do work for you?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Barth?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; Peter J. Barth.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not remember Peter J. Barth.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not come in contact with Mr. Barth and was he not indirectly employed by the association through the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I had nothing to do with the National Association of Commerce and Labor.

Maj. HUMES. Well, but you cooperated with them, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I did lately, but not when Mr. Andreae was managing the bureau. I had nothing whatever to do with them. My work was independent of them.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; but did you not cooperate in the several States, Mr. Andreae within his line of activities and you within yours?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; we did, to a general extent.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. In other words, you did not work to cross purposes?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No.; but I did not report to Mr. Andreae, or have anything to do with him.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not Mr. Barth's business to undertake to line up and organize certain religious elements?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That I do not know. I could not answer that question. I do not ever remember of meeting Mr. Barth, and I never knew that there was any organization of religious bodies along that line.

Maj. HUMES. What were the activities of Mr. Keller?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I never met Mr. Keller, but I have understood that he was an officer of the Indiana German-American, or the National German Alliance. I never met him.

Maj. HUMES. You cooperated with his organization in the several States, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Major, so far as the German Alliance is concerned, I never knew Dr. Hexamer or any of their officers, but when we were into a local or State campaign, if there was a local or State German Alliance, we naturally had them as well as all forces that were opposed to prohibition, at work, and utilized their efforts.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. The only time that I have ever had anything—and I did not have anything to do, but there was a situation arose three years ago, in the summer, when I was in St. Paul, on my way to the coast, and Mr. Julius Moersch, whom you have on your list and whom I used to know years ago in Minnesota and who had done some little work for our organization bureau at times—I met him accidentally. He heard that I was in the city of St. Paul and he came to me and said—we discussed things generally, politics, prohibition, and he said—the National German Alliance, of which he at that time was, I think, one of the vice presidents, were going to hold a meeting in San Francisco, and he said, "I believe they are going to make a lot of trouble for themselves in a criticism of the President of the United States." I said, "Mr. Moersch, that would be un-American and would be a serious thing for any body of citizens, whether of German origin, Irish origin, or any other foreign-born origin, to criticize the President at this time because of his foriegn policies." I said, "I have nothing to do whatever with anything of this kind, but as a private citizen—American citizen—I want you to go out there to San Francisco, and if it is possible, prevent that being done, because I believe it would create a great deal of hard feeling if it is done"; and I paid Mr. Moersch's expenses—his time—myself, personally, to do that. Mr. Moersch told me that he went there, and they had a bitter discussion in the committee on resolutions, and that he organized a revolt in the National German Alliance, and that, I think, five or six of the State presidents followed him and threatened to withdraw and disrupt the organization if there was a criticism made.

Maj. HUMES. When was this?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. This was in the summer of 1917, when the National German Alliance met at San Francisco. As a result of that action there was no criticism made of the President, and I believed that I was doing what I thought right as an American citizen to prevent it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at that same meeting Mr. Percy Andreae spoke at the meeting as a representative of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; I presume that is the same meeting.

Maj. HUMES. He went out to represent these foreign-language newspapers at that meeting?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not know about that.

Maj. HUMES. Did he have any official connection with that organization?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That I do not know, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Who was Mr. George R. French?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. French?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know him.

Mr. [illegible] I show you one of his reports to your association to refresh your recollection [handing witness paper]. Was he ever in your employ?

Mr. McDERMOTT (after examining papers). That is quite a while ago, Major; but as I remember this case, this was a friend of Mr. [illegible]'s who visited some of the coast and Northwestern States for a few months and reported on the conditions in those States to Mr. Thompson, and he to me.

Maj. HUMES. He was paid by your organization, though, was he not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were you present at the meeting of brewers held in Chicago in the summer of 1913 when the five-year contracts were entered into?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was the purpose of that meeting?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The purpose of that meeting was to more thoroughly organize the trades and wake them up to the dangers of national prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in the spring of 1913 it was discovered that it was going to be necessary to raise larger sums of money than had been raised theretofore and that the purpose of the meeting was to devise ways and means for enlarging the exchequer?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Well, the purpose of the meeting was to get the brewers of the United States in convention assembled and arouse them to the dangers of national prohibition, so that if they decided to go ahead and put on a campaign—which at that time we were only covering certain sections, and we had more State fights on than we could take care of—and to go ahead with a big plan of national organization and oppose national prohibition. These gentlemen had many millions of dollars of property at stake and there were several thousand jobs of men at stake; they believed in their product; they believed in the principles of the Government that protected them [illegible], and they felt as though they were not getting their side of the case before the country as they should; and that was in my mind as to the real reasons of the meeting.

Maj. HUMES. At any rate, the scheme was devised of entering into five-year contracts with all the brewers of the country, by which they were to pay an additional assessment of three cents a barrel on their output, to the Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; I understand that to be so.

Maj. HUMES. And the funds of the United States Brewers' Association since that meeting in Chicago in 1913 have been very much larger than they ever were before?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The records show that.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, Mr. McDermott, what was the relation that existed between the United States Brewers' Association and the National Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Just the same as testified to by Mr. Gardiner: a working arrangement.

Maj. HUMES. The working arrangement was that the brewers were to put $2 into their political fight for every $1 that the National Liquor Dealers put in?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That was my understanding.

Maj. HUMES. It was on a two-thirds and one-third basis?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When you went into a State to organize that State, how did you build up your organization?

Mr. McDERMOTT. We organized the trade in the State, as I explained yesterday, the brewers, the wholesalers, and the retailers, and we took a general survey of the situation in the State, the size of the State, the number of large cities, the population, and campaign managers were picked and publicity managers, organizers, county managers, and so on down the line.

Maj. HUMES. Did you seek to dominate or secure favorable action from the labor organizations in those States?

Mr. McDERMOTT. As a general rule the labor organizations independently, of their own volition, always passed resolutions opposed to prohibition, because 90 per cent of them were opposed to prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. Why was it necessary for you to employ George Thompson to go into these States and use his connection with organized labor to gain admission to various labor organizations and secure the passage of resolutions by those organizations?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Because it was necessary to have a man in organized labor explain this whole situation to organized labor in the State.

Maj. HUMES. And it was his business to attend the meetings of organized labor and prepare and secure the passage of resolutions?

Mr. McDERMOTT. He would prepared them, but I do not believe he secured the passage of them. They all passed them voluntarily.

Maj. HUMES. He was the one who actively presented the matter?

Mr. McDERMOTT. He brought the matter to their attention.

Senator OVERMAN. He initiated it?

Mr. McDERMOTT. He initiated it.

Maj. HUMES. In each instance he reported promptly to you and your organization and his success, wherever he succeeded in securing the passage of these resolutions?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Naturally I was in touch with him.

Maj. HUMES. And you also sought out the German-American Alliances in these different States?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I did not seek them out. They generally sought us out.

Maj. HUMES. And you contributed to them in order to build up and strengthen their organizations and increase in America their strength for the purpose of your campaign?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I never contributed to the German-American Alliance, nor did my bureau, in my life, that I know of. If any contribution was made to them it was made by the local people.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that for a number of years prior to the organization of the Andreae bureau the United States Brewers' Association supported and financed the German-American Alliance by making a quarterly appropriation to them?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know, except from the testimony that has been offered here, and the opinion of the people that I was working with on those matters was that the German-American Alliance only assisted in the prohibition fights. We had nothing to do with dictating their policies or anything else.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not also your policy, when you went into a State, to organize as many associations of various kinds as possible, liberty leagues, personal liberty leagues, manufacturers' and dealers' clubs, and other organizations, giving them various names, in order to further your propaganda and to carry on your organization work?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Certainly we organized all the elements that were opposed to prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. And you organized them under some trade name or some other name that would distinguish them from brewery organizations or liquor organizations?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. The local people would organize and they would select their own name, whatever name they wanted. Because of the fact that they were making a fight against prohibition we assisted them in making the fight. There were a number of States that were dry States and a number of counties that were dry counties. People were opposed to saloons in a number of instances in some of those States, but they were also opposed to the principle of State and national prohibition.

Senator STERLING. And under whatever name they were organized they were organized for the purpose of fighting prohibition?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; they were organized to fight prohibtion.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not your purpose to use names for these organizations that would not indicate the real, underlying purpose of the organization?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I never looked at it in that way, because before they went along very far everyone could understand the underlying principles of the organization.

Maj. HUMES. Could the public at large, those who were not associated with the organization, know the purpose of the organization from the name?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; I do not suppose they could.

Maj. HUMES. It was good campaign management from your standpoint to organize in a way and under a name so that the public would not recognize the connection of the organization with the liquor movement? That was good politics from your standpoint?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That is a question. It has not brought much result.

Maj. HUMES. I asked you for the negative rather than the affirmative with reference to the States that you had gone into and undertaken to organize in behalf of the United States Brewers' Association yesterday, and you named the following States that you had never gone into to organize—Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Missouri. Why had you not gone into those particular States to perfect and build up the organization that you were working on?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Because the people in those States were capable taking care of themselves and of their own work.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, in those States the United States Brewers' Association depended upon the State brewers' associations to further organization work that was necessary for their political purposes?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, the situation is this: That you, on behalf of the United States Brewers' Association, have participated in the political activities in every State in the Union except those States where the State brewers' associations were sufficiently strong to carry on the work without the direct assistance of the national association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. You might add on there that there are two prohibition States that I did not go into.

Maj. HUMES. Which are those?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mississippi and Kansas.

Maj. HUMES. Was not your organization in Kansas?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Andreae made a survey of the State of Kansas, with a view of determining whether or not it would be possible to secure legislation in that State?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I never was in Kansas. You are getting my bureau confused a little bit with Mr. Anreae's bureau, and trying to hitch me up with something I did not have anything to do with.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that Mr. Gardiner, the head of your bureau, and Mr. Andreae considered that subject?

Mr. McDERMOTT. They may have considered it, but I never was in there, and there never was anything done in Kansas.

Maj. HUMES. Maine is a dry State also?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go into Maine?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; but the situation in Maine was entirely different. They had a constitutional repeal election on up there.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that constitutional amendment contest up there brought on by your organization?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; the constitutional amendment contest repeal proposition was placed before the people of the State by the legislature, with which we had nothing to do; and when the special election came on in the summer or fall we went into the campaign.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go into Maine and send your men into Maine, and is it not a fact that before they had fully completed their work they were discovered by the public press and the fact was mentioned that your representatives were there, and did you not thereupon withdraw them from the State?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. And subsequent to that time pick out some new men who were unknown in Maine and send them back to complete the work?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; you are getting me mixed up with the survey that Mr. Andreae started to make up there, I think.

Maj. HUMES. You were certainly cooperating with him?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I was not cooperating with Mr. Andreae. Mr. Andreae did his work in his own name. I never made a report to him and never conferred with Mr. Andreae about any of this work.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Andreae was required to report and keep in touch with the president of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. He may have, but he did not keep in touch with me.

Maj. HUMES. And his business was to go out and undertake to organize the labor organizations in places in which you were interested?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In the places in which we would have a fight.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, what was Mr. Dietrich's specialty?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. He was a sort of chief organizer. He helped to organize States, and in some cases did regular organization publicity work.

Maj. HUMES. Whom else did you have?

Maj. HUMES. You were interested in that fight not only in the constitutional amendment fight, but also in the election of candidates for office, were you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I was not active in that at all. All I did was to confer with the people of the State.

Maj. HUMES. And you contributed money to the fight, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That I do not know. That is quite a while ago. I had nothing to do with contributing money.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not make an agreement as to the amount of money that was to go in there?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If I did, I did it after conference with the Texas people, or representing Mr. Gardiner. I could not remember that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not have a conference in St. Louis where the amount of your contribution to this fund was agreed upon?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I presume I may have. It is quite a while ago and I do not recollect that.

Maj. HUMES. In the Nebraska fight you contributed money to the fight?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Gardiner took charge of the contributions to State fights.

Maj. HUMES. You went out and made an agreement, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. As to what you were going to do, and the money was afterwards turned over.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No—in Texas, perhaps, but not all.

Maj. HUMES. Was not your judgment relied upon as to the extent of help that your association should accord to the different States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I would not say so. It was in some instances and in others not, but those things were generally placed before Mr. Gardiner by the local committee, the men in charge, although in a number of cases my judgment was accepted.

Maj. HUMES. You attended a joint meeting of the distillers and brewers in Baltimore, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In Baltimore?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not remember. I might have.

Maj. HUMES. I beg your pardon—in New York, on December 29, 1914?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, I think I did attend that meeting.

Maj. HUMES. I will show you a list of those who attended, to refresh your recollection.

Mr. MCDERMOTT (after examining paper). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. At that meeting were you not called upon by Mr. Gardiner to report upon the recent campaigns in the several States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I think perhaps I was. I think that was the year after we had lost three or four States, and everyone wanted to find out the reason why.

Maj. HUMES. And you were the one man in the organization who knew more about that than anyone else?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I would not say that. Some people might have thought so. I thought I did not know much about it.

Maj. HUMES. You would know more about the activities in each State than anyone else?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know him.

Maj. HUMES. I show you one of his reports to your association to refresh your recollection [handing witness paper]. Was he ever in your employ?

Maj. HUMES. Was not that constitutional amendment contest up there brought on by your organization?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; the constitutional amendment contest repeal proposition was placed before the people of the State by the legislature, with which we had nothing to do; and when the special election came on in the summer or fall we went into the campaign.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go into Maine and send your men into Maine, and is it not a fact that before they had fully completed their work they were discovered by the public press and the fact was mentioned that your representatives were there, and did you not thereupon withdraw them from the State?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. And subsequent to that time pick out some new men who were unknown in Maine and send them back to complete the work?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; you are getting me mixed up with the survey that Mr. Andreae started to make up there, I think.

Maj. HUMES. You were certainly cooperating with him?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I was not cooperating with Mr. Andreae. Mr. Andreae did his work in his own name. I never made a report to him and never conferred with Mr. Andreae about any of this work.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Andreae was required to report and keep in touch with the president of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. He may have, but he did not keep in touch with me.

Maj. HUMES. He was in touch with Mr. Gardiner, was he not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Very little.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that an agreement was entered into between your bureau and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association and Mr. Andreae in several of these States by which the campaign was to be financed jointly, each one paying a third of the expenses?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Not that I recollect.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that that was done in Iowa?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I had nothing to do with the Iowa fight that year. I was active in other fields.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not in Iowa at all that year?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. How about Virginia?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In Virginia we had a special State-wide election on and I was in that fight.

Maj. HUMES. And you went into that fight as the result of an agreement that was made, a three-cornered agreement between Mr. Andreae and Mr. Sunstein and your bureau, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; as I recollect, Mr. Andreae came into the fight in Virginia after we were in there. He sent in a couple of men to do some special work.

Maj. HUMES. It was at your solicitation or the solicitation of your bureau?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. It was not at my solicitation or the solicitation of my bureau, that I remember of.

Maj. HUMES. How was the money divided down in Virginia?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That I do not know. I had nothing to do with the finances.

Maj. HUMES. Who did have to do with the finances?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. They had a local committee there, and they had a chairman and a treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have nothing to do with the money that was put in there from the treasury of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; that was all handled by the local people.

Maj. HUMES. But how did the local people get possession of the money?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. They got it, I suppose, from Mr. Gardiner.

Maj. HUMES. Did not Mr. Gardiner say yesterday that those details were in your hands?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Not on the handling of money.

Maj. HUMES. He handled the money directly, did he?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; he sent it to the local committees.

Maj. HUMES. How about Texas?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We were in the first constitutional fight in Texas, as I remember.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not in practically every fight for a number of years in Texas.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; the only fight that I really took an active interest in in Texas personally with my bureau was the time of the State-wide constitutional prohibition fight.

Maj. HUMES. You were interested in that fight not only in the constitutional amendment fight, but also in the election of candidates for office, were you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I was not active in that at all. All I did was to confer with the people of the State.

Maj. HUMES. And you contributed money to the fight, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That I do not know. That is quite a while ago. I had nothing to do with contributing money.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not make an agreement as to the amount of money that was to go in there?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If I did, I did it after conference with the Texas people, or representing Mr. Gardiner. I could not remember that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not have a conference in St. Louis where the amount of your contribution to this fund was agreed upon?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I presume I may have. It is quite a while ago and I do not recollect that.

Maj. HUMES. In the Nebraska fight you contributed money to the fight?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Gardiner took charge of the contributions to State fights.

Maj. HUMES. You went out and made an agreement, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. As to what you were going to do, and the money was afterwards turned over.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No—in Texas, perhaps, but not all.

Maj. HUMES. Was not your judgment relied upon as to the extent of help that your association should accord to the different States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I would not say so. It was in some instances and in others not, but those things were generally placed before Mr. Gardiner by the local committee, the men in charge, although in a number of cases my judgment was accepted.

Maj. HUMES. You attended a joint meeting of the distillers and brewers in Baltimore, did you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In Baltimore?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not remember. I might have.

Maj. HUMES. I beg your pardon—in New York, on December 29, 1914?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, I think I did attend that meeting.

Maj. HUMES. I will show you a list of those who attended, to refresh your recollection.

Mr. MCDERMOTT (after examining paper). Yes.

Maj. HUMES. At that meeting were you not called upon by Mr. Gardiner to report upon the recent campaigns in the several States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I think perhaps I was. I think that was the year after we had lost three or four States, and everyone wanted to find out the reason why.

Maj. HUMES. And you were the one man in the organization who knew more about that than anyone else?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I would not say that. Some people might have thought so. I thought I did not know much about it.

Maj. HUMES. You would know more about the activities in each State than anyone else?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Perhaps I did.

Maj. HUMES. What was the purpose of that conference?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not just exactly recollect. I think it was just to discuss the general situation and decide whether they would go along with these fights. I do not remember now.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this statement and ask you for an explanation of it. Mr. Cooke was there, the counsel for the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, was he not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think perhaps he was.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this extract and ask you if Mr. Cooke did not make this statement at that meeting:

> If you divide responsibility and authority it will flow to the lowest level. Messrs. Gardiner and Sunstein have charge of one aspect of the case. Messrs. Crain & Cooke have charge of certain objectives which do not coordinate with the others. Messrs. Lewis and McDermott are conducting organization work throughout the country without close coordination. All of these activities should be collected together in one common undertaking.

Why were the names of Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Sunstein associated together?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Because, I presume, they were the two chairmen of the organization executive committees that had charge of the State fights.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, Mr. Gardiner representing the United States Brewers Association, and Mr. Sunstein, representing the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, occupied exactly the same positions in their respective organizations and had charge of the political contests in the several States throughout the Nation.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The wet and dry contests; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Crain and Mr. Cooke were the attorneys, the general counsel, for the respective organizations?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And they had charge of that phase of it?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Messrs. Lewis and McDermott occupied what relative positions?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Lewis occupied relatively the same position with the distillers that I had with the brewers.

Maj. HUMES. Then he was the manager of the Protective Bureau of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know whether he had that title, but he was the active field man.

Maj. HUMES. He was to their protective bureau what you were to your organization bureau?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Absolutely.

Maj. HUMES. And you and Mr. Lewis cooperated, did you?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; where we could.

Maj. HUMES. What working agreements did you have?

Mr. McDERMOTT. We had no special working agreement at all in any way, except if we knew people in a certain State we would get together and talk it over as to the best way of running the campaign, and advising with the local people, and we would sometimes have joint meetings, and sometimes we would not.

Maj. HUMES. In your work you were constantly in contact with the activities of the several State organizations in the States that you were acting in?

Mr. McDERMOTT. As a general rule; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You organized through them, did you not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; some of them.

Maj. HUMES. Will you tell us, in the several States, what the assessments to the State brewers' associations were?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That I could not tell you, because I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Have you not any idea?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. What is the highest assessment that you know of by any State brewers' association for the funds which they raised?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know what any of their assessments are; I never paid any attention to them, except when there was a State-wide campaign on, and we would get together and discuss the wet and dry fight in that State, and figure out as to what we thought that campaign would cost, and then on the barrelage of that State they would make an assessment accordingly, but after that fight was over they would drop back again, so I could not say offhand what any of the assessments of any State associations were.

Maj. HUMES. What is the highest assessment that you remember hearing of?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know, but I think the Colorado brewers in the last fight assessed themselves 50 or 60 cents. I was informed of that, I think.

Maj. HUMES. What year was that?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think that was in 1914 or 1912—whatever year Colorado went dry. I could not remember, offhand.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Gardiner testified to an occasion when in Nebraska the assessment was as high as 50 cents.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not remember that.

Maj. HUMES. He testified to that. What is the highest assessment you ever remember of in the State of Illinois?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know anything about their assessments in Illinois.

Maj. HUMES. You organized in that State?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; that is one of the States that I did not go into.

Maj. HUMES. What was the assessment in Texas?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know what assessments they had in Texas.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know what the assessments were in the New England States?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that the common assessment in the State of Ohio was 20 cents?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; I do not. I never knew anything about the assessments in the Ohio fights.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how much money was expended in Texas?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; I do not. Texas is a very large State. There is a lot of territory to cover. There has been a constant fight there for 10 years, and now it has ended.

Senator STERLING. You say a costly fight?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; until now it is ended; because it has been such a hard State to cover.

Maj. HUMES. When you went into the State, how did you estimate how much money you had to raise? What were the items that entered into the probable cost?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Publicity, postage, organization work.

Maj. HUMES. What did that embrace?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Organization work embraced the hiring of the State local managers, the publicity managers, the county managers, and so on down.

Maj. HUMES. What was your plan of organization in expending this money? Did you expend it from a central head or were the actual expenditures handled through the different counties or congressional districts?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That depended upon the local committee. As a general rule, they handled those matters in whatever way they thought best.

Maj. HUMES. Did your expenses include the paying of the poll tax in some of the States?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. You know that the poll taxes were paid, very largely, in several States, do you not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I never knew anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. To start with the year 1914, how much money was expended through the organization bureau of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I could not recollect that from hearsay, because, as I said, I had not charge of the finances, and I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. From your knowledge of the situation, what percentage of the total expenditures, in the various States where you were engaged in political contests, was contributed by the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That would vary in the different States. There was no stated percentage of that kind. Certain States would be able to take care of themselves better than others, and in a State where the industry was weak we would assess more.

Maj. HUMES. You did not confine yourself to a percentage basis?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. In Iowa you agreed to contribute an amount equal to the amount contributed by the State brewers, did you not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That was the Iowa campaign that I said I had nothing to do with, so I could not testify as to that.

Senator STERLING. You speak of an assessment of 50 or 60 cents. To whom did that assessment apply?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Just to the brewers' barrelage.

Senator OVERMAN. How did you get the money from the allied interests?

Mr. McDERMOTT. You mean in the local campaigns?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They contributed direct.

Senator OVERMAN. It was not an assessment?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Senator STERLING. Maj. Humes, you asked about a poll tax. By what authority was any poll tax assessed? I do not quite understand.

Maj. HUMES. The poll tax of the voters, to qualify them to vote, is what I was referring to.

Senator STERLING. Oh, yes; and that there was an arrangement by which that poll tax was paid?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know whether there was an arrangement or not, but the expenditure was actually made for that purpose. The documentary evidence that will be introduced will establish that.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I never had anything to do with that. I knew nothing about that. When we contributed money to certain States for antiprohibition fights, in a great many cases our work was through, and the local people took care of the balance.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not follow the principle of only contributing when you could control the plan and the method of organization?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you utilized the local organization and you outlined the method of procedure?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Not always.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not adopt the standard plan of organization for the several States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We perhaps tried to, but it was not adopted by all of them.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not the skeleton of the organization that was always followed, and were not the only modifications such modifications as were made necessary because of local conditions?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That was a matter where the local people would pass upon it.

Maj. HUMES. In spending money in the various campaigns did you expend the money that was contributed by your association directly to candidates—to political committees?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; nothing of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever contribute money directly to candidates or political committees in carrying on the work of the organization bureau?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Not of the organization bureau; no association money.

Maj. HUMES. All of that money that you put in was put in through the organization that you had created or coordinated?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In the various States?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And when the issue was the election of particular candidates your activities were in addition to the activities of the party—of the political committee—were they not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not exactly grasp the meaning of that question.

Maj. HUMES. When you went into a campaign to help elect a particular candidate for office, you worked through an independent organization of your own?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Rather than through the party or political organization of the candidate?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Mrj. HUMES. And in those fights you have supported particular candidates, prepared lists of candidates, and submitted them to your organization and supported them as regular slates, have you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No; I have never done that.

Maj. HUMES. I mean your organization.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Do you mean the local organizations in the different States?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Whatever they have done there, they have done locally. I have never done that.

Maj. HUMES. But you would father these local organizations?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. It is up to them to work out their details in those things.

Maj. HUMES. But you contributed to them financially in order that they might work out their details?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. You are getting it mixed. You are trying to bring me into political contests in these States outside of the wet and dry contests. The only fights where I had anything to do in these States were State-wide prohibition fights and local-option fights.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that you did not participate in the election of particular candidates?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I mean to say that I did not through my——

Maj. HUMES. When I say "you" I mean your organization, the organization which you represented. You could not participate, except through your organization, because you were not a resident of all these States. Did not your organization interest itself in the election of particular candidates as well as in the contests upon the wet and dry issue?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. There may have been some contributions made to the State assessments where they had a particular fight on in the State along that line, but our organization bureau did not interest itself in those fights, that I remember of.

Maj. HUMES. For instance, how about the fight in Tennessee; do you remember that?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not interested in the election of a governor down there?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How about the fight in Texas? Were you not interested in the election of a governor there?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In the primary fight for governor?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In Iowa?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not remember that we ever did anything in Iowa. Mr. Andreae may have; I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. You were in Iowa in the 1914 fight, were you not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Thornton?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Durand?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Durand?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Thompson was in Iowa, your field man, was he not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That year? I do not think so. I do not remember. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Soergel?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Soergel? I do not remember that name.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Wirmel?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; I met Mr. Wirmel once.

Maj. HUMES. With your recollection refreshed as to those men, were they not in the State of Iowa fighting for particular candidates in 1914?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Well, as I said, Major, I had nothing to do with the Iowa campaign. I do not know who was in or out of there. If any of my men were in there, I do not recall it at this time.

Maj. HUMES. Your bureau contributed $12,500 to that fight, did it not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. All I know is what Mr. Gardiner said here the other day. I did not know about that.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that in practically every State you have not only fought on the constitutional question or the legislative question, the question of submission of the wet-or-dry question, but you have also made your fights for individual candidates?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I presume the local people have; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And was not a survey made of the whole nation with a view of determining the congressional districts that you could carry with men favorable to your cause?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Well, I never made such a survey.

Maj. HUMES. I am talking about your organization.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. They may have made it. Mr. Andreae probably did.

Maj. HUMES. And you were interested in the election of particular candidates as well as in the question of submission itself?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I presume they were, no doubt.

Maj. HUMES. And following the line of least resistance, it was preferable to secure the nomination and promote the interests of a candidate of a majority party in a given locality, because the chance of electing him was greater. That was the common experience, was it not?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That was a matter that the local people used their judgment on.

Senator OVERMAN. Take it as a whole system. We had a constitutional amendment here pending in Congress and you had a business. You wanted to protect that business, and therefore you were interested in electing men opposed to this constitutional amendment?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; there were in a number of States matters of that kind.

Senator OVERMAN. And that was a part of that system, to elect men opposed to that amendment, so that you could protect your interests?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Where they were strong enough to do so. I have no doubt they did so, but those were fights that the local people carried on.

Senator OVERMAN. You left that to the local people, but contributed to the result?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. McDermott, is the working agreement between the United States Brewers' Association and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association still in force?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When did those interests separate?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Right after the Pittsburgh investigation—before that, in fact, as I remember it. I could not give you the exact date; but after the campaigns were over the year before, when we lost out everywhere, it practically ceased then. In fact, I think there was nothing going on at the time. That is my recollection. Now, I could not say, offhand, exactly.

Maj. HUMES. Each organization, then, where you are active now, is carrying on its activities independent of the other?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes. Neither is very active.

Maj. HUMES. But where you do get into a fight you cooperate, do you not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; we have not been into any fights the last two years at any place. This year I have not practically been in any. I made a trip around and advised our people not to go in.

Maj. HUMES. Then, during the last year or two, as I understand it, there has been very little money expended through the organization bureau?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is my understanding.

Maj. HUMES. You would know, would you not, whether it had been spent or not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. The constitutional amendment having been submitted to the States, is it part of your system now to try to defeat the amendment through the legislatures of the States?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes. That is up to the people of the different States this winter.

Senator OVERMAN. And you are joining in with the local associations to help defeat the amendment?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Well, we are not going to pay much attention to it, Senator. We are going to let them take care of themselves. We have done that already. We have not done anything this year.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you propose to contribute to that end?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No, sir. We have not contributed a cent. We do not intend to.

Maj. HUMES. During the last two years, then, the activities of the United States Brewers' Association and the expenditures of the United States Brewers' Association have been directed through advertising channels rather than through the organization bureau of which you are manager?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How did that change come about? Why did that change in program develop?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think Mr. Gardiner explained that, the other day, that after the change of policy of going along with the brewers and distillers, and the loss of so many of these States, the work was curtailed, and then the funds, and we just gradually quit. For instance, I had several men in my bureau. I am the only one left now.

Maj. HUMES. When did you cease to expend money through the organization bureau, approximately; that is, I mean, the bulk of the funds of the association?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Do you mean the Gardiner organization?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; through Mr. Gardiner's organization?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I could not answer that exactly, but I think it was about three and a half or four years ago.

Senator OVERMAN. It was stated by Mr. Fox the other day that they had spent last year some $300,000. Was that done by advertising rather than in other ways?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Your old method, then, was dropped?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes; that has been dropped since the Pittsburgh investigation.

Senator OVERMAN. And now you propose to carry it on by pamphlets and advertising in the papers?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir. They have been doing a great deal of advertising and publicity work, speakers in the different States, and so on.

Maj. HUMES. That figure was $537,000 instead of $300,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I believe it was.

Maj. HUMES. We are a good deal in the same position with this witness as any of the rest, gentlemen. We could pick out particular matters here and keep up the examination for a week, but it is primarily a question of the system.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what I want to get—the system rather than any individual man.

Maj. HUMES. They are covered by the documentary evidence we have.

Senator OVERMAN. We decided, Senator Sterling, that we would make the investigation of the committee as impersonal as possible, and just prove the system. I think that is what Congress wants to know.

Senator STERLING. Yes. There are just one or two questions I should like to ask. Mr. McDermott, was a fight made in Ohio against prohibition, in the last campaign, by your organization?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. No. I explained that, I think, yesterday, Senator.

Senator STERLING. It may have been explained. I did not hear it.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. The fight was made entirely by the Ohio people.

Senator STERLING. And the national organization had no part in that fight?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We had none whatever—nothing whatever to do with it.

Senator STERLING. Just one further question: In your fights against national prohibition and against the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution, do you participate in the election of members of legislatures in the several States where the question is to be submitted?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We have not done a thing of that kind since the matter passed Congress. For the last three years we have not participated in any State in any election of members of the legislature or Congress.

Senator OVERMAN. You say that is left to the locals?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Yes, sir. Whatever the local people do, they do themselves; but, so far as our association, our bureau, is concerned, we have had nothing to do with them.

Senator STERLING. That is all I wish to ask.

Maj. HUMES. That is all, Mr. McDermott.

There are no more witnesses. The two from the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association were excused until later, you will remember, Senator; and we have now this documentary matter that we should like to submit.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Mr. Beck come down?

Capt. LESTER. He came yesterday afternoon. We had a short conference with him and Mr. Johnson. I think we had better give you the result of that——

Senator OVERMAN. He is to come later?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. When we get a chance we would like to talk to you privately about that, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Maj. HUMES. In line with the testimony that was introduced by Mr. Gardiner and the schedule of the bank account of the Pennsylvania State Association, here is the summary, based upon his testimony, that we would like to submit in order to show the funds that were raised by that association.

Senator OVERMAN. What is the sum total?

Maj. HUMES. The sum total over the period of four years is $922,000. In 1911 there was $104,209——

Senator OVERMAN. You need not read it by years. I just wanted to know the total for the whole four years. There is some evidence here that there was a million dollars for that period.

Maj. HUMES. This is the Pennsylvania State Association. The bank accounts of the United States Brewers' Association were offered yesterday, showing that the highest deposit in any one year was $1,400,000.

Senator OVERMAN. This is the Pennsylvania State Association?

Maj. HUMES. This is the Pennsylvania State Association summary showing the amount raised within the State alone. That was outside of, and, of course, in addition to, the money that went into the treasury of the United States Brewers' Association.

Senator STERLING. That approximates a million dollars. It is $900,000, is it?

Maj. HUMES. $922,000 in the period of four years. $300,000 is the largest amount. That was what was received by them in that one fund in 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that election year?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you got how much was spent during that election year by the United States Brewers' Association? You say $300,000 was spent by the State association.

Maj. HUMES. We can figure out the withdrawals from the bank accounts of the State associations. It was practically all withdrawn each year. The balance carried over from year to year each time is ordinarily twenty or thirty thousand dollars.

Senator OVERMAN. In that election year, then, as I recollect, there was something over a million dollars collected.

Capt. LESTER. $1,400,000.

Senator OVERMAN. And then, in addition to that, this Pennsylvania matter.

Major, we want to talk about adjourning this committee before you take up that exhibit. You have no more witnesses here?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir; and I have not subpœnaed any more because of the uncertainty as to what the program of the committee was.

Senator OVERMAN. I believe I will take the responsibility, with Senator Sterling—he representing the minority and I representing the majority—of saying that we will adjourn this committee to-day over until Tuesday, the 3d of December, at half past 10, if that will be satisfactory to you?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. We would like a chance to talk with the committee in executive session about the procedure at that time.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you put that exhibit in, and we will talk about that now in executive session.

Maj. HUMES. We offer in evidence this audit, showing the receipts and expenditures of the association from October, 1913, to the 30th of June, 1915, as follows:

Income from the United States Brewers' Association, $330,000; from the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, $100,000; from the sale of stamps on the stamp plan that there has been evidence of already introduced, $136,194.01.

Interest on bank balances, $5,301.09.

Sale of Mr. Andrene's speeches, $300.88—

Making total receipts during that period of $571,795.98.

I want to get the more detailed expenditures here.

Senator OVERMAN. You are going to put that whole record in?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. Among other disbursements were the following:

German-American Alliance, $42,633.41.

American Leader, $85,994.30—

the American Leader being the publication of the American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers.

Many of the other expenditures will be itemized more in detail in the other documentary evidence that will be produced.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the audit of the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. That is not the complete audit of all of their accounts, because they continue down after that time; but that is the audit to June 30, 1915. We have in the separate exhibits some evidence of their expenditures.

10TH SEPTEMBER, 1915.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Chicago, Illinois.

DEAR SIRS: In accordance with your instructions we have audited the accounts of the National Association of Commerce and Labor from the start of the Association in October, 1913, to 30 June, 1915, and now submit our report thereon together with the schedules enumerated on index attached hereto.

The general books were opened on 1st November, 1913, although there were sveral items of receipts and payments between May, 1913, and that date, which appear to be proper credits and charges to the Association, and we have accordingly included them in the accounts now submitted. We find that the transactions relating to the finances of the institution have been kept in four sets of accounts, viz: those kept by Mr. Adam Ortseifen, those kept by the Secretary, Mr. Gale M. Hartley, for the sale of discount stamps, the funds of which were formerly subject to the check of Mr. Wm. Bartholomae and now of Mr. Thos. F. Keeley; the general accounts of the institution and the accounts of the Hearthstone Magazine, both kept by Mr. Gale M. Hartley, the Secretary, all checks being signed by him and drawn on the account of Gale M. Hartley, Secretary. The transactions taken care of by Mr. Ortseifen have not been recorded in a regular set of books but we were able to obtain particulars of all items from the cancelled checks and the check stub books of the Continental & Commercial National Bank, and the Corn Exchange National Bank in which the funds had been deposited. Mr. Ortseifen's accounts included deposits representing contributions from the United States Brewers Association, The Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association and interest on bank balances, out of which he paid the salaries of the President, Secretary and two of the principal employes and remitted to the Secretary, from time to time as required, funds to cover the current expeuses of the Association. The receipts from the sale of discount stamps were deposited in a special account to the credit of Mr. William Bartholomae who held office as Treasurer to March, 1915, and thereafter to the credit of Mr. Thos. F. Keeley, now Treasurer. During Mr. Bartholomae's term the receipts were used to pay the salaries of the men engaged in the sale of stamps and other incidental expenses, only one item $12,000.00 being remitted to Mr. Ortseifen for the benefit of the general Fund. Since Mr. Keeley's appointment however the discount stamp expenses have been paid out of the Secretary's account and withdrawals from the stamp fund for general purposes up to 30th June aggregated $60,000.00 (in addition to the $12,000.00 mentioned above.)

RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

The following is a summary of the Receipts and Disbursements for the period under review:

Receipts:
U. S. Brewers Association	$330,138.00
Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association	100,000.00

Percy Andreae	5,411.46
	557,883.47
Cash on hand	67,415.37
	625,298.84

Particulars of the above may be found on Schedule 1 showing the Receipts and Payments classified under the names of Adam Ortseifen, Wm. Bartholomae, Thos. F. Keeley and Gale M. Hartley.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE ACCOUNT.

This Account is submitted along with a Balance Sheet showing the Assets of the institution and differs from the Receipts and Disbursements insofar as the latter includes certain items of expenditure through which assets were acquired and other items as revenue which are more properly deductions from the expenses. The following is a summary, details of which may be found on Schedule 2.

Income:
Contributions——
U. S. Brewers Association	$330,000.00
Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association	100,000.00
	430,000.00
Sale of Stamps	136,194.01
Interest on Bank Balances	5,301.09
Sale of Mr. Andreae's speeches	300.88
	571,795.98
Expenditure:
Office	160,647.21
Publicity	120,373.04
Organization	112,886.79
Stamp	21,667.25
"Hans Dippel"	14,481.87
Hearthstone Magazine	55,177.62
	485,233.78
Balance	86,562.20
	571,795.98

This balance is made up as follows:

Cash in Banks	$67,415.37
Furniture and Fixtures	3,637.75
Rent paid in advance	12,444.67
The Hearthstone Magazine	2,505.75
Percy Andreae	558.66
	86,562.20

These items are given in Balance Sheet form on Schedule 3.

We present on Schedules 4 and 5 statements of Mr. Ortseifen's Receipts and Payments and on Schedule 6 statement of Mr. Hartley's transactions applicable to the period covered by Mr. Ortseifen's term.

INCOME.

As stated above the Revenue of the Association consists principally of contributions by the United States Brewers Association and the Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association. We have not obtained a verification of these contributions from any outside source, the explanation of the bank deposits representing these contributions being supplied by Mr. Ortseifen's assistant, Mr. Drier. The revenue from the sale of discount stamps has been recorded in a special cash book and the funds deposited in separate bank accounts, and while particulars of the sales are shown on a card ledger no general ledger has been maintained to show the aggregate of the sales, cash receipts or payments. An analysis of the cash receipts showing the amount received from brewers, maltsters and glass manufacturers is included in Schedule 2.

The following contributions have been received from local state organizations for special survey work, which we have deducted from the expenses in order to show the net revenue for the period.

Texas State Organization	15,001.64
Illinois State Organization	7,021.29
Ohio State Organization	1,000.00
Iowa Brewers Association	6,100.00
	$29,122.93

EXPENDITURES.

The Expenses have been classified under the five main divisions of Office Expense, Publicity, Organization, Discount Stamps and Hearthstone Magazine, which have been sub-divided into various headings. Particulars of the first four may be found on Schedule 2, and the Hearthstone Magazine Expenses on Schedules 16 and 17.

The Office Expenses had been erroneously charged with the cost of maintaining Mr. Andreae's automobile which, however, we eliminated and charged to his account. Mr. Andreae refunded the major portion of these expenses ($4,380.15) in March 1915 and made a subsequent payment of $357.75 in June 1915, the balance of $558.66 at 30th June, 1915 being paid by him in August.

The salaries and traveling expenses covering all the activities of the institution are shown on Schedules 7 and 10 for the six months ended 30th June, 1915, and we also submit on Schedule 8 particulars of the salaries for the period prior to that date. This last statement is incomplete for the reason that we were unable to obtain details of certain checks drawn in the name of the bookkeeper for the payment of salaries in cash. It appears that the particulars had been recorded on the check book stubs and these were destroyed in a fire which occurred in January 1915. For your information we have appended on the salary schedules a list of the current yearly salaries of which we are advised that the following employes are engaged on a verbal contract basis, entered into by Mr. Andreae, personally, for the current year ended 1st March, 1916.

Name.	Yearly salary.
Gale M. Hartley, Secretary	$6,000.00
L. H. Gibson	7,500.00
John Lloyd	3,120.00
Adolph Kummer	3,000.00
C. H. Wirmel	5,000.00
J. M. Gregory	3,900.00
	28,520.00

We have made a further analysis of the traveling and hotel expenses for the six months ended 30th June, 1915, in order to show as nearly as possible the amount expended in the various states and for general purposes, which is given on Schedule 9. In compiling this statement we experienced considerable difficulty in arriving at an accurate distribution owing to the condition of the records, which had not been kept with the view of giving information of this kind, and we had therefore to rely almost entirely on verbal information given by the office staff.

On Schedule 11 we submit particulars of expenses incurred by the executive committee.

A statement of the claim paid for the loss due to the fire which took place in January, 1915, is given on Schedule 14 and amounts to $1,691.22. You will notice that we have deducted this credit from the expenses as well as an item of $1,200.00 recovered from the Insurance Company for rent paid, owing to the loss of occupation of the premises.

The Publicity Expenses include an item of $83,994.30 paid to the American Leader (Foreign Press). We understand that a verbal contract with this concern has been made by Mr. Andreae, personally, which expires on 1st January, 1916.

Organization expense.—These consist of salaries and traveling expenses for field and survey work in various states (with the exception of the contributions to the German American Alliance). Certain campaign work was conducted in Kentucky and Virginia, under the auspices of the Association for which no contribution was made by the local organizations, although we understand that the Kentucky organization has promised to remit one half of the expenses incurred in that state. The Texas and Illinois campaign expenses, which were refunded, are shown on Schedule 13. These are not included in the total of the organization expenses.

Discount stamp expenses.—The expenses in connection with the sale of stamps, which were paid out of the funds in the hands of the Secretary, were charged to Publicity Expenses prior to 1st April, 1915, and after that date were shown separately. We have endeavored to rearrange and group all the expenses under the proper headings, although in many instances owing to the insufficiency of the records it was not always possible to determine the correct distribution. The selling of stamps was confined to about two salesmen during 1914 and in April 1915 a considerable force was assigned to this work.

"Hans dippel" account.—This account, which is given on Schedule 12, represents the cost of staging and promoting a play known as the "Passing of Hans Dippel," which was played in the Fall of 1914 in the cities of Cleveland, Toledo, Dayton, Columbus, Cincinnati, Zanesville, Springfield, and St. Louis. The accounts of the Association did not show the expense of this play as a separate item as all advances were charged to Publicity Expense. The Secretary has furnished us with a complete statement supported by vouchers showing the disbursement of the funds advanced, which we have verified.

The Hearthstone Magazine.—This publication was started in 1914 and succeeded the magazine known as "Town and Farm" which had been taken over by this Association in December 1913 from the Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association. The magazine is published monthly and the subscription terms are 25 cents per annum while the advertising rate, which was 25 cents per agate line at the start is now 70 cents. The operating loss during 1914 was $23,716.29 while for the six months ended 30th June, 1915, it amounted to $22,502.10 which excludes the cost of maintaining a department known as the "National News Bureau" which cost in addition $8,959.23 for the period, or a total cost to the Association of $55,177.62. We submit on Schedules 16 and 17 Profit and Loss Accounts for the year 1914 and the six months ended 30th June, 1915.

On Schedule 19 we present a statement of the circulation as nearly correct as we were able to obtain from the records, which shows that at 30th June this had reached 260,974 copies for the July issue. At the September issue this had reached 300,000 copies, which are distributed over the states as shown on Schedule 20. The revenue obtained from subscriptions represents only about 12% of the total, equal to 3 cents per copy, or 6% if the premiums are taken into consideration, equal to 1½ cents per copy, which is explained by the fact that the major portion of the subscriptions were retained by the solicitors.

The advertising revenue for the six months ended 30th June, 1915 was considerably less than that earned for the corresponding period of 1914 for the reason that the advertising rate of "Town and Farm" was $1.00 per line whereas the Hearthstone started at 25 cents per line. As the rate for the Hearthstone has already been increased to 70 cents per line, the revenue from this source must within the near future show a very material increase. The number of lines sold for the last issue was about 1,200, equivalent to 1½ pages, but it would appear that at this rate about 6,000 lines per month or eight pages will require to be sold before the magazine is on a self sustaining basis.

The following is a summary of the Profit and Loss Accounts for the period to 30th June, 1915:

	The Hearthstone.	National News Bureau.	Total.
Revenue	$19,456.08	$379.08	$19,835.16
Expenditures	65,674.47	9,338.31	75,012.78
Loss	46,218.39	8,959.23	55,177.62

Details of this statement may be found on Schedules 16 and 17.

The Miscellaneous Revenue on Schedule 16 represents an unaccounted for balance which is not shown by the books, or, in other words, the difference between the cash remitted to the Association and the revenue according to the books kept for the magazine.

The records kept during 1914 are in memoranda form only and we found them of very little value in ascertaining the status of the business. The salaries and bills were paid by the Association but we found that in the books kept for the magazine many of these payments had been omitted and we were obliged to compile the expenses from the Association books. At 1st January, 1915, however a regular set of accounts were opened which would have been quite satisfactory if an effort had been made to keep the balance due to the Association in agreement with the Association books but as this had not been done we found it necessary to make a large number of adjustments.

The following is a statement of the Assets and Liabilities at 30th June, 1915:

Assets:
Furniture and Fixtures		$1,445.95
Inventory—Paper		2,179.93
Post Office Deposit		290.85
Cash on Hand		123.81
Accounts Receivable		1,512.19
		5,552.73
Liabilities:

Less—Deficit		55,177.62
		2,505.75
Accounts Payable		3,046.98
		5,552.73

This statement is shown on Schedule 15 which also includes the balances at 1st January, 1915. No depreciation has been written off from the furniture and fixtures.

General.—In the course of our work we found that a large number of payments were not supported by properly receipted vouchers or detailed statements. We have been advised that many of these statements were lost at the time of the fire. All the transactions pertaining to the general operations are recorded in a distribution book, the totals of which are not posted to a general ledger and the accounts with the salesmen and employes have been kept in a very unsatisfactory manner. In short both the bookkeeping and the method of filing the checks and other documents pertaining to the accounts, were incomplete in almost every detail.

We are pleased to report however that the officers and staff assisted us in every way and we have no reason to believe that all the funds have not been fully accounted for in one way or another.

Yours respectfully,

BARROW, WADE, GUTHRIE & Co.

Maj. HUMES. To explain fully the activities of the National Association of Commerce and Labor we submit a report, marked "Exhibit No. 74," from L. H. Gibson and Gale M. Hartley, the field men and organization men of that bureau, to the United States Brewers' Association, submitted through Mr. Andreae, covering the campaigns of 1914, and I will read simply a portion of it in order that you may have an idea of their activities.

EXHIBIT No. 74.

Miscellaneous.

NOVEMBER 14, 1914.

The president and the board of trustees, of the United States Brewers' Association, New Orleans, La.

GENTLEMEN: I beg to present the enclosed report of the operations of my organization during the past twelve months. The report has been prepared under my direction, by Mr. L. H. Gibson, who is in charge of the organization and publicity departments of my bureau, and, as it covers the ground as fully as is possible in a written document, I take leave to submit it in its entirety for your information.

I enclose likewise a statement of the expenditures connected with the work reported on, showing a total expenditure over eighteen months of $271,685.09 and total receipts as follows:

From the U. S. Brewers' Association	320,000.00
From the Nat'l Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association	90,000.00
Interest on funds in bank	2,907.14
	$412,907.14

The balance on hand November 1, 1914 was $141,222.05, against which liabilities of a corresponding amount have been incurred, as set forth in my letter to the Chairman of the Finance Committee dated October 15, 1914.

I have not dwelt especially upon the activities of the National Association of Commerce and Labor, which was formed at the instance of the U. S. Brewers' Association in Atlantic City in October, 1913, because the activities of that Association are practically identical with those covered by the report. The only feature relating to that Association not mentioned in the report is the method adopted by the National Association of Commerce and Labor to collect funds from its members by means of discount stamps to be purchased from that Association and affixed to invoices of goods delivered, either by those members themselves, or by the brewing firms with which they have dealings. By means of this method it has been hoped that it will prove possible to obtain such additional funds as will be sufficient to extend the operations described in the enclosed report in such manner as to carry out in its entirety the work outlined by me when I undertook to organize those elements of the country which are either directly or indirectly interested in defeating the aims of the prohibitionists.

It will be remembered by all at whose instance and desire I undertook the task entrusted to me that the amount which I estimated it would require annually to carry out this work was about five times greater than that which has actually been placed at my disposal. In other words, I have been obliged to reduce my plan of operations to one-fifth of that which was originally contemplated, and the cessation of payments to my funds by the United States Brewers' Association since October 1st has of course not only placed me in a position of considerable uncertainty as to the future prosecution of my work but has jeopardized the permanent value of the work already done. I am not aware to what extent these facts are known to the industry at large, but a knowledge of them is certainly required to enable those interested to draw a fair comparison between that which has been accomplished and the means placed at my command with which to accomplish it.

I am, very respectfully,

[Percy Andreae.]

NOVEMBER 14, 1914.

Mr. PERCY ANDREAE,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: With the close of the campaigns of 1914, a review of the work accomplished by your bureau during the past year will undoubtedly be of interest.

Under your direction the plans outlined by you have been carried in nearly all instances to a successful fruition by those who have been privileged to follow your command. A brief résumé of the work of the several departments of your bureau will best tell the story.

Undoubtedly one of the most important factors developed, from an organization standpoint, is that of the relationship you have established with the so-called foreign-language elements though their representative publications in the United States. At this date, 683 newspapers with a total circulation of approximately 7,500,000 are republishing in twenty-nine languages the articles on Personal Liberty appearing bi-weekly over the name of Louis N. Hammerling in the American Leader and working towards a general organization among the readers of these newspapers in defense of the people's liberties.

For your information I want to say that the documentary evidence will establish that the articles in the American Leader, referred to, over the name of Louis N. Hammerling, were really written by Mr. Andreae; and in order to conceal the identity of the authorship Mr. Hammerling's name as president of the Foreign Language Newspaper Association was used as the author, and that was part of the written contract between Hammerling and Andreae.

The effectiveness of this work among the foreign language citizens was clearly demonstrated in the campaign in Ohio, where in all of the cities where the naturalized foreigner was to be found, decisive victory came to those opposing prohibition, and advocating home rule, and the activity to which the foreign citizens were aroused in that State was probably one of the greatest contributing factors to our success.

Equal in importance to the development of this element of organiaztion were the measures adopted to bring the German-American Alliance into harmonious accord with your plans. The very effective work accomplished by the Indianapolis Bureau of the German-American Alliance established under your direction has been most strikingly evidenced in the campaigns waged in Texas, Iowa and Ohio. Specific reference to those campaigns, with the work done by the German-American Alliance Bureau, will be made later in this report.

As another important phase of the work developed from a national organization standpoint, we may mention the action of the United Brewery Workers, who through their official publication, have carried on an aggressive publicity campaign, the articles being supplied from this office, and appearing regularly in their columns.

Senator STERLING. By "this office," what office is meant?

Maj. HUMES. The Andreae office; the office of the National Association of Commerce and Labor.

Senator STERLING. Oh, yes.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

These articles have been copied in many of the labor papers of the United States, and have contributed their share in rousing organized labor to opposition to prohibition.

See your report to the President of the U. S. Brewers' Association of April 23, 1914.

In reference to nation-wide prohibition the work done under your direction in apprising Congress of the sentiment existing throughout the country against national prohibition requires special mention. You will recall that early in January of this year, you called a meeting of many prominent brewers and liquor men to meet with you here in Chicago for the purpose of canvassing the situation as it affected nation-wide prohibition in their several States. (See your report to the President of the U. S. Brewers' Association of January 23, 1914.) At this meeting there were forty-four present, as representatives from sixteen States. The resolution of protest against nation-wide prohibition to be sent to Congress placed before the meeting by you, was adopted, and an aggressive campaign immediately begun to see that such protests, either in petition or individual form, were circulated throughout the country for signature. The work done by the brewers, distillers, wholesale liquor dealers, and the members of the allied trades, resulted in thousands of protests being filed in Washington, and this work was further augmented by that of the United Brewery Workers, German-American Alliance, and the foreign language elements, with the result that it is estimated that more than four million people in the United States made it apparent to Congress that they were opposed to nation-wide prohibition. In order to insure the proper attention to the protests as they poured in upon the senators and congressmen in Washington, you directed two of your staff to proceed to Washington and, with the assistance of friends on the spot, to follow up these protests and arrange for their proper presentation to the Congress. In illustration of the effect of this campaign it may be pointed out that previous to the time that the protests were filed with Congress, the general concensus of opinion at the national capitol was that if either the Hobson, Sheppard, or Works resolutions should be pressed to a vote, the necessary two-thirds in both branches would register in favor of submitting a nation-wide prohibition resolution to the various States for ratification or rejection. Within six weeks after the protests began to pour in upon Congress, the sentiment had undergone such a thorough change that it was the general opinion in Washington that nation-wide prohibition would not receive more than a majority vote instead of the two-thirds vote in either branch of the national Congress. When the protests began to grow by thousands, and even millions, the sentiment underwent a further change, to the extent that it became the fixed opinion of the best informed in Washington that it was doubtful whether prohibition would even receive a majority of the votes. A further indication of the effectiveness of this protest work can be found in the changed attitude of those in charge of the prohibition campaign at Washington. At first the prohibitionists insisted upon their measure being reported out of committee, and pressed to a vote. Later, with the change of sentiment, largely caused by these protests, they did everything in their power to keep the Rules Committee from reporting a special rule to bring the measure to a vote, fearing that it would be overwhelmingly defeated as the result in part at least of the protests filed with Congress and their effect upon the members.

The rapidity with which the various liberal elements responded to your call upon the protest matter can be shown by one instance. When word was received by you that the Judiciary Committee of the House had reported the Hobson resolution to the House, and that a special rule would likely bring it to the floor for a vote, within twelve hours after that information had been received every brewer and the allied elements of your organization had been informed of the action, and urged to forward immediately telegraphic or written personal protests from as many people as could be secured to send such protests.

Senator STERLING. Maj. Humes, right there, what do you understand to be included in "the allied elements of your organization"?

Senator OVERMAN. Everybody that sold to barrooms—persons who dealt in pickles and cigars and bottles and cheese; everything that barrooms use.

Maj. HUMES. You will notice from the record that there have been organized all over the country organizations known as manufacturers' and dealers' clubs and associations. It was through those organizations that there has been an effort made, and a very successful effort in most instances, to bring together all of the business interests who deal with or sell to the brewers or the liquor dealers in any way.

Senator STERLING. Those are some of the associations referred to by Mr. McDermott in his testimony awhile ago?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; and the National Association of Commerce and Labor is supposed to be an organization of those allied interests. The records that have been offered in evidence show that at Atlantic City in 1913 this meeting was called in connection with the meeting of the United States Brewers' Association, and during their convention, for the purpose of organizing all of these allied trades into an organization to be identified with the brewers and financed by the brewers, but with a view of preventing the public generally from knowing of the alliance.

Senator OVERMAN. And blacklisting everybody who took part in advocating prohibition.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

Fifteen hundred telegrams were sent from your office upon that subject, and the response was so ready that by the afternoon of the next day every Senator and Congressman had received hundreds of telegraphic protests, which were further strengthened and augmented by thousands of written protests.

It was at about this time that the hotel men of the United States invited you to address them upon the subject of nation-wide prohibition at a special meeting of their association held in New York City. As a result of your address they adopted resolutions and appointed a committee to take a poll, upon a specified date, of their guests and their attitude toward nation-wide prohibition, such poll to be carried forward under your direction, through your Bureau. The committee appointed by the hotel men sent to the 22,000 hotels in the United States, a letter urging them to assist in the taking of such poll, and it is gratifying to note that nearly 8,000 responded favorably, and expressed their willingness to assist in the taking of the poll at any date specified. These 8,000 hotels are the principal ones in the country. (See your report to the President of the U. S. Brewers' Association on April 23, 1914.)

While referring to the wide publicity of the movement against nation-wide prohibition obtained through your address at the Hotel-men's Convention, it may be noted that the publicity secured through the foreign language newspapers undoubtedly came as the result of your address to the 600 publishers of foreign language newspapers in New York City February 7th. This address led to a wide discussion by leading statesmen and educators throughout the country, and brought added publicity through most of the leading newspapers in the United States. It also led to meetings in various centers of the country between you and the publishers of foreign language newspapers, at which discussions of the ways and means of utilizing the enormous influence of this organized press in furtherance of liberal ideas was held.

The address delivered by you July 22nd at Cleveland, on the Need of a National Liberty Day, secured wide publicity, and many State organizations thought it of sufficient merit to use it extensively in their State campaigns.

Your publicity department early in July established a weekly news service, which is being sent to the weekly and semi-weekly newspapers throughout the United States, and from which excellent results have followed showing that in the few months during which this news service has been in operation 614 weekly newspapers published in 32 states have accepted the service and have published 1308 special articles emphasizing the liberal side of the temperance question.

Another phase of general publicity is the monthly magazine issued through your Publicity Department which goes to 150,000 bona fide subscribers in the various States of the Union. This magazine is one devoted to topics of interest to both men and women, and in every issue carries an article favorable to the liberal cause. It is in every way a legitimate magazine and receives a considerable advertising patronage. It is largely read among the farming population, and the circulation is increasing appreciably every week.

Senator OVERMAN. What magazine is that?

Maj. HUMES. The Hearthstone was the name of it. It has since been abolished. (Reading:)

Another effective means of publicity established by you was when arrangements were recently made to take over control of, and direct the movements of the National Model License League. This organization has an established name throughout the country, and is the means of securing extensive dissemination of friendly matter. The fact that you are directing its movements will bring it into more harmonious accord with the general plans of publicity and organization established in national and state campaigns.

Early in June, 1913, the brewers of Iowa requested you to outline a plan of campaign for their State and expressed a willingness to follow the details of such plan when they were perfected. The brewers of Iowa stated that they were confronted with complete annihilation unless it were possible to so educate the people of the State that a majority in either branch of their Legislature would oppose state-wide prohibition and favor some constructive form of legislation that would result in option elections instead of the present petition system. Following your instructions, your organization department had a complete survey of the State made to ascertain the actual conditions existing in the State, and upon this survey an analysis of those conditions was made, and a general plan of campaign outlined. The first fight in connection with that campaign occurred at the primaries held in Iowa June 1st, 1914. Previous to that time the Indianapolis German-American Alliance Bureau, at your direction, sent several of its very best men into the State to awaken the Germans to a realization of the detriments that state-wide prohibition would bring to Iowa. Correspondence with the leading clergy throughout the State was established from headquarters resulting in the enlistment of the liberal clergy throughout the State in an aggressive campaign against the fanatical dry element, and through the work of these and other men the German-American Alliance was made a strong and effective ally in the fight. At the same time that the men from the Indianapolis bureau entered the State your organization department sent labor organizers into Iowa, whose duty it was to arouse as far as possible the labor element of the State, and in this direction excellent work was also accomplished. Perhaps the most gratifying condition found to exist in Iowa was the complete willingness of the brewers of that State, and their counsel, Mr. Henry Thuenen, of Davenport, to follow out the plans of campaign suggested by you. It is to the great intelligence shown and the extraordinarily effective work accomplished by the representatives of the industry in Iowa in carrying out the plan of campaign that the satisfactory outcome of the same has been primarily due. The result of the primaries in Iowa can best be described by a quotation from a letter received from Mr. Thuenen in which he spoke of the excellent results obtained by him, as follows:

"I am free to say that in my judgment, this contest could not have possibly been successful had it not been for the effectiveness of the organization created by us under your direction. Generally after a contest of this character one can figure a great many things which were neglected or which should have been done, but as I look back upon this contest I feel that every element of organization possible in the State was developed to its best and greatest strength, and that without this organization we must have met with an humiliating defeat."

The result of the primary election in Iowa is said to have been equalled in the general election held in that State November 3rd.

Early in December, 1913, three of the leading brewers of Texas visited your bureau in this city and requested you to suggest plans for a campaign to be conducted in that State. These gentlemen stated that they were confronted with a campaign which might result in the election of a prohibition Governor, the Submission of a Prohibition Constitutional Amendment, either by the approval of the voters at their primaries, to be held in July, or by the submission by the legislature if two-thirds of both branches of that body should consist of prohibitionists. From this it may be seen that the contest in Texas was extremely complicated, presenting as it did at least three phases. Upon their request to you and under instructions from you, your organization department made a survey of the State of Texas, and a complete analysis was made of the conditions existing in the State based upon the survey. This was a stupendous undertaking, from the fact that there are two hundred and fifty-three counties in the State, and that the analysis not only had to be made from a state-wide standpoint, but also from the standpoint of the Senatorial District, the straight House Legislative District, and the Flotorial Legislative District. Upon the completion of the survey and when the analyses had been partially completed, a conference was held with Mr. R. L. Autrey, who had been designated by the brewers of Texas to represent them in the active campaign, and Mr. Rollins M. Colquitt, who had been chosen as the Manager of the campaign. The reports covered by the survey, together with the analyses, were turned over to Mr. Colquitt, and taken by him to Texas. Following the conference referred to, the Indianapolis bureau of the German-American Alliance, at your request, sent several very capable men into Texas, where they proceeded to develop the elements of organization in that direction along identically the same lines followed in Iowa. Your organization department likewise sent an active and intelligent labor man into the State, and so effective was his work that, for the first time in the history of the Texas State Federation of Labor, it passed by an almost unanimous vote a resolution at its El Paso Convention, denouncing the iniquities of state-wide prohibition, and pledging its support to the anti-prohibition candidate for governor, and against the submission of state-wide prohibition. In explanation of this action it might be well to state at this time that the prohibitionists of Texas had nominated Thomas H. Ball for Governor. Mr. Ball was one of the strongest men that could possibly have been put forward by the prohibitionists. The Anti-prohibitionists had centered upon James E. Ferguson, who was well and favorably known as a banker and farmer, but who did not have an extensive acquaintance throughout the State as a politician. The prohibitionists had also petitioned for the Submission at the primaries of a resolution binding the Legislature to submit in 1915 the question of state-wide prohibition. It is herewith appropriate to state in Texas if the voters approve a resolution of this character at the Democratic Primaries, that it binds the Legislature to its fulfillment. That the plan of campaign suggested by you to those in charge of the fight in Texas gradually unfolded itself and proved to be all claimed for it, is evidenced by a letter received by your organization department from Mr. Rollins M. Colquitt, Manager of the Texas campaign, under date of June 2nd, when the entries for the Primaries had been closed. The quotations from Mr. Colquitt's letter are as follows:

"I have found the reports extremely valuable, especially in providing complete information for the men who are going to handle special districts and who had some particular work to perform." ———

"The County Chairmen ——— have used the different elements of organization suggested in the reports to the best advantage and I believe when the vote is counted in July that the effect of this organization will be apparent."

"In several of the counties we have succeeded in accomplishing wonderful results."

That Mr. Colquitt's prediction was fully substantiated by the vote in July, is of course, a matter of history. Mr. Ferguson, the Anti-prohibition candidate, succeeded in defeating Thomas H. Ball, the Prohibition candidate. Submission was defeated, and a sufficient number of Senators were elected to make it impossible for the prohibitionists to have two-thirds of this body, while the Anti-prohibition membership in the House is also sufficiently large to make it impossible for the prohibitionists to have two-thirds of that body.

The character of the work done by the organization department of your Bureau in Texas has been referred to in a letter received from Mr. R. L. Autrey, from which the following extracts have been taken:

"I will tell you frankly that the data gathered by your men under your plan of survey is very valuable. In fact, it is indispensable to the manager of a campaign who is not acquainted with the ground over which he expects to operate.—The Texas campaign took a turn of radical departure from the old line of political fights. In fact, it assumed an antithetical aspect to the old political style of campaigns and its success turned and hinged on that very feature, attacking the old politician and throwing him into the discard."

From the above remarks of Mr. Austry, and the already quoted letter from Mr. Colquitt, it will be seen that the willingness of the brewers of Texas to cooperate fully in the plan suggested by you was as enthusiastically granted as by the brewers of Iowa, and consequently it is of some gratification that we could at least contribute some share to the excellent results secured in that State by those in charge of the general campaign there.

Upon the completion of the survey in the State of Texas, the brewers of Illinois requested that a survey be made of that State in time if possible for use in the local option elections held April 27th, and for such future use as they might desire to make of it. The survey in Illinois was completed early in March, and was turned over to Austin Doyle, of the Illinois Brewers' Association, and by him distributed to the representatives of the Illinois Brewers' Association in several sections of the State. It is our understanding that the survey reports were used with a great degree of success in the local option campaigns, and have been used in a general way in the recent state campaign.

In April of this year your organization department, upon your instructions, was represented at a conference held at the Jefferson Hotel in Richmond, Virginia, to discuss the campaign about to be waged in that State. At this meeting your representatives suggested a survey of the State, and a campaign based upon the plans which such a survey might deveolp. Those in charge of the fight in Virginia were not willing to make the preliminary expenditure which the survey would entail to ascertain the conditions existing in the State and the possibilities from an organization standpoint. When this matter was reported to you from this Department, your instructions to proceed and survey the State were followed, and upon the completion of the survey the data gathered, together with the analysis based upon the information contained in the survey, was placed before Mr. Paul Garrett, who was managing the Virginia campaign, President Schmidt of the United States Brewers' Association, and Mr. John Gardiner, at a meeting held in Cincinnati. Under your instructions a man was sent to Virginia, representing your Bureau, in order to give such advice as might be required regarding the method of utilizing the information contained in the survey. His work largely developed in arousing the tobacco people of Virginia to the necessity of actively opposing state-wide prohibition. If this phase of the campaign in Virginia could not prevent the unfortunate issue in that State, we at least know that certain documentary evidence regarding the real attitude of the prohibitionists towards the tobacco industry procured by our operatives in Virginia has been used with striking effect in other tobacco growing districts of the Union, causing the tobacco interests to realize for the first time that an attack upon tobacco will inevitably follow and is in many instances indeed already co-extensive with the campaign for prohibition.

About the middle of June, representatives of this Department accompanied you to Louisville, Kentucky, where a conference was held with those representing the industry in that State, at which meeting you were requested to make a survey of the State of Kentucky looking to a state-wide prohibition contest, which seems to be inevitable there.

See your letter to the President of the U. S. Brewers' Association of June 18, 1914.

At this meeting you were asked whether it would be possible to make an immediate survey in 16 counties of the State where county option elections were threatened by the prohibitionists as a result of the county option bill passed in Kentucky by the last legislature. The survey in these sixteen counties was started immediately, and the reports from the counties were placed in the hands of Mr. Sidney Story, who had been chosen by the interests in that State to supervise the county option elections, so far as it was possible to have the people in the various counties accede to suggestions or direction from a central head. It was generally conceded at this meeting by those who had been active in affairs in Kentucky that there was a likelihood that all but two of the sixteen counties would be lost to the prohibitionists. The survey of the sixteen counties showed that two of the counties could certainly be carried against the prohibitionists; that three of them were substantially hopeless, and that eleven of them presented a fair opportunity for organization. Instead of sixteen counties holding elections, fifteen of them held elections, and of the fifteen counties nine went for prohibition and six went against prohibition.

To assist the people in Kentucky your instructions to this Department to send experienced men from the Department into Kentucky to assist them in outlining and perfecting plans of organization, were complied with, and the work done by these men was of undoubted assistance in producing the results which followed in the county option elections. The survey of the balance of the State has been completed, and at the earliest possible moment a complete analysis, based upon the survey, with recommendations for the plan of campaign, will be placed in the hands of those in charge of affairs in Kentucky.

Should you desire to make this report public, it might be well to state for the information of those who have not been in close touch with the work of your bureau during the past year, that the men assigned to State campaigns in cases where those campaigns were conducted upon the basis of a survey previously made by you have been at the expense of your bureau.

Undoubtedly the greatest success which has to be recorded at the recent elections was the result in Ohio. (See your report to the President of the U. S. Brewers' Association of June 30, 1914.) Early in June representatives from your organization department accompanied you to Cincinnati, where, at a conference held with those interested in the industry in that State, your advice and counsel was asked as to the advisability of submitting a constitutional amendment which would have the effect of repealing the County Option law, and inhibiting future Legislatures from passing statutory state-wide prohibition. It was pointed out in that meeting that should such action be taken, that the Anti-Saloon League might retaliate with a constitutional amendment providing for state-wide prohibition. Your argument in reply to this objection was that should the league be foolish enough to submit State-wide prohibition, it would add to the prospects of securing the passage of the amendment repealing County Option. It was extremely fortunate that the man in charge of the Ohio campaign, Mr. Graham P. Hunt, was one who had enlisted under your banner some four or five years ago, while you were in charge of affairs in Ohio, and had received the full knowledge and benefit of your work in that State which had resulted so successfully in writing mandatory license into the Constitution of the State. At the meeting referred to, in Cincinnati, when it was decided to initiate a constitutional amendment providing for the repeal of the County Option law, your instructions issued to this department to throw as many available men into the State to assist in the circulation of the petitions was immediately complied with, and the whole force which had been engaged in the survey work in other States, was immediately placed at the disposal of Mr. Hunt to arrange for the circulation of the petitions. As a result of the efforts put forth by this force, augmenting the force already at the disposal of the Ohio campaign manager, 304,062 voters of Ohio affixed their signatures to the petitions for the amendment in less than thirty days' time, and this mammoth petition was filed with the Secretary of State on August 4th. True to the prediction made at the meeting in Cincinnati in June, the Anti-Saloon League, upon the announcement that the liberals would petition for the repeal of County Option, began the circulation of petitions providing for Constitutional prohibition, and filed on August 4th, with the Secretary of State, 175,000 signatures, or 129,000 less than those signing the liberal petition. In the waging of the contest in Ohio, Mr. Hunt very frankly stated that he was depending more largely upon your counsel and advise, and the assistance which the men under your direction would render to successfully carry on the campaign, than he was on anything else. Your organization department put all of its available men in Ohio and kept them there from early in September until the election was held.

The address delivered by you at Cleveland in July and your conferences with the publishers of the foreign language press aroused the foreign language element to an activity never before known, and, as stated before, contributed largely to the success of the Ohio campaign. The foreign language newspapers rallied to the liberal support in a way that astonished those who had been familiar with the conduct of past campaigns in that State. The German-American Alliance, co-operating with you, was stirred to renewed activity. One of the remarkable features of the campaign came as a result of the excellent work performed by the United Brewery Workers, and through them by all liberal elements of organized labor. The Brewery Workers of Ohio established labor headquarters in all of the labor centers of the State, and were in complete harmony with the local liberal organizations in those countries. As a result of the magnificent work done by this element, strengthened by the work of the labor representatives from your bureau, the State Federation of Labor at its meeting in Youngstown early in October, passed a resolution opposing state-wide prohibition, and in favor of a constitutional amendment repealing the County Option law. Your plans of campaign were strictly followed in Ohio with the result that prohibition was defeated by approximately 85,000 votes, and strictly local option is written into the constitution of the State, with an inhibition against statutory state-wide prohibition by a majority approximating 15,000. The constructive plan carried forward by you during the past five years in Ohio has resulted in mandatory license being written into the constitution of the State; with local option a part of the organic law, and with the legislature of the State curtailed in its power to the exent that it cannot pass statutory prohibition.

As a summary in closing, it might be well to state that the constructive system of organization embodied in your educational plan of campaign has proven to be effective wherever tried, and wherever it has been applied by those in charge of the campaign.

Respectfully submitted.

L. H. GIBSON.
GALE M. HARTLEY.

The principal means for publicity used by your publicity department are The Hearthstone and The National News Bureau.

You began obtaining subscriptions for The Hearthstone about July 1, 1914. With a view of obtaining the circulation deemed best for your particular purpose, you eliminated the large cities and devoted your entire attention to the small town and rural community. In December you will print and distribute 130,000 copies of The Hearthstone, each one of them going directly to the homes where it will be read by an average of four persons. You are obtaining indi-

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Hammerling, you will be sworn.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you reside?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 104 East Fortieth Street, New York.

Maj. HUMES. What is your business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am president of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. The American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers is a corporation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. When was it organized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1908.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the incorporators?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The incorporators were E. M. Grilla, Mr. Carpenter—I do not remember his initials, but he was an attorney.

Maj. HUMES. Edwin E. Carpenter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was an attorney for the company when it was organized—Oliver C. Carpenter, I think was the name; and Mr. Gates. I think he was Mr. Carpenter's assistant.

Maj. HUMES. At whose instance was the charter secured?

Mr. HAMMERLING. At Mr. Carpenter's, I think.

Maj. HUMES. At whose instance did they get this charter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mine.

Senator NELSON. What did you organize it for? What was your object?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I bought out an advertising agency called the Italian-American Advertising Agency.

Senator NELSON. You are not an Italian?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, I am not; but I used to deal with these papers, and we saw that to get around the Italian na- there was not much business to do with the Italian changed it to the association.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Hammerling, you will be sworn.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you reside?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 104 East Fortieth Street, New York.

Maj. HUMES. What is your business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am president of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. The American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers is a corporation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. When was it organized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1908.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the incorporators?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The incorporators were E. M. Grilla, Mr. Carpenter—I do not remember his initials, but he was an attorney.

Maj. HUMES. Edwin E. Carpenter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was an attorney for the company when it was organized—Oliver C. Carpenter, I think was the name; and Mr. Gates. I think he was Mr. Carpenter's assistant.

Maj. HUMES. At whose instance was the charter secured?

Mr. HAMMERLING. At Mr. Carpenter's, I think.

Maj. HUMES. At whose instance did they get this charter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mine.

Senator NELSON. What did you organize it for? What was your object?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I bought out an advertising agency called the Italian-American Advertising Agency.

Senator NELSON. You are not an Italian?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, I am not; but I used to deal with these Italian newspapers, and we saw that to get around the Italian nation—you see there was not much business to do with the Italian papers, so we changed it to the association.

Maj. HUMES. And you bought out Mr. Grilla in the transaction?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. And acquired your interest?
Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that he had a daily paper and he could not give it much time.
Senator NELSON. For what purpose did you get it?
Mr. HAMMERLING. To get advertising in the foreign-language newspapers.
Senator NELSON. Political or business?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Commercial.
Senator NELSON. Commercial exclusively?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. We took political advertising when they gave it to us.
Senator NELSON. Was not that a part of your scheme—to get political as well as commercial advertising?
Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not a scheme. Every advertising agency does that.
Senator NELSON. Was not that your plan?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No.
Senator NELSON. You had nothing of that kind in view?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No.
Maj. HUMES. Where had you resided prior to your coming to New York?
Mr. HAMMERLING. In Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
Maj. HUMES. What had been your business there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I was connected with a Polish paper there and handled advertising for the United Mine Workers' Journal and that Polish paper, and I took contracts for printing.
Maj. HUMES. What induced you or who induced you to go to New York?
Mr. HAMMERLING. The Republican national committee.
Maj. HUMES. In 1908?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No; in 1904. I came to New York in 1904, and I handled the campaign for them with the foreign papers—the advertising.
Maj. HUMES. What did you do from 1904 until 1908?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I did advertising in these papers that I just mentioned.
Maj. HUMES. You continued your connection with this Italian agency from 1904 to 1908?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I had no connection. I did it under my own name.
Maj. HUMES. Under your own name until 1908?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. At whose suggestion did you organize the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I made the suggestion. In May, 1908, to be exact, I decided with Mr. Grilla to go into the business in New York, and in November we began business, the first part of November.
Senator OVERMAN. What date was that?
Mr. HAMMERLING. The first part of November, 1908.
Senator OVERMAN. That is, after you had left Wilkes-Barre at the instance of the Republican campaign committee, you went to New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Nelson asked you a question as to whether this advertising agency had anything to do with political advertising.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Why, before I ever dreamed of advertising I was asked by Senator Quay and Senator Penrose to come down and help them handle this campaign.

Senator NELSON. That was in 1904?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Before you formed the company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not return to Wilkes-Barre after the 1904 campaign?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How did you stay in Wilkes-Barre at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was elected in 1908 again, so I was there until 1908.

Maj. HUMES. You were elected what?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A delegate to the Republican national convention.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have charge of political advertising for the Republican national committee in 1908?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; in some of the foreign-language papers.

Maj. HUMES. Who suggested to you the organization of this association of foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am telling you that when I agreed to take the Italian agency I saw that we could not do business under that name, so we changed it. I do not remember exactly who was at the meeting. I consulted a few publishers of different languages. I know a good many of them.

Maj. HUMES. When you decided to launch this new organization, what means did you take of bringing together the publishers of the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I sent out a circular letter with a blank telling them that if they would subscribe to the preferred stock of the association we could build up a great business. They did not need to pay cash, I said, for one-half of the advertising that we were to place could be used to reduce their indebtedness for the stock, from one share to four shares. Nobody had more than that. The stock was sold as preferred stock.

Maj. HUMES. To whom was it sold?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the publishers of these newspapers.

Senator NELSON. How much stock did your company issue?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Fifty thousand dollars of preferred.

Senator NELSON. How much common?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Fifty thousand dollars.

Senator NELSON. What was the preferred stock per share?

Mr. HAMMERLING. One hundred dollars.

Senator NELSON. What was the common?

Mr. HAMMERLING. One hundred dollars.

Senator NELSON. Did you sell the stock at par?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Both common and preferred?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Both common and preferred.

Senator OVERMAN. How much stock did you have?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Two hundred and ninety shares of the common.
Senator OVERMAN. You have a majority of the stock?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Of the common; yes.
Maj. HUMES. How many shares of the common stock are outstanding other than what you have?
Mr. HAMMERLING. There are 470 shares outstanding, including mine.
Senator OVERMAN. Are there any stockholders except the publishers?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Of the preferred stock; no.
Senator OVERMAN. Of the common?
Mr. HAMMERLING. There are no publishers who own the common stock.
Senator OVERMAN. Who are the principal stockholders of common stock?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I have a list of them. There is Carmalita Lewis and John Mitchell——
Senator OVERMAN. You can furnish a list of the stockholders?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Senator NELSON. You can put that list in afterward.
Mr. HAMMERLING. Very well.
Senator NELSON. That would save the time of hunting it up. You started in to do political advertising, did you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Senator NELSON. You did political advertising after your company was formed?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I did in 1912 advertising for the Republicans.
Senator NELSON. What I want to know is how you managed that business. Did you collect for all the newspapers? Did you collect the fee for the publishing of political advertisements for the whole lot?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No.
Senator NELSON. Did you collect the money?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We sent the bill.
Senator NELSON. They all paid you?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Senator NELSON. How did you distribute those funds that you received?
Mr. HAMMERLING. By check.
Senator NELSON. What proportion?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Less the commission.
Senator NELSON. What was your commission?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Anywhere from 10 to 15 per cent. It depends on what the papers give.
Senator NELSON. How did you distribute the money?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Why, the State committee submits a list of papers to the national chairman that they want to use, and the papers have regular rates; they have a rate card showing what they charge for advertising. In 1916 they bought 30,000 lines in the dailies, 20,000 lines in the semiweeklies, and 10,000 lines in the weeklies, according to the rate which was paid.
Senator NELSON. And you collected this rate then?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You collected this full rate for the advertisement and retained from 10 to 15 per cent commission?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know the total amount that you collected in that year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1916?

Senator OVERMAN. In 1912.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Over $100,000; I think $104,000 or $105,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Did the national committee furnish that money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The Republican national committee paid it.

Senator KING. Maj. Humes, I suppose you have in an orderly way prepared to present whatever you deem may be testified to by this witness?

Maj. HUMES. I have a summary of what I think ought to be shown by this witness.

Senator KING. Then I shall not ask any questions until you get through.

Senator NELSON. Proceed, Maj. Humes.

Maj. HUMES. When you organized this American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, how did you put yourself in touch with the foreign language newspapers and with the advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We sent out a circular. We had the paper subscribe to the stock. They sent in the rates and we began to do business.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not start this association with a banquet?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. We had the first banquet a year after, in 1909. We had it at the Republican Club in New York.

Maj. HUMES. About when was this banquet held in 1909?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In November, to celebrate the first year.

Maj. HUMES. Who was invited to be present at that banquet?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Business men and publishers.

Maj. HUMES. How many publishers were present?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Every one of them from New York and Philadelphia and all of the neighboring places, and some of them came from as far away as Chicago. The list shows.

Maj. HUMES. Were all of the foreign language newspaper editors there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, not all of the 700; no.

Maj. HUMES. Were all the publishers present, all who attended this banquet, given presents by you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We always gave a souvenir—a fountain pen or a pencil—every year.

Maj. HUMES. Didn't you give a number of presents that year to these publishers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. Who presided at that banquet?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did.

Maj. HUMES. Whom else did you invite to attend the banquet? I mean other than publishers.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of big men?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; men of prominence?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think Mr. Cortelyou was one, the new president of the Consolidated Gas Co. I really could not remember, but a good many prominent business men. We invited them so that they could see that we had not any horns.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Mr. Cortelyou the chairman of the Republican national campaign committee at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; Mr. Hitchcock was.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the first time you ever appeared in public as president of the association was when you were introduced to make a speech at that banquet as the president of the association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know who introduced me. I think I did the introducing.

Maj. HUMES. Is not that the first time that you ever publicly appeared as the president of this association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. I got all the business. I was soliciting advertising.

Maj. HUMES. And you also invited to this banquet a number of the big advertising concerns of the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The Standard Oil advertising managers and the American Tobacco Co.?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And a number of big advertising agencies?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You also invited the Attorney General of the United States to be present, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that year. The next year I did.

Maj. HUMES. Was he not there that year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember. I have not the list before me.

Maj. HUMES. You had three or four members of the Cabinet present.

Mr. HAMMERLING. One year; yes.

Maj. HUMES. What year was that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think 1911. I am sure that it was.

Maj. HUMES. You got these men of prominence and men who occupied conspicuous places in the Government to attend these banquets, and then capitalized that with the publishers of the foreign-language newspapers over the country, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know how I capitalized that. These men in public life were very glad to come.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not seek to secure the attendance of prominent men at these banquets in order to give you standing with the foreign-language newspaper editors and induce them to think that you had standing with the Government?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had all the standing I wanted among them. I kept out of the business all of the crooks in the advertising business, the medical fellows, and the stock sellers, and all of those people. Senator Nelson is here and he can ask the Swedish newspapers in his State. I did not need any influence with these papers.

Maj. HUMES. When you bought your interest in this Italian newspaper how much did you invest?

Mr. HAMMERLING. With Mr. Grilla?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I agreed to invest about $14,000, but it might cost me $20,000 before I was through, because his statement of indebtedness was not correct, and some bills came in afterwards, and I paid them.

Maj. HUMES. How much did you actually pay to him in cash?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think about that, though I would not swear to it, about $20,000, I would say.

Maj. HUMES. Where did the fund come from that made it possible for you to make that investment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. From my own pocket.

Maj. HUMES. What business had you been in just prior to your going to New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was telling you. I was doing advertising for a paper called the United Mine Workers' Journal, getting subscriptions, and for a Polish paper, and I was doing printing. I was doing printing for the State of Pennsylvania in the foreign languages, amounting to thousands of dollars, and all kinds of printing. I do not remember, but I think I did printing for the Bethlehem Steel Co. and for different companies, getting out pamphlets and booklets, and then they had a law in Pennsylvania requiring them to post about accidents in factories and in the mines, and I made a canvass throughout the State and I got an enormous amount of business.

Maj. HUMES. What part did you play in securing the passage of the act of assembly in Pennsylvania requiring the publication of certain official advertisements in the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. None whatever.

Maj. HUMES. There was one passed during the period of your activity, was there not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. It was passed in 1914, and the attorney general declared it unconstitutional.

Maj. HUMES. Was there not an act passed along about 1905 or 1907 requiring municipal advertising to be published in foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I never got a fee for advertising for the State of Pennsylvania in my life.

Maj. HUMES. What were you worth financially when you went to New York and bought out Mr. Grilla?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say that I think that is a personal matter.

Maj. HUMES. I think perhaps that is true, but it is a pertinent matter of inquiry. What were you worth financially when you bought out Mr. Grilla?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A couple of hundred thousand dollars.

Maj. HUMES. Over what period of time had you made that much money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About 10 years.

Maj. HUMES. In the foreign advertising in Pennsylvania and the work you did outside in 1904?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In advertising and printing.

Maj. HUMES. You bought an interest in the Polish paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What did you pay for your interest in that paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Three hundred dollars.

Maj. HUMES. When did you acquire that interest?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In May, 1900.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make all of the $200,000 out of that $300 investment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I did not. I made it with my work.

Maj. HUMES. What other work did you engage in beside this printing and publishing business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is enough.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that all in connection with your paper that you purchased?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I got contracts in printing with some of the largest printers in the United States.

Maj. HUMES. When the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers was organized and you became president of it, you retained practically all of the common stock?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. I paid for it too, 100 cents on the dollar.

Maj. HUMES. You had $50,000 of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you disposed of some of the preferred stock to the publishers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How much of that preferred stock is outstanding today?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Ten thousand five hundred dollars.

Maj. HUMES. Who owns that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The publishers; about 50 of them.

Maj. HUMES. But none of the publishers own any of the common stock?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first secure large advertising contracts from the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. and some of those concerns?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About 1909.

Maj. HUMES. Immediately after the organization of your paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the original purpose of the organization of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers was to exercise political control over the foreign-language publications of the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. I have as much political control over them as the pope has in a synagogue, if you will permit the expression, for the reason that I would have as much influence with a newspaper in Milwaukee as I would with the Jewish Forward in New York. It is not a fair thing to belittle 800 newspapers of great importance by saying that I, through handling 5 per cent of the entire national advertising in the United States, would control them. That is all I handled—about 5 per cent.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first meet Percy Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In the first part of the year—I would say, in the spring, about April—at the Holland House in New York City.

Maj. HUMES. What year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Nineteen thirteen. I met him through Adolphus Busch, president of the Busch industries in St. Louis.

Maj. HUMES. Did you enter into a contract with him at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. Mr. Busch sent for me. I never saw him before in my life, but I came, naturally, knowing what he represents. I am supposed to be a solicitor. I came in there, and he said, "Are you Hammerling?" I said, "Yes." He had a good many of his people standing around, just as if he would be a king. He said, "Charles Nagel told me that you can do us some service in the fight against prohibition." I said, "I am the boy if you have any advertising, and I am here." He said, "I designate a man by the name of Percy Andreae, who has my authority to do business." I said, "Do you guarantee the bills, Mr. Busch?" He said, "Yes." So I went away. A few weeks later Mr. Andreae asked me to meet him in Chicago. I met him in Chicago in some club—I do not remember where it was—he and his secretary, a man named Hartley. Mr. Andreae said that he had gotten not only Busch to guarantee this campaign, but he got the United States Brewers' Association. I said, "So much the better; we can do more business." He said they did not give him as much money as he intended they should, but he would like to make a deal. He said that his idea would be to write articles in the foreign-language newspapers showing there should not be prohibition; and I said, "Mr. Andreae, I am siliciting advertising, and if you write a million articles not one of them would publish it, no matter how good you are, for the reason that you are unknown to them, in the first place, and, in the second place, what they want is money." He said they could not go into an advertising campaign, for they had not enough money for that. I said to him, "How about you writing the articles and their being published in my name?" He said, "That is a good idea. What would it cost?" I said, "There will be no cost to it; but you will have to help me get the brewers to do advertising in the papers." He said he thought he could do that, and I agreed that I would stand to my promise provided he would stand by his; and we worked it out that all the expense Mr. Andreae would have to pay would be to pay for the translators, expressage, and so forth. We were not supposed—the association was not supposed—to make any money out of it outside of handling it, but we were to make our money on the commission that we got in the advertising that we furnished in the foreign papers. We did not get much advertising, and the complaint of Mr. Andreae was that the brewers' association got sore at him because he was getting to be too big a man. That is the way I began to handle his business, and I think in three years every issue, which would be about 66 articles, published an article in the American Leader and sent it out in 34 languages to these papers.

Senator NELSON. Editorials?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Articles. The papers do not publish editorials, our papers, that they write themselves.

Maj. HUMES. Was that all of the contractual relations that existed between you and Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. During three years' time he made a speech, I think, at one of our gatherings, and he made speeches somewhere else, and finally he was kind of knocked down by the brewers. I liked him; he was a very honorable man in the way that he dealt with us. We appointed him to a position of vice president of the association, as our minutes will show.

Maj. HUMES. When was that? That was after he had severed his conection with the brewers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; during the time. We appointed him so that it would help him to make speeches, and he did make some speeches, and that is all we know about it.

Maj. HUMES. There was no agreement between you and Mr. Andreae by which you were to undertake to control the policy of these foreign-language newspapers or what they should publish?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; there is no contract. We never had any contract; only letters.

Maj. HUMES. You had correspondence?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Under that agreement Mr. Andreae or the National Association of Commerce and Labor was to furnish a certain number of translators to translate this material?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; we were to furnish it; we were to do the translation.

Maj. HUMES. They paid for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they paid for it.

Maj. HUMES. They were to pay you so much for translators?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For translators, or whatever it cost to handle it; clerks and stenographers and everything else.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say the only part you played in that was to do the mechanical part of printing, translating, and mailing to the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the papers; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not to undertake to use your influence or persuasion to secure the publication of these articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would not state here that the papers would not have wanted to please me, but I have issued no such instructions. We had a traveling man to go around among the papers and see if they would publish it, but nothing of the kind such as telling the newspapers that they had to publish.

Maj. HUMES. Did you try to use your influence with them to get them to publish these articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you employed a man by the name of Joudan to travel about the country, to visit all of these foreign-language newspapers, and persuade them to print these personal-liberty articles and other editorial matter favorable to the liquor interests?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You did not do that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. Joudan was employed by Mr. Andreae, but he was employed to see if the papers, it is true, would publish these personal-liberty articles and also check up as to circulation, etc.

Maj. HUMES. Was he an employee of Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was an employee of Mr. Andreae; yes; paid directly. The checks and the correspondence will show that.

Maj. HUMES. He represented himself to be an employee of your association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Exactly.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, Mr. Andreae was paying the salary of one of your employees, or one who was representing himself to be one of your employees, for the purpose of visiting the foreign-language press and securing favorable editorial and news comment from them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a letter purporting to be signed by you, dated January 9, 1914, which is marked "Exhibit Hammerling No. 1," and ask you if that is a letter that you wrote to Percy Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is my signature.

Maj. HUMES. Is not that a statement of your understanding of the contract?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have not read it. Hundreds of letters are signed and sent out.

Maj. HUMES. This is signed by you.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. I dictate to 20 different people a day. We have a mark there, "NR," indicating that I do not read them.

Senator WOLCOTT. What does that "NR" mean?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It means "not read." I could not personally read all of them.

Maj. HUMES. I will submit the letter in evidence.

(The letter referred to, marked "Hammerling Exhibit No. 1," is here printed in the record in full, as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT NO. 1.

[American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc. Woolworth Building. Telephone Barclay 5592–5593. Chicago Office, People's Gas Building.]

NR

NEW YORK, January 9, 1914.

Mr. PERCY ANDREAE,
Imperial Hotel, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: As per conversation of last night, I beg to confirm as follows: That the Association membership is comprised of a total of 619 newspapers published in the United States and Canada. In the United States there are 583 of these papers published and the balance, or 36 newspapers, is published in Canada. These papers are printed in 29 different languages and eliminating the Chinese and Japanese leaves 27 languages.

The article on "Personal Liberty" which you write for the "American Leader" and which is published under my name is to be translated and supplied twice a month to 583 newspapers, printed in 27 different languages and as you will see by the enclosed list, this will require the services of eight translators to do the work thoroughly. Besides doing the translating, these translators will have to do the checking and marking of the papers containing the articles and forward same from time to time to you.

Opposite each one of the translators on the statement enclosed, you will notice what each will cost; or, otherwise, the eight translators will cost $1,250.00 per month. We shall hire these translators for one year. Naturally with some of them it may be necessary to take them away from other positions and it may require a longer contract.

The additional expense will be $100.00 per month for a Stenographer and $50.00 for printing and postage per month. One of our Directors will take a trip once, maybe twice or more as is necessary, to see the papers and make arrangements so that we may get their unanimous support and approval. The expenditure on this account will be $400.00 per month as salary and we figure $180.00 per month for travelling expenses, which is $6.00 per day and is figured to cover railroad and hotel expenses. This will make a total expenditure per month of $1,980.00 providing the travelling man is required to travel all year; if he does not, this will reduce the expenditure by $580.00 or make the total of $1,400.00 per month. This represents the total cost and there will be no other expenses connected therewith.

It is advisable that we begin with the translation of the first article so that the campaign may be presented in the newspapers just as it appears in the "Leader."

We shall arrange with these newspapers to either have the articles appear as being especially written for each particular paper by myself, to be commented upon editorially by the Publishers, or as being prepared by the newspapers themselves.

On the enclosed statement we show the languages which each translator will have in charge as well as the itemized expenditures. We also enclose herewith two memorandums of agreement so that the payments can be made to us monthly in advance so that we can pay our bills for each article, as we do all our force and you are to carry the account on your books and we are to carry the account on our books as "Advertising appearing in the "Leader"".

If this is satisfactory we can begin the work immediately, as we have already talked with some of our Directors and Publishers and they will help us to get the organization into shape on a few days notice.

Your acceptance by signing the enclosed order with your first monthly payment will begin immediately to put into effect these arrangements for one year.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEWSPAPERS, INC.
LOUIS N. HAMMERLING,
President.

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT.

[The Leader, official organ of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers. Issued semimonthly. Advertising department, 702-3-4-5 World Building, New York.]

GENTLEMEN: You are hereby authorized to insert copies of our advertisement for one year from January 1st, 1914, insertions in The Leader for the amount of $1,400.00 per month, or total of sixteen thousand eight hundred dollars, $16,800.00 for the year.

Address 3357 Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Date January 1st, 1914.

Maj. HUMES. You dictated that letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I did.

Maj. HUMES. And attached to it were the statements printed above?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, after having refreshed your recollection from this letter that you dictated, what do you say as to your obligating yourself to use a director of your association to try and control the foreign-language press?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A director? Why, we call a fellow who goes and directs it a director.

Maj. HUMES. Then you did not mean a director in the corporation in this letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. What was your purpose in writing that letter? Did you want Mr. Andreae to understand that you meant a director of the corporation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I wrote this letter to Mr. Andreae. He wanted it written in that way and I wrote it in that way. You write a great many letters when you solicit business.

Maj. HUMES. Then the arrangement you had with Mr. Andreae was that these personal-liberty articles were to be printed in the American Leader as advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And your contract was to carry them as advertising, and it was an advertising contract.

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you interpret it in that way. I am not posted legally.

Maj. HUMES. I am asking you for facts, I am not asking for an interpretation.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would not want to exactly say, for the reason that I do not understand it.

Maj. HUMES. Your contract provides that the personal-liberty articles appearing in the Leader are advertising, does it not, and you carry them on your books as advertising in the American Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to that statement, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you mark them advertising when you published them, in accordance with the act of Congress?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. Your periodical is entered as second-class matter in the post office, is it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then you disregarded the act of Congress which requires advertising matters to be so marked?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that you are not familiar with the act of Congress which requires advertising matter to be so marked?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not also a fact that a portion of the office rent in your offices was paid by Mr. Andreae and by the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; one room.

Maj. HUMES. They paid the rent on one of your office rooms?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a copy of the contract for office rent which I show you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is our billhead, for $70. I think that is right.

Maj. HUMES. This is evidently a bill that was submitted by you to Mr. Andreae.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not submit the bill; I do not know the details. I am a solicitor of advertising.

Maj. HUMES. That is one of your advertising contracts, and the language is put there so as to provide for a payment of office rent.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, I could mention hundreds.

Maj. HUMES. This paper came from your office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is our stationery; yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibit No. 3, and ask you if that is a copy of a contract of renewal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It looks to me like it, but I would not swear to it. It is a matter of detail that I did not handle.

Maj. HUMES. This is a carbon copy of a form of contract that came from your office on your letterhead.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it is—yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever do any advertising for Mr. Andreae or the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Some, I think; a few thousand dollars. I can not exactly remember the amount of what it was. It was a fight between the brewers' association.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a paper marked "Hammerling Exhibit 4," having attached to it a list of foreign-language newspapers. Is that a copy of the contract for 1915 between you and Mr. Andreae, and state whether that is an advertising contract?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; it is an advertisement.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

You are hereby authorized to insert in 68 foreign language newspapers 120-inch advertisement one time in each paper during period of 5 months (March to July inclusive) for the amount of $2,000.00—per month, payable monthly in advance or total of * * * $10,000.

Senator NELSON. Is that 1915?

Maj. HUMES. This is dated March 5, 1915, and I offer it, together with the list of newspapers, in evidence.

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 5.

[The American Leader, Published Semi-Monthly by the American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers, Inc., Suite 912–926 Woolworth Building, New York City.]

SEPTEMBER 21ST, 1914.

NR—Personal.

Mr. PERCY ANDREAE,
3357 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. ANDREAE: As I have explained to you, Mr. Andreae, we have decided we cannot accept any liquor advertisements for the American Leader. I take this opportunity to thank you most sincerely for your assistance. Our friends stood by us and responded satisfactorily in assisting us to dispose of the space in The American Leader which was left vacant so suddenly by the steamship companies.

As we have to submit our yearly report on The American Leader before November 13th, may I ask you as a friend, Mr. Andreae, that the subscriptions to The American Leader for which you are paying for ministers, priests, rabbis, foreign language papers, German papers, etc. inasmuch as some do not expire until January and February, if you could send us your check for another's year's subscription and we will send you a bill as we would like to include this as cash in The American Leader's report and we would, therefore, make a better showing. Of course, we are just asking you to do this and we would appreciate it, but if you cannot do it, just let us know and it will be all right.

Assuring you we shall be glad to hear from you on this matter, we are

Very truly yours,

THE AMERICAN LEADER,
LOUIS HAMMERLING, President.

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 6.,

[American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., Woolworth Building, New York.]

SEPTEMBER 21ST, 1914.

NR—Personal.

MR. PERCY ANDREAE,
3357 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. ANDREAE: I hereby confirm your statement and which I have placed on our records, that we shall continue the arrangements from December 31st, 1914 to December 31st, 1915 which we have with you as translators, checkers, stenographers, etc. to handle the Personal Liberty articles, and we hereby enclose you duplicate contract properly filled out, which please sign returning one copy to us and keeping one for your own files.

You will notice that this does not include Mr. Joudan's account and for this arrangement we will only bill you up to February 8th, 1915. From that date, if you decide that Mr. Joudan will be retained, you can pay him direct or through us.

You will also notice on our contract that the lease of the office that we have rented in connection with your service will expire May 1st, 1916. Everything else with the exception of the office rent referred to will expire December 31st, 1915.

Very truly yours,

LOUIS HAMMERLING,
President.

LNH/M/AW

Maj. HUMES. Why did you say that you could not accept any liquor advertisements at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In the American Leader?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that some of the advertisements that we carried would not be permitted to stay in if we did.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you did, after that time, have liquor advertisements?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not at that time renew your contract with Mr. Andreae in the American Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. This was not advertising.

Maj. HUMES. Your contract said the personal-liberty articles should be published as advertising.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I know, but this was not the understanding.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that your reason for writing that letter——

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was to get subscriptions.

Maj. HUMES. Was to gather subscriptions, and to deceive the people to whom these very subscriptions were sent as to the nature of the periodical and as to the character of the articles appearing?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would not say that I was doing it to deceive. There was nothing about it to deceive, about an order for so many copies to be sent to certain people. We sent them.

Maj. HUMES. Why would they pay you thousands of dollars a year for subscriptions——

Mr. HAMMERLING. Major, they do it with every newspaper in the United States practically.

Maj. HUMES. Why would they pay you thousands of dollars in subscriptions if your attitude was one that was opposed to the liquor traffic, if you refused to accept liquor advertisements?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The only answer that I can give you is that we came to an understanding with some of our clients that they did not want to advertise along with whisky advertisements and things of that kind in the paper.

Maj. HUMES. And yet you did carry the personal-liberty articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The personal-liberty articles we wrote. It was the desire of the people, and we did it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you agreed to accept no straight liquor advertisements in your paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In the Leader?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. So that as a result of the understanding with Mr. Andreae the personal-liberty articles should be sent to ministers and rabbis and would have a better effect if there was no liquor advertisement in the paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If there is such a statement by me, it is correct; if not, it is not.

Maj. HUMES. Why did you make that statement at the time that you renewed the contract?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I made that statement for the reason that Mr. Andreae was kind enough to have two of his friends, brewers, offer me page advertisements in the Leader. One of them, I think, was in Cincinnati and the other in Chicago.

Maj. HUMES. At that same time you renewed the contract for the personal-liberty articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I call attention particularly now to Hammerling Exhibit No. 6, which is a letter dated September 21, 1914, the same day as the Hammerling Exhibit No. 5. Why did you put the contents of those two letters in two separate letters instead of writing one letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We have written some days a dozen letters. We write letters by the hundreds a day. I can not remember three or four years ago why I wrote two letters on that day.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, September 21, 1914, you wrote one letter to Mr. Andreae saying that you would accept no liquor advertisement of any kind, and on the same day you wrote another letter to him renewing a contract for liquor advertisements, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; according to the letters.

Maj. HUMES. Why did you do that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. You also renewed the contract for the year 1916.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is Hammerling Exhibit No. 7 a copy of the contract?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; that is my signature.

Maj. HUMES. This is signed by you and Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and I had to go to Chicago to do it.

Maj. HUMES. I offer Hammerling Exhibit No. 7 in evidence.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT NO. 7.

CHICAGO, ILL., NOVEMBER 8, 1915.

[American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Ic., 912–926 Woolworth Building, New York.—Attention Mr. Louis N. Hammerling, President.]

MY DEAR MR. HAMMERLING: This is to serve as a contract from January 1, 1916, to January 1, 1917, for which I guarantee to pay you $2,250.00 monthly for translators in different languages, stenographers, checkers, room rent, postage, expressage, etc. The total amount I guaranteed to pay during this period to be $27,000.000, and there are to be no other charges unless authorized in writing.

Your countersigning this order constitutes the contract.

Very truly, yours,

PERCY ANDREAE.

Countersigned:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEWSPAPERS, INC.,
By LOUIS HAMMERLING, President.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have a contract with Mr. Andreae or with the National Association of Commerce and Labor after the year 1916?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. Why?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He did not want it. The brewers would not give him the money.

Maj. HUMES. It was not because you did not want it, it was because the brewers did not want it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is what I said—they did not want it.

Senator WOLCOTT. One moment. I want to see if I have a correct understanding of this. This contract for translators, checkers, etc., just mentioned there, was to compensate the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers for translating personal-liberty articles into various languages and having them inserted in various foreign-language newspapers. Is that correct?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is correct, Mr. Hammerling?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. These personal-liberty articles were articles written——

Mr. HAMMERLING. By Mr. Andreae.

Senator WOLCOTT. And published under your name?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. The contents of which were designed to operate against prohibition?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that the scheme really was for you to disseminate through the foreign-language newspapers liquor articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is not that the conclusion to be drawn?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not liquor articles, for the reason that the personal-liberty articles——

Senator WOLCOTT. Antiprohibition articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Personal-liberty articles covered more than prohibition.

Senator WOLCOTT. You just told me a moment ago that they were written in the interest of opposition to prohibition.

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you want to call it that way.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am not in favor of prohibition myself. Of course, that is my feeling about the matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am not asking you your views. Do not let us quibble. Mr. Andreae was interested in combating prohibition.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. He wrote the personal-liberty articles in that interest.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I suppose so.

Senator WOLCOTT. Don't you know it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you published them over your name?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Through these papers and got paid for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Can you escape the conclusion that Mr. Andreae was employing your association for the purpose of disseminating antiprohibition propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If that is the way it is interpreted, yes. I did not know there was anything wrong in it.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am not saying there is anything wrong about it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me, I admit that I am not posted as well as I should be on these things.

Maj. HUMES. In addition to the contracts that have been already called to your attention and submitted, you had contracts by which a very large number of subscriptions were paid for by Mr. Andreae and sent to various people throughout the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any idea as to how many subscribers you were supplied through Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember; perhaps a thousand or fifteen hundred, whatever it is; I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. What is the greatest subscription list, the largest number of subscribers, the American Leader ever had?

Mr. HAMMERLING. At one time?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Do you want subscribers or copies printed?

Maj. HUMES. I mean actually paid subscriptions of any kind.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Maybe 10,000.

Maj. HUMES. That is the highest number?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would not swear; I could not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Approximately, 10,000 is the most you ever had?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that more than half of those were paid for by Mr. Andreae and the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; not to my memory.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibit 8 and ask you if that is one of the bills from the American Leader to Mr. Andreae for subscriptions?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Nineteen fifteen—that is our bill; yes.

Maj. HUMES. This was paid for by Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I suppose so.

Maj. HUMES. He has paid you all of the debts that he owed you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, yes; absolutely.

Maj. HUMES. It is a fact, is it not, that in November, 1915, they paid you for the following subscriptions: To 624 rabbis, 2,002 priests, 1,700 ministers, 1,385 German and foreign newspapers, and 206 Polish Sokal unions, or a total of 5,890. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That would be more than half of the 10,000 subscribers you had?

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to this bill.

Maj. HUMES. He paid you for this bill?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Less than half—it is $2 a copy.

Maj. HUMES. But $1.50 was your contract with him.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not have a special $1.50 contract with him? There is the price.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And those were subscribers, the names of whom were furnished by Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, in 1915, 5,890 of your subscribers were charged to and paid for by Mr. Andreae and the National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Is there anything wrong about that?

Maj. HUMES. Answer the question.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; according to this bill. I know corporations that will order 5,000 copies every day. I do not see anything wrong about it.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence Hammerling Exhibit No. 8.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Did he ever pay you a commission or percentage on the office help that you hired?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In my office?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never. I think he made a Christmas present.

Maj. HUMES. Christmas present?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was this Christmas present made as a result of a demand from you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You demanded a Christmas present for your employees?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. They have plenty of money—why not? I do not see anything wrong about it.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibit No. 9.

Mr. HAMMERLING. There is nothing wrong about it.

Maj. HUMES. I ask you if Mr. Andreae did not pay you 10 per cent upon the salary of your office force?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It shows what it is paid for—for Christmas.

Maj. HUMES. Where does it show that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The letter will show it, if you will pardon me.

Maj. HUMES. Where is the letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It must be here, and if not, Mr. Andreae is alive, and he will tell the truth. He thought that the thing was going so successfully that he wanted these people to have something.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact you actually billed Mr. Andreae for 10 per cent of the salary of certain employees in your office for the year 1915?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and he gave it to me.

Maj. HUMES. He paid you a commission?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then you collected not only a commission on the advertising but a commission on the office expenditures from your papers as well?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If they paid it, why not?

Maj. HUMES. The American Leader was owned by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were not all of the foreign-language newspapers subscribers, and did they not get copies of the Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Before I go any further with that I will offer in evidence at this point Hammerling Exhibit No. 9.

(The paper referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 9.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15, 1915.

Mr. Percy Andreae, 3357 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. To the American Leader Dr., Published by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc. 912-926 Woolworth Building.

To 10% of total amount of salaries paid to the 15 employees, during the year 1915 ..... $2,518.00

O. K.—Percy Andreae.

Maj. HUMES. Why was it necessary for you to collect from Mr. Andreae a subscription price for each one of these papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that the papers did not pay for it, and he wanted them to get it sure.

Maj. HUMES. Then you did not gratuitously send the American Leader out to all the papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We did if we could not get somebody to pay for it.

Maj. HUMES. It was a graft game?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not a graft game.

Maj. HUMES. If you had not got the money from him, you would have sent them anyway?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, I pursued what I learned in this country from the newspapers; I would like to see some of them here, they are all doing it. It is no graft game.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibit No. 10, a bill for subscriptions to 624 rabbis for the American Leader, beginning with the issue of August 27.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is correct.

Maj. HUMES. You received the money for that from Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to the bill. I did not receive the money. I do not even open the mail.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence Hammerling Exhibit No. 10.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 10.

NEW YORK, July 31, 1915.

Mr. Percy Andreae, 3357 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. To The American Leader, Dr. Published by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., 912–926 Woolworth Building.

To 624 subscriptions to The American Leader, for Rabbis, beginning with issue of August 27th—for one year (at the special price of $1.50) _ $936.00

Paid, Aug. 18, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. I show you now Hammerling Exhibit No. 11. That is a bill of yours for 28 subscriptions for Hungarian priests.

Mr. HAMMERLING. If he sent them in, we sent them.

Maj. HUMES. You got the money for them from Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. In fairness to you, I want to get on the record what you probably would like to have there. Did you say that the 10 per cent Christmas present that Mr. Andreae contributed was paid by you to the employees?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I did not think you made that statement. You would want that to appear?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is true.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence at this point Hammerling Exhibit No. 11.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

Paid, May 13, 1914.

Maj. HUMES. In the conduct of your business, did you have anything to do with the German newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just in respect to the personal liberty articles; no advertising. They would not join us.

Maj. HUMES. Did you send the personal liberty articles to the German newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. Andreae arranged it with them.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever during that time come in contact with the German-American Alliance?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know anything about the German-American Alliance?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Only what I saw in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Max Heinrici?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever come in contact with him in connection with this work?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not with the German Alliance. He was to translate personal-liberty articles in German, for which we paid him.

Maj. HUMES. For whom was he translating these articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the American Association.

Maj. HUMES. Max Heinrici was the editor of the official bulletin of the German-American Alliance.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. Mr. Andreae said that he was a good translator, and we got him. I did not know him from Adam.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean that he came into your office and did the translating?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. We sent it to him by mail at some place in Germantown, Pa.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know him personally?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I met him three or four times.

Maj. HUMES. In what connection?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In regard to these translations. He was a kind of a nervous man, and every year he thought that he was going to lose his job, and I would cheer him up; that is all.

Maj. HUMES. You went to see him, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went to see him; yes. I think I did.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you were in communication with and conferred with Max Heinrici at the expense of Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of course, if it was in connection with personal-liberty articles I made him pay for it. Why should I pay it?

Maj. HUMES. You also acted in connection with the German newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; outside of sending them these articles.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your nationality?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am half Polish and half Bohemian.

Senator OVERMAN. Where were you born?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In Galicia.

Sentor OVERMAN. How old were you when you came to this country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Nine.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you naturalized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you now Hammerling Exhibit No. 12, and ask you if these are the checks that you received and the bills that you transmitted covering the expenses of your communications with and transactions with Max Heinrici?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Those checks and bills are offered in evidence, together with the indorsement on the back of the checks.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have anything to do with trying to reach the Members of the House and the Senate in matters in which Mr. Andreae was interested?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember a thing about it.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibit No. 13, a bill made by you to Percy Andreae for telegrams, as per inclosed copy, to 96 Senators and 435 Congressmen, at $2.32 each, and ask you what the occasion of that was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1914, I think, they sent us a telegram and the bill that was to be presented to Congress, and they wanted us to have these papers make a protest.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know what the bill was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Was it a matter that you had any interest in yourself?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know a thing about it.

Maj. HUMES. Was it a matter that your papers had any interest in?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Our papers, with the exception of the Scandanavian, I think, are all interested to-day.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you sold the influence of your association for the purpose of undertaking to influence legislation at the request and instance of Mr. Andreae and the Brewers' Association, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, if you interpret it in that way, but I do not think there was any such purpose.

Senator OVERMAN. You sent the telegrams to Congress?

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to this bill. I do not know whether they were sent by me or by the publishers.

Senator OVERMAN. It was done under your authority.

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to this bill; yes.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of that bill?

Mr. HAMMERLING. May 11, 1914.

Senator WOLCOTT. That bill is for over 500 telegrams.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Those telegrams did not emanate from your office, did they?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I really do not think so. I think they were sent out from all over the country. I would have to look at the correspondence to tell.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am curious to know how you could get all of these foreign language newspapers to send these telegrams for which you were paid if your only connection with these newspapers was of an advertising nature.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of course, the question about our connection with these newspapers that you gentlemen question me about is that we have remedied the tremendous wrongs that were done for years to these papers, and they were glad to do anything that I suggested.

Senator WOLCOTT. You did have some influence with them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And that influence extended to getting them interested in an activity that was entirely dissociated from your advertising contracts?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of course, in this case it shows that way; yes.

Senator STERLING. Do you not recall to what subject these telegrams related that were pending before Congress?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I could not tell you.

Senator NELSON. Maj. Humes, can you tell us what this legislation was about?

Maj. HUMES. I think I can disclose that by the files already offered in evidence the other day. Exhibit 807 is a telegram sent by Percy Andreae and addressed to Edward A. Schmidt, of the Robert Schmidt Ale Brewing Co., Philadelphia, dated May 11, 1914, and is as follows:

The following telegram, sent by directors of American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, has been sent to-day to every Senator and Congressman in Washington:

"The American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, with a circulation of over 7,000,000, reaching 20,000,000 citizens, protests emphatically on behalf of the overwhelming majority of those citizens against Hobson, the resolution providing for national prohibition. Our people consider same unwarranted interference with rights guaranteed them under the Federal Constitution, and will resent the passage of the resolution, which is designed to destroy their most cherished customs and deprive citizens generally of the individual liberty which is as dear to them as life itself. Almost entire foreign-language press has for the past three months voiced this sentiment in strongest possible terms and with full concurrence of its millions of readers."

Is that the telegram referred to?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I remember that Mr. Andreae got it up.

Maj. HUMES. Were you and Mr. Andreae together when that telegram was made up?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No. He was either in New York or he sent it in by mail.

Maj. HUMES. It had your approval before it was sent?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not see anything wrong in it.

Maj. HUMES. Who sent the telegram?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I really do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Andreae says here that it was sent by the directors. Who were the directors at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The same as they are to-day.

Maj. HUMES. You have not had an election since?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We elect them every year.

Maj. HUMES. You own and control the association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. The stockholders' meetings are a perfunctory matter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. According to the charter the common stockholders have a vote, and we are to get them by proxy or they come in. I have a majority; I control it.

Maj. HUMES. You have practically all of the common stock?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I have $29,000 out of $50,000.

Maj. HUMES. You are going to furnish us with a list of the stockholders?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I offer in evidence at this point Hammerling Exhibit No. 13, together with the checks attached, showing payment.

(The paper referred to, with the accompanying check, is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

Senator WOLCOTT. It is not clear to me just how this telegram went. From the bill rendered to Mr. Andreae there must have been over a thousand distinct telegrams coming from various parts of the country here to Washington, and yet I gather from what Mr. Hammerling has just said that the telegram originated from his office in New York.

Maj. HUMES. I think if you will look at the bill very carefully you will see that there was only one telegram sent to each Representative and Senator.

Senator NELSON. They were all of the same kind?

Maj. HUMES. They were the same telegram.

Senator NELSON. And the same signature, I suppose?

Maj. HUMES. I assume so.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were all sent by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Maj. HUMES. By the directors, according to Mr. Andreae's telegram. Mr. Hammerling, did you communicate with the foreign-language newspapers of the country before you sent this telegram?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We always do.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you in this case?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember exactly, but anything we send that is signed, we first ask them for the signature before we send it.

Maj. HUMES. There were some 500 or 600 foreign-language newspapers, were there not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The bills give $8.69 for the other telegrams that were necessary to secure the crystallization of sentiment that resulted in the telegram to the Members of the Senate and the House.

Mr. HAMMERLING. We never send them a telegram. We send them our circular letter.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any record that will throw more light on that transaction?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know of any.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take a recess at this point until 3 o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, the committee stood in recess until 3 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 3 o'clock p. m., Senator Lee S. Overman (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. I show you this paper marked "Hammerling Exhibit No. 14," and ask you if that is a bill submitted by you?

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examination of paper). That is our bill.

Maj. HUMES. And that is the check attached, paying the bill?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is our bill.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibits Nos. 17 and 18, and ask you if they are a bill submitted by you to Mr. Andreae and the check in payment thereof covering articles furnished by you to German newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. By The American Leader; yes.

Maj. HUMES. What were the articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. On personal liberty.

Maj. HUMES. "Articles 10, 11, and 12," it says in the bill.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they are all numbered.

Maj. HUMES. The personal liberty articles went by numbers, did they?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Pardon me, Major; I said "yes." I want to take a look at my record and get it straight.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; we did not.

Maj. HUMES. To what extent did you deal with German newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just on these personal-liberty articles.

Maj. HUMES. Just on the personal-liberty articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, either personally or through some of your officers or agents, communicate with and confer with German newspapers or editors?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We wrote them letters; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You wrote them letters?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; we wrote them letters, advising them.

Maj. HUMES. Advising them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; of the arrangements made. We sent them these letters.

Maj. HUMES. Did you call on them personally?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. The German newspapers were not in that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; they were not. Herman Ridder did not want to deal with the foreign papers. He spoke of them in public, and I think all of you saw it, as hunkies, and said that he would never sit with the hunkies and the Italian races.

Senator NELSON. What is that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He called them "the hunkies" and the other Latin races "dagoes." A few years later they would have been very glad to come in.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the list of papers to which you sent these letters?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We sent to the entire list.

Maj. HUMES. To the entire list of German newspapers of the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Some of them published it and some did not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make it a business, yourself, or did you on occasion travel about to help Mr. Andreae in his propaganda, purporting to represent these foreign-language newspapers of the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I made one speech with Mr. Andreae. I was with him in Chicago in 1913. We were the guests of the city.

Maj. HUMES. You were the guests of the city?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is that the only trip you made as their agent?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the best that I can remember. As their agent? I was not their agent. I was invited by Gen. Dickinson, as the chairman of the citizens, who wanted me to speak on Washington's Birthday, at the Auditorium in Chicago.

Maj. HUMES. Who paid the expenses of that trip?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The association paid all of them.

Maj. HUMES. The Foreign Language Newspaper Association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You did not bill that to Mr. Andreae, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever make any trips on behalf of the association that you controlled for Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I did, but not at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Upon what occasions did you make trips that you billed to him?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Major, exactly.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go to Cleveland at the expense of Mr. Andreae for the purpose of carrying on his propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I handled it in Cleveland, I think, one year or two years. I do not remember if it was Mr. Andreae who paid it, or who paid it. The brewers paid it.

Senator OVERMAN. You said the brewers paid it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they were running under some other name. I have forgotten what it was.

Senator OVERMAN. The National Association of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In some county; Cuyahoga County organization, or something like that.

Maj. HUMES. You went out at their request and appeared on some occasion?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember when that was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you go from September 18 to September 20, 1914, and stop at the Statler Hotel?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Cleveland.

Maj. HUMES. Was that Cleveland or Buffalo or some other city?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I really do not know. I go to Buffalo and Cleveland and the Detroit hotels sometimes.

Maj. HUMES. I will refresh your recollection by calling your attention to Hammerling Exhibits Nos. 21, 22, and 23, the first being a bill rendered by the American Leader to Percy Andreae, "To accommodations from September 18 to September 20, inclusive, as per hotel statement attached, and expenses." the amount being $194.64, and other items, as follows:

To drinks and cigars at Bohemian Club	$30.00
To taxicabs	15.80
To telegrams	4.90
To long-distance telephone calls to different parts of Ohio	9.80
To tips including those at publishers' luncheon	22.00
To drinks with publishers after luncheon	10.00
To Sunday automobile—luncheon with six priests and four publishers	53.00
	340.14

The total of this bill is $340.14.

Does that refresh your recollection in regard to that transaction?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I went there on the Cuyahoga County business.

Maj. HUMES. Were you going to solicit advertising for the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You went out there as the presentative of the foreign-language newspapers, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; that is what I do all the time.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, did you on any other occasion go to Cleveland?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I did; twice. Two years I managed that advertisement.

Maj. HUMES. You never went twice in the same year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, in July, 1914, only 60 days before the occasion just referred to, go to Cleveland, and submit a bill for your expenses, of $108.70, to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING [after examining paper]. I went there to arrange an address that Mr. Andreae wanted made on July 4, in the park there.

Maj. HUMES. You were in this country, were you, on July 18, 1914?

Mr. HAMMERLING. July 18, 1914? I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Then how did you happen to go there to make an address for Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know the date. Is this bill that date?

Maj. HUMES. The bill is dated. I called your attention to the date; July 18, 1914.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Major, I could not be in two places at the same time; so that I do not know anything about it. You are showing me a bill that goes out by the hundreds every week. If I was in Europe, I could not be in Cleveland.

Maj. HUMES. That was my understanding. You have billed Mr. Andreae.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not. I never made a bill since I have been in business. That is my company.

Maj. HUMES. You own the company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I own most of the stock.

Maj. HUMES. It is a one-man company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is not.

Maj. HUMES. You never hold a stockholders' meeting?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do. Everyone is notified who holds stock.

Maj. HUMES. You hold an annual meeting?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We comply with the stock law, the law of the State of New York.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever give notice, when you were going to hold a meeting, to the stockholders?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Certainly. The letters and all the proxies are right there [indicating papers].

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that to stockholders who have asked you about annual meetings you have only replied by saying that notice was published as required by law, in the newspapers, and that they would have to find it for themselves?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have complied with the laws of the State, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Have you written such letters?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I certainly did; the stockholders that have preferred stock, they are not entitled to notice in writing.

Senator WOLCOTT. You said on one occasion you went to Cleveland to arrange a Fourth of July address for Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did one year.

Senator WOLCOTT. And this bill was for services on that occasion.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was guessing at it. I did not know that it was for that occasion.

Senator WOLCOTT. You would change that statement, then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. The items of this bill of July 18, 1914 (referring to Hammerling Exhibit No. 28), are as follows:

July 3.	Luncheon to seven Cleveland publishers	$30.50
6.	Luncheon to four (4) publishers	15.75
13.	Telephone to Mr. Momand	3.25
14.	Luncheon to eleven (11) publishers	39.00
	To 14 cuts of Mr. Andreae	10.75
	Messenger, telegraph and telephone service	8.95
		$108.70

The total of that bill is $108.70.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, Major, if you will pardon me——

Maj. HUMES. Is that something that you have been talking about?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you will pardon me, I think I can recall that thing.

Maj. HUMES. All right.

Mr. HAMMERLING. This was while——

Maj. HUMES. It was a bill of the Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; of the American Leader. I am just remembering something. The cost charged here was published after Mr. Andreae made a speech in our paper.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, the priests you speak of, are they not Hungarian reformed priests instead of Catholic priests?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I do not know——

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever entertain any Hungarian reformed priests at these luncheons?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not more in contact with the Hungarian reformed priests than you were with any other priests?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I was not.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; this is our bill.

Maj. HUMES. What were all these trips to Ohio for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. This is where the fight was on State-wide prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. Then your association was taking an active part in politics?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; we were handling the advertising, just like the last two years when we lost out with the brewers, it was handled by another concern. For instance, we lost out. The United States brewers were not friendly to deal with us, and they dealt with somebody else.

Maj. HUMES. These are for the personal expenses of your employees, are they not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Who were there.

Maj. HUMES. What was the purpose of that dinner to those 180 priests?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know, sir. The letter shows.

Maj. HUMES. Did you arrange——

Mr. HAMMERLING. We arranged through the papers.

Maj. HUMES. You arranged for a dinner at the cost of the American Leader and sent the bill to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; he wanted that dinner so that he could have a chance to talk with them, so that they would listen to him.

Maj. HUMES. And you loaned him the name of your association as a vehicle in order to reach any class of people that he wanted to reach?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I really do not understand the wording of it, but I suppose it is so.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of this meeting covered by this bill?

Maj. HUMES. The bill is dated February 11, 1915. The item is $630 for the 180 guests.

Now, Mr. Hammerling, you say you were in Europe in the summer of 1914?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, during that summer, get in touch and keep in touch with Mr. Andreae and his organization?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I kept in touch with the office, not with him.

Maj. HUMES. Did you transact any business with Mr. Andreae while you were in Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Hammerling Exhibits Nos. 24 and 25. This is a bill to the American Leader from Mr. Andreae for the "expense for Mr. Hammerling's cable from Europe." What was that for, and for what reason was it charged to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is $6. Maybe he wanted to ask me some question about making a speech, or something; as much as I can remember.

Maj. HUMES. Then he was in touch with you while you were in Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It no doubt came through my office.

Maj. HUMES. He cabled to you while you were in Europe, to your office, and you cabled to the office or to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the office. If he asked me any question about any advertising, the charge was made to the advertiser.

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is in connection with that campaign, no doubt.

Maj. HUMES. The 1914 campaign? This is 1915.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; we bought them. He asked us to buy them so that we could verify some quotations.

Maj. HUMES. Where were they kept; in your office, or were they delivered to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they were kept in our office.

Maj. HUMES. They were for the use of these translators that were at work in his service?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; it would be in the same service.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know as a matter of fact that there are no dictionaries except cheap dictionaries, for half of the languages that are included in that list?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you will pardon me, Major, I know nothing about the details of that. I am just telling you what happened.

Maj. HUMES. For instance, do you not know that there is no English-Serbian dictionary except possibly some little 50-cent pocket dictionary?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know anything about it. It may be that it costs only 50 cents, and yet in England it will cost more than $10 in their language.

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Andreae keep up the membership of your association in any organizations that you belong to?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think he wanted us to belong to the Merchants' Association, and I think he paid $50 for us, as far as I remember. He wanted to belong to it, and was the vice president of the association. We paid our own.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibits 30 and 31. Is that a bill rendered by your concern to Mr. Andreae and is that the check in payment of the same?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is our bill; yes, sir.

(The bill and check are here printed in the record in full, as follows:)

Maj. HUMES. I show you Hammerling Exhibits Nos. 32 and 33, they being a bill from the American Leader to Mr. Andreae for a dinner for 180 Bohemian priests and a check in payment thereof. Is that a bill rendered by you and a check in payment for the same?

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examining papers). Yes; that is our bill.

Maj. HUMES. What was the purpose of that dinner to those 180 priests?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know, sir. The letter shows.

Maj. HUMES. Did you arrange——

Mr. HAMMERLING. We arranged through the papers.

Maj. HUMES. You arranged for a dinner at the cost of the American Leader and sent the bill to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; he wanted that dinner so that he could have a chance to talk with them, so that they would listen to him.

Maj. HUMES. And you loaned him the name of your association as a vehicle in order to reach any class of people that he wanted to reach?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I really do not understand the wording of it, but I suppose it is so.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of this meeting covered by this bill?

Maj. HUMES. The bill is dated February 11, 1915. The item is $630 for the 180 guests.

Now, Mr. Hammerling, you say you were in Europe in the summer of 1914?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, during that summer, get in touch and keep in touch with Mr. Andreae and his organization?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I kept in touch with the office, not with him.

Maj. HUMES. Did you transact any business with Mr. Andreae while you were in Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Hammerling Exhibits Nos. 24 and 25. This is a bill to the American Leader from Mr. Andreae for the "expense for Mr. Hammerling's cable from Europe." What was that for, and for what reason was it charged to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is $6. Maybe he wanted to ask me some question about making a speech, or something; as much as I can remember.

Maj. HUMES. Then he was in touch with you while you were in Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It no doubt came through my office.

Maj. HUMES. He cabled to you while you were in Europe, to your office, and you cabled to the office or to Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the office. If he asked me any question about any advertising, the charge was made to the advertiser.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEWSPAPERS, WOOLWORTH BUILDING,
NEW YORK, January 27, 1916.

MR. PERCY ANDREAE,
3357 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of letter of the 25th inst. enclosing check for $481.47 in payment of bill rendered December 31st, covering expenses of traveling inspector, telegrams and rental of office.

Yours, truly,

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEWSPAPERS,
B. W. LEITZLER, Treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. In 1916 how much did you receive from Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1916, as is stated in that statement there, $31,640.

Maj. HUMES. That was in the year 1916?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And this memorandum is an extract from your books showing the dates of payment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. May 3, 1916, you received $3,375. Was that in payment for advertisements in connection with this account?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; this is all advertisements, and the bills are there [indicating papers].

(The memorandum referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 39.

ANDREAE PAYMENTS.

1916.		1916.

Sept. 13	3,375

Now, I will show you Hammerling Exhibit No. 40, which is a list of stockholders of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, that you prepared?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who is F. D. Gardner?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He is the present vice president of the association.

Maj. HUMES. He is the present vice president of the association. Who is B. W. Leffler, who holds 45 shares?

Mr. HAMMERLING. She is my private secretary.

Maj. HUMES. She is your private secretary? She has been with you a good many years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. She is a confidential clerk?

Mr. HAMMERLING. She has been with me 15 years.

Maj. HUMES. Who is M. C. Leffler?

Mr. HAMMERLING. She is a sister.

Maj. HUMES. A sister of B. W. Leffler?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How about Carmalita Lewis, who holds 100 shares; who is she?

Mr. LEWIS. She is my daughter.

Maj. HUMES. When did she become a stockholder? When was this stock issued?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think in 1909.

Maj. HUMES. Was it purchased, or——

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; no common stock was purchased by anybody. I took it and gave it to the people who helped me to get where I am.

Maj. HUMES. Who is John Mitchell who holds 20 shares? Was that purchased?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Nobody purchased any common stock. I gave it to him. All of the common stock in this corporation has not been purchased, but has been given by me.

Maj. HUMES. It has all been given by you personally?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Nobody has bought any of it; none of it has been sold to anybody else?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; to me. I paid for it, as the books will show.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, it is a one-man corporation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, these people get the same dividends as I do. They have the say in proportion to their stock.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you have to pay the various newspapers to publish the translations of those personal-liberty articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Just a moment, to make that appear intelligent. Carmalita Lewis is the daughter of Liston Lewis, your attorney?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, you say that Mr. Andreae became a vice president of this association?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. When?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember the date, Major. I can take a look in the minutes. The minutes will show.

Mr. BENHAM. 1913 appears to be the time in this I am examining now.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is it, then. It was 1913 or 1914, I know; maybe 1915.

Maj. HUMES. It was in 1915, was it not?

Senator OVERMAN. If you did not pay to have these articles put in the papers, why was all this immense amount of money paid to you? What was it for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To put them into the languages.

Senator OVERMAN. Just the translations?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. All this money was paid out simply for translations?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and the set ups and——

Senator WOLCOTT. The articles came once a month?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Twice a month.

Senator WOLCOTT. Twice a month?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Twenty-four articles in the year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and there are about 800 of the foreign-language papers and there were over 520 German papers to make that up.

Senator WOLCOTT. How many translations would be necessitated?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The major said there were 27 languages. I thought that we had 34 languages.

Senator WOLCOTT. Twenty-seven languages?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The details had not been——

Senator WOLCOTT. Then it cost Mr. Andreae $31,000 in 1916—I think that was the year—to get 27 translations of 24 articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. With all the other work connected with it. This includes room rent and costs and express packages and postage. and we may have made some profit on it, too.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did those papers get any pay for publishing those articles?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They did not; no, sir; not for those articles.

Senator NELSON. Did the whole profit come to your company—the whole profit that came to you? Did those papers that published your articles—those foreign-language newspapers—ever get anything for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They did not; no, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. The articles were not lengthy, were they?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About a thousand words.

Senator WOLCOTT. A thousand words?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That was the average.

Senator WOLCOTT. Two or three pages, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have any trouble getting them in without paying for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; only the papers published them who were in sympathy with that prohibition movement.

Senator OVERMAN. Were they all in sympathy with it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; about one-half, at least half, of them, I think. But we sent it to them all.

Maj. HUMES. In the spring of 1915 you wrote the following letter to Mr. Andreae, did you not:

At a meeting of some of our directors held yesterday I suggested that we shall ask you to be one of our 1914 delegates to attend the International Peace Congress at San Francisco July 6, and that you shall deliver the speech of the foreign-language press of the United States instead of myself. Would you accept such an honor? If it is necessary that you speak as official representative of this association, we would be glad to elect you a vice president. Wire or write at once on this matter.

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examining letter). That is correct.

Maj. HUMES. You wrote such a letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was that written and that action taken at the suggestion of Mr. Andreae?

Mr. HAMMERLING. At the suggestion of the publishers.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the publishers that were present that suggested that at that meeting?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The New York publishers, no doubt.

Maj. HUMES. Can you name any of them that were present?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember just who they were.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that Mr. Andreae was capitalizing his relation with your association for the purpose of carrying on his propaganda, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not exactly; I did not know it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not know that he was representing himself over the country as the spokesman of your organization rather than the spokesman of the brewers in order to secure an entrée.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think that is correct; it would sound better.
Maj. HUMES. You knew that, did you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I assumed it.
Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Exhibit No. 642, a letter written by Mr. Andreae, from which I read as follows:

These invitations are being extended to me as the spokesman of the organized foreign language press, and if I were to appear at the same time as a representative of the brewing industry, championing the specific cause of antiprohibition, it is manifest that my appearance before these commercial bodies would no longer be welcomed.

Did you not know that that was what Andreae had in mind, and were you not working in collusion with him?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Was this letter addressed to me?
Maj. HUMES. No.
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember about it.
Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that that was his position?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I think so. I do not remember.
Maj. HUMES. You and he had discussed it, had you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember about that.
Maj. HUMES. You say you were born in Galicia?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.
Maj. HUMES. When were you born?
Mr. HAMMERLING. About 1870.
Maj. HUMES. How long did you live in Galicia before you left there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. To my best memory, I was brought here when I was about 9 years old.
Maj. HUMES. When you were about 9 years old. Who brought you; some member of your family?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; a man from the village where I came from.
Maj. HUMES. Do you remember what year you came to this country?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I should not wonder if it was in 1870, or something, as much as I can remember.
Maj. HUMES. 1870? You were born in 1870, you say.
Mr. HAMMERLING. About 1879 or 1880.
Maj. HUMES. Where did you land?
Mr. HAMMERLING. In New York City.
Maj. HUMES. How long did you remain in New York?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Possibly some months.
Maj. HUMES. Where did you go?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We went to Upper Lehigh.
Maj. HUMES. That is, in Lehigh County, Pa.?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. In the anthracite-coal region?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.
Maj. HUMES. How long did you remain there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I remained there about a year or two.
Maj. HUMES. Where did you go to from there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We went to Latimore.
Maj. HUMES. That is also in the anthracite-coal region?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. How long did you remain there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just a few months. I went wherever the man went.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you go to from Latimore?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I possibly went down, next, to Upper Lehigh.

Maj. HUMES. That was in the anthracite-coal regions also?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the best of my memory I stayed about three years.

Maj. HUMES. How long, in all, were you in the anthracite-coal region at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was there about five years.

Maj. HUMES. Then where did you go to?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They began killing people there, the Molly Maguires, and the man that brought me over went to work on a farm, and he left me, and I went back to New York.

Maj. HUMES. You went back to New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay in New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A few months I worked in a restaurant, and then I went back to Europe.

Maj. HUMES. Then you went back to Europe. What year was it that you went back to Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember what year it would be.

Maj. HUMES. How old were you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About 14 or 15.

Maj. HUMES. You were 14 or 15 when you went back to Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you go back to Galicia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay there at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think I went to the Hawaiian Islands either in 1896 or 1897; I think it was 1897.

Maj. HUMES. That is 1896 or 1897?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. That would mean that you were back in your native country for a period of about 12 years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. From about 1884 to 1896 or 1897; probably 12 or 13 years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You stayed there until 1896 or 1897. Then where did you go?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands.

Maj. HUMES. How did you happen to go to the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They called me in to serve in the army, and I ran away.

Maj. HUMES. Which route did you take in going to the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went by way of Bremenhafen.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you go?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Through Bremenhafen. I was 150 days on board ship.

Maj. HUMES. One hundred and fifty days?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. We were practically sold out by some German crooks, there.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay in Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Some months.

Maj. HUMES. About how many months?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say, maybe, half a year.

Maj. HUMES. Not to exceed six months, you think?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not think so. Most of my colleagues who came with me died from the hardships and the way we were getting licked. I still have three marks on my back from the treatment that I received. I have a full statement about it if the gentlemen of the committee care to see it.

Maj. HUMES. Then, where did you go from the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To San Francisco.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay in San Francisco?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just long enough to make my fare to come East.

Maj. HUMES. That would be a month or two months?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; a couple of months.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you go to, then, when you came East?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To Philadelphia.

Maj. HUMES. What year was it you arrived in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say 1898 or the first part of 1899 or the last part of 1898.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you stay in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just a few months.

Maj. HUMES. Then, where did you go from there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To Wilkes-Barre.

Maj. HUMES. That would get you into Wilkes-Barre, then, probably sometime in 1899. What business did you engage in when you got to Wilkes-Barre?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went to work in the mines.

Maj. HUMES. In the mines?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In what capacity were you working?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was a timber man.

Maj. HUMES. You went to work as a timber man?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period did you work at that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I worked a year and a half; and then I worked, maybe, a year or two longer doing something else. I was already connected with the paper and I was doing some work nighttimes.

Maj. HUMES. When did you acquire your interest in the paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. After I was there about two years and a half.

Maj. HUMES. That would be, then, in 1901 or 1902 that you acquired the interest in the paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Something like that. I think it was before that. I think it was before 1900.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you continue at Wilkes-Barre?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Until 1908.

Maj. HUMES. 1908?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, you went to New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You organized this Association of Foreign Language Newspapers the same year you went to New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make the deal to buy an interest in this Italian agency and these Italian newspapers before you left Wilkes-Barre?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I met that man Grilla in 1904, and later he got me to go into it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you go into that deal with him before 1908?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 1908.

Maj. HUMES. Then, it was under contemplation or discussion from 1904 to 1908, was it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; he never discussed it with me. I met him in 1904, and when I came to New York in 1908, in May, he presented it to me, and then is when we began to discuss it.

Maj. HUMES. You have been in New York ever since?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You say you were born in 1870?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Are you a naturalized citizen?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Where were you naturalized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In Luzerne County, Pa.

Maj. HUMES. When?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1901.

Maj. HUMES. You were naturalized there in 1901?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, at the time you were naturalized, swear that you had been continuously a resident of the United States for five years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was a resident for longer than that.

Maj. HUMES. Just answer my question, please. Did you not so swear, when you were naturalized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Now, as a matter of fact, you had not come to the United States until 1898 or until 1899, had you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 1898? I came here when I was a child.

Maj. HUMES. The last time you came to the United States, however, was in 1898 or in 1899, was it not, when you came from Honolulu?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; in 1898.

Maj. HUMES. You had not been a resident of the United States continuously for five years in 1901 when you secured your naturalizations papers, had you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know that it was necessary, Major, so I——

Maj. HUMES. When did you learn the English language?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I began learning it when I worked at Pardee, Pa.

Maj. HUMES. You never had any difficulty in understanding the English language, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I am understanding it better every day.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not at that time, at the time you were naturalized, present a petition to the court asking to be naturalized without first declaring your intention?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I really do not understand that, Major. My lawyer did that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not swear, on that occasion, that you arrived in the United States of America at the port of San Francisco on the 20th day of May, 1885? Did you not swear to that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If I did it was wrong.

Maj. HUMES. If you did, it was a false oath, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It seems so now.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also swear that you had been born in the kingdom of Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. My reason for that, if I am permitted to explain, was that I was so disgusted with where I came from and what I went through in life, that I understood that I could select my own——

Senator WOLCOTT. Birthplace?

Mr. HAMMERLING (continuing). Birthplace, and I took this advice with no intention of doing wrong.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also swear that you were less than 18 years of age when you left Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember. I signed the paper which my lawyer made out for me.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also at that time swear that you were born the 21st day of March, 1874?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I always believed that that was the date until I found out later differently.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not also a fact that you always thought you were born in 1874 until after the last draft act was passed, and then for the first time you discovered that you were born in 1870? Is not that a fact?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I beg your pardon, I did not. It was only a few years ago that I found out it was different.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first find out that it was different?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A few years ago.

Maj. HUMES. How long ago?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Five or six years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Five or six years ago you found out that you were born in 1870?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How did you find that out?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Through relatives that I have here.

Maj. HUMES. How did you find it out?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They told me that I was wrong, for the reason that my father married the second time, and I have a sister who was older, from the second wife, than I was.

Maj. HUMES. That was five or six years ago that you found that out?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then how does it come that on the 25th of February, 1915, when you made application for a marriage license in Brooklyn, you swore that you were 40 years of age, which would correspond with the 1874 date of birth?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went by the same thing as my papers, Major.

Maj. HUMES. That is only 1915. That is not five or six years ago.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I say that I went by the same year as in my citizen papers.

Maj. HUMES. Then you knew when you made application for this marriage license that you were making a statement that was untrue?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not say that I know, but I am simply answering that I went according to the papers.

Maj. HUMES. According to your citizenship papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And yet you knew that those citizenship papers were wrong and untrue?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I did not know that it was of any importance.

Maj. HUMES. When did you find out that you had not been born in Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. When did I find that out?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I knew it right along.

Maj. HUMES. In 1915, when you made application for a marriage license, you swore that you were born in Hawaii, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. As I say, I went by those papers.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, having made a false oath in connection with your naturalization papers, you wanted to be consistent, and continued to make the same false statements that were made in your naturalization papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that I was afraid to do anything else.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do I understand you to say that rather than set right a false sworn statement you were willing to swear, knowingly swear, to that falsehood again?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, Senator; my idea was that I did not want to mix up my affairs, for the reason that so many people were making capital out of it, that I thought I would just do it as I did originally.

Senator WOLCOTT. Another thing, Mr. Hammerling; it would look as though it was a trifling part of this statement that you are making—the oath part. You were not regarding very much the fact that you were swearing to all these things. You were more concerned to keep the record straight than you were to swear to a fact.

Mr. HAMMERLING. To tell you the truth, Senator, I never knew when I took out this license that I had to swear to it. This is the first time I knew it.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that you had to take your prospective bride down to the clerk's office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES And you discovered when you got there that you had to swear to it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. You did swear to it, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I suppose so if you say so, Major,

Maj. HUMES. When you were in Galicia the last time for that period of 12 or 13 years, were you married then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Whom did you marry?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Clara Schachter.
Maj. HUMES. Did you bring her to this country with you?
Mr. HAMMERLING. She came afterwards.
Maj. HUMES. She came afterwards?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. How soon afterwards did she come?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I really do not remember. She came through New York and I came through California. I do not remember, exactly; maybe 1900.
Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time were you away from her from the time that you left her in Galicia until you met her in the United States?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I was away a year and a half, or two years.
Maj. HUMES. A year and a half or two years?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. You have secured a divorce from her, have you?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.
Maj. HUMES. Why was it that when you made application for this marriage license you denied that you had ever been married before, and denied that you ever had been divorced?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Major, this is a personal matter, and I do not think it is a matter for the Senate.
Maj. HUMES. Personal matters are of no more importance than the welfare of the Government, Mr. Hammerling.
Mr. HAMMERLING. In Galicia the government does not recognize the kind of marriage that we have. The Jewish marriage is not recognized there.
Maj. HUMES. Which marriage is the Jewish marriage?
Mr. HAMMERLING. The first one.
Maj. HUMES. The first marriage is your Jewish marriage?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir. That is not recognized by law. Therefore, when I became an American, I had nothing to do.
Maj. HUMES. Why did you get a divorce, then?
Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that it was interpreted by the courts there that while I lived in the United States with a common-law woman, as they would call it, it required a divorce. That is the way I understood it.
Maj. HUMES. You went over and took your attorney over there and spent several months getting a divorce, did you not?
Mr. LEWIS. He took no attorney over there, Maj. Humes.
Maj. HUMES. I mean he consulted an attorney there.
Mr. LEWIS. Do not put it that way, then.
Maj. HUMES. Mr. Lewis was there with you?
Mr. LEWIS. No, sir; I was not.
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.
Maj. HUMES. I thought you went there to clear it up?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.
Mr. LEWIS. No, sir.
Senator OVERMAN. Did you have any attorney?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.
Maj. HUMES. Let us get that straight. We do not want to put Mr. Lewis in a wrong light. He went over afterwards to see if the divorce was legal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. He had nothing to do with it. Mr. Lewis did not come into the case at all. I had a lawyer in the other country, over there.

Maj. HUMES. Who got the certified copy of the decree of divorce?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Down here?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. The lawyer sent it to me.

Maj. HUMES. And who secured the opinions of eminent Austrian counsel that the divorce was valid and binding?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The lawyers there.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not have counsel in this country that participated in that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I did not, Major.

Mr. LEWIS. Pardon me, let us correct that, Major. I think a year or two ago, possibly a couple of years, I secured opinions upon that when a question was raised about the legality of that divorce; but that is the first time I ever had anything to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. I understood that you went over there in the summer of 1914.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I was over there with my daughter, taking a tour, and was there just as the war started; but I had nothing to do with the divorce and knew nothing about it, in fact.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not obtain those opinions from the Austrian counsel prior to your present marriage?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I wrote them a letter; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You obtained the opinions?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; the court had to certify that this is the law in the United States. They would not do it otherwise. If anyone was unfaithful, they granted the divorce; but it has to be a marriage, too.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, you testified when you got your last marriage license that you had not been married before, and that you had not been divorced.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; I was advised to do that.

Maj. HUMES. You were advised?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Counsel advised me.

Maj. HUMES. Counsel advised you to make that statement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Had counsel also advised you to say that you were born in Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; nothing to do with that.

Maj. HUMES. Now, let us go back to this naturalization. The fact, then, remains that you secured in 1901 a naturalization paper in Luzerne County as a citizen of the United States when at that time you had only been in the United States continuously for less than three years, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not the way my lawyer figured it.

Maj. HUMES. How do you figure it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know that it required it, Major. I am not posted on those things. I am not posted on how long it is required to be here. I did not read it—the paper. They were making citizens there so fast, every day, that it was not a question about the length of time. When either party was interested in certain people, the political parties, they made them citizens, if you want to know the truth about it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that because of the political activities, and that as a result of political influence——

Mr. HAMMERLING. No influence required.

Maj. HUMES. Wait until I ask you the question, Mr. Hammerling.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me.

Maj. HUMES. And because of political influence, you hustled up to get naturalized, and it was necessary in the affidavit to say that you had been five years resident, and consequently the affidavit was so drawn?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you will pardon me, Major, I just want to get this right. This is very easy to find out. Until that time there was no question, if a man understood enough about the English, and the Constitution, they would ask a few questions and they would give you a citizenship.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not also a fact that the reason you represented yourself as having been less than 18 years old when you left Hawaii, was because you could be naturalized without first declaring your intention, and then working an additional two years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I can answer that, that I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. The fact remains that you were 31 years of age when you secured your naturalization papers, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just like if I were 50 to-day.

Maj. HUMES. You were born in 1870?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; and I have affidavits to that effect.

Maj. HUMES. And you got those affidavits since the draft law was passed, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I got it when they demanded that I should continue these military activities. I was not afraid to serve, for the reason that I volunteered to serve in Mexico, and the President thought it was not necessary then. My son is not 18, and he is serving in the Army, and my brother has been killed in the Army in Roumania.

Maj. HUMES. He is a son by your divorced wife, is he not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; and whom I am raising and keeping up.

Maj. HUMES. As the result of the divorce you are keeping that up?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I am supporting him before that.

Maj. HUMES. That is because of the divorce with your wife, is it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; it has nothing to do with that.

Maj. HUMES. If you swore when you were naturalized that you had been in this country five years continuously, you swore to an untruth?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am telling you, Major, that I signed this paper——

Maj. HUMES. Just answer the question and explain afterwards.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know what to answer.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you swear to the truth then or not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not the truth, Senator.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and it was untrue in these particulars, at least, was it not, that you were not born in Hawaii; that you were not less than 18 years of age when you left Hawaii; and it was not true when you said that you were born in 1874?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not true, Major. That covers it all, according to my saying.

Maj. HUMES. The whole thing is false, is it not—the whole affidavit?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is false; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you made that affidavit in order to make yourself a voter, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Gentlemen who had more to say about it should answer that, not me.

Maj. HUMES. Who had more to say about it than you did?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The parties.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the parties?

Mr. HAMMERLING. There are two parties in the United States.

Maj. HUMES. What particular individual representing any particular party was interested in it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember now.

Maj. HUMES. You secured your naturalization papers in 1901, and you secured your election to a party convention in 1902, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 1904.

Maj. HUMES. 1904?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You engaged actively in politics from the time that you were naturalized, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, actively as well as any man would who understood the affairs.

Maj. HUMES. And you intended actively to control and dominate the foreign element in the anthracite coal region?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, "dominate"; I do not see why I could be called that, Major. I never hoped to be one.

Maj. HUMES. You took an active part in politics, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I did, just as well as anybody else.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first receive any funds from political sources for your influence?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was never paid for my influence, from anybody.

Maj. HUMES. For your service, then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For my services? I do not remember. I maybe received it before I was naturalized, so far as I know.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether you did or not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Senator. The general rule is that the papers—the people connected with the papers—generally get some kind of an advertising, and if I was connected with the paper before that, I no doubt got them.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not go to a political State convention in 1901 or 1902?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember. Maybe I did.

Maj. HUMES. You took a very active part in politics, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When you came from Hawaii you came to escape the cruelty and abuse that was being imposed upon you out there, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. "Out there"? You do not mean in Hawaii?

Maj. HUMES. The abuse in Hawaii. He said that he was abused on a sugar plantation.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; of a German concern called Hachfeld and Hiezenberg, who contracted with the assistance of the American consul to send us on that boat. We had to work for five years for nothing, and of the 500 of us who went on that boat, about 300 of them died, and the rest of them ran away. I was one of them that ran away. We went away on a United States transport ship; if I remember right, it was the Alameda. We slept under the beds. The soldiers took us for mercy.

Maj. HUMES. You came over on a transport?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it was a transport. The soldiers took us.

Maj. HUMES. It was an American transport?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then it was subsequent to the time of the Spanish War and the activities in the Philippine Islands, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it was.

Senator NELSON. Did they bring you over, a whole crew of you, to work on the sugar plantations there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Five hundred of you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Five hundred, I think.

Senator NELSON. As laborers on a sugar plantation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Was that a German company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A German company; yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. And you got no wages?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No wages.

Senator NELSON. Just your board?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not a cent.

Senator NELSON. Just your board?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We were supposed to pay back in five years what it cost to ship us over, and then they had to give us so much cloth and so much rice and so much of different stuff, and a barracks to live in.

Maj. HUMES. You left Hawaii because you did not like it, then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I certainly did not.

Maj. HUMES. You testified as a witness, did you not, before Mr. Becker, in New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not testify that the reason you claimed Hawaiian citizenship was because of the beauties and joys of Hawaii?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not say anything of the kind. Whatever Becker put in there, or his crowd, has nothing to do with it. It was all for politics, and I told them so.

Maj. HUMES. You were under oath, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not under oath when you testified before Becker?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Becker?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A politician, an assistant to the attorney general, and he is belittling or besmearing people for his personal purposes.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you say he was an assistant to Mr. Lewis?

Mr. HAMMERLING. An assistant to Attorney General Lewis; yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. This is in New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. You were summoned to go before him, were you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not testify before Mr. Becker during the summer of 1918 that you were born in 1874?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I answered you, Major, that I did not pay any attention. They brought me over to that office, and they had a man down there by the name of Norman White, and he was doing the talking.

Senator OVERMAN. What did they have you down there for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They had me down there last summer—this summer.

Senator OVERMAN. What for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. What for?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, he was running for an office, and he was going to down anybody so that he could circulate it, what he was doing; doing injustice to people.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also testify before Mr. Becker that you went to the Hawaiian Islands when you were 9 years old?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not testify as follows:

I was driven out of home at 9 years old. I am sorry to say anything against my own people, a disagreeable family. My father did not make $2 a week in Austrian money, and I was one of the five children. Then he married a second time, and then the third time, but this was during my time. I was taken away by a peasant out of a matter of mercy, inasmuch as my people were Jewish by race; I was not, and this peasant took me away to make a Christian out of me: that was his idea. That is the way the peasants are taught to help to make Christians, and he took me with him as far as Bremen, Germany, and there we went on a boat. By his money he took me to Upper Lehigh, Pa., near Hazleton. In a few weeks he found he had a brother there; that he was working in the mines 3,000 feet underground. At least, I was too young to remember; for quite a few thousand kronen—he had another relative in the Hawaiian Islands, and he took me there, and we went to that place, where I claimed citizenship, and the Almighty was there, and the greatest scenery on earth, beautiful climate, that I have ever seen, and I worked for him 18 months with the Japs, Chinese, and negroes, in the sugar plantation, and it was good, and I loved it, and I began to be a great lover of the country.

Did you not so testify before Mr. Becker?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The correct testimony I gave to a gentleman from the Department of Justice who came down here a few days ago as to my coming here, and I signed it and am willing to abide by it.

Senator WOLCOTT. You have not answered the question that Maj. Humes asked you.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not. This was all done by blackmailers.

Maj. HUMES. This is your own statement. Did you not so testify? [Showing witness paper.]

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you mean to say that the district attorney of New York State was blackmailing you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. These fellows that are blackmailing me came around and gave him that dope.

Maj. HUMES. I am calling your attention to your own testimony when you appeared before Mr. Becker.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is not correct, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Is the testimony the way you gave it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then, the stenographer who reported it reported it wrong, did he?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. The only correct statement is the statement that I made out and signed for this, here.

Senator OVERMAN. They asked you questions and you answered them before this stenographer?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They did not give me a chance, Senator. I was convicted there before I came in. A few days before they got me into the county court and indicted me for some Bohemian paper—for writing something against some other paper—and when the judge decided that he said it was the biggest crime he ever heard of in the State of New York, for them to indict a man without giving him a hearing. The judge made that statement. The same blackmailer brought about that.

Senator OVERMAN. What did they claim in this investigation—German propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; these blackmailers who are now connected with this propaganda are trying, under cover, to put me out of business so that they can get even.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not at that same hearing before Mr. Becker that you are testifying to that you finally admitted your connection with Mr. Rumely and Dr. Albert and connections with Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not admit that, too?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. This was in Norman White's place.

Maj. HUMES. Did not Norman White examine you at Mr. Becker's hearings?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; he examined me.

Maj. HUMES. He was the one that examined you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And while he was examining you did you not admit the receipt of $205,000 from Dr. Rumely and Dr. Albert?

Mr. HAMMERLING. This was a few months ago?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. A few months before that.

Maj. HUMES. And in that same testimony did you not testify as I read to you a while ago?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A few months ago I testified to that, and then he repeated it here; but he did not ask me the same questions, to the best of my recollection.

Senator NELSON. From whom was that money?

Maj. HUMES. Dr. Albert, the chairman of the German propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not get any money there from Dr. Albert. I got it from Rumely.

Senator OVERMAN. From Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is he the man that has been indicted?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Let us go to that. You did have some connection with Mr. Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No connection at all. I placed the advertisements. I have a statement here, Major.

Maj. HUMES. I do not care about a statement. Just answer the questions. We have a lot of statements here. We want the facts here.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is what I am going to give you.

Maj. HUMES. How did you come in contact with Mr. Rumely, and what led up to this contact?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Shall I go ahead and tell you the story?

Maj. HUMES. Go ahead.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I met Dr. Rumely through the H. K. McCann Advertising Agency in 1912 through a man by the name of Ellis, who was his advertising manager. Dr. Rumely was the president of the Rumely Farm Tractor Co., in La Porte, Ind., and Chicago. I was at a convention at the time. He wanted me to do some advertising in the Scandinavian and the Bohemian and other papers of his tractors. Later on I met some other officers through Rumely, and later on I went to see his plant in La Porte, and I saw that they were building a hotel—a wonderful hotel—called the Rumely; and then he asked me to address a school near Interlaken, a school for boys, and I took a great interest in that school because I thought that he was doing a wonderful work. I carried on the advertising for a couple of years, and then I understood from the agencies that he was not doing very well.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the character of this advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Advertising of tractors for plowing.

Senator OVERMAN. Tractors for farm plowing?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Plowing tractors?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir. Then I understood that he was not doing so well; that some bankers did him out of his business; and, naturally, I was sorry for it. In February, 1914, I was having dinner—I think it was the latter part of February—in the Manhattan Hotel, in New York, and Dr. Rumely was at another table with his wife, and he came over to my table, and the first thing I said to him was, "Dr. Rumely, I am very sorry, what I hear about your business," and he said, "Oh, well, I am doing well," and I pleaded with him to continue looking after the school, for the reason that I thought the school had a great future. He said the intention he had at that time was to come and move to New York City, and he did not tell me exactly what it was that he was going to do. A few days later he came in to see me in the office and ask me what I thought of the war.

Senator WOLCOTT. This was when?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In February, 1914—1915.

Senator NELSON. 1915?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; and I told him what I saw in the two weeks that I was in Europe during the war—the terrible disasters there.

Senator WOLCOTT. By the way, what nationality is this Dr. Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He is an American by birth. I do not know what nationality he came from.

Capt. LESTER. He is of German extraction.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I told him what I saw and the hard time I had to get back, etc., and then he began talking to me and asking me about what I thought about the different races in the United States feeling worse for this country making munitions and shipping it to Europe. Offhand, not knowing a thing about it, I thought that it was a terrible thing—just what I answered him—and he agreed with me, and he is a rather excitable gentleman. He went away. A few days later he came in to see me, and he asked me what I thought of this condition, and I said: "Doctor, I really do not know very much about it. I would have to look into it, and when I see you again I would tell you."

In the meantime it went to maybe a month or maybe two weeks; I was in Chicago and talked to people in New York, and it happened that some papers saw me and some publishers saw me, and they got telegrams and letters about the terrible conditions on the other side and how the people were helping to do it, especially in Germany.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were helping to do it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; by sending these munitions. You see, if I have to say it, with all my uncomfortable things here, to confess it, I was myself made to believe, to understand, that these munitions were going to Germany. Then Dr. Rumely said to me, How could we get these people to make an appeal to the President? I said: "The proper way, doctor, would be to make it through the papers—through the foreign-language papers," and at this we began talking.

Senator NELSON. Appeal for what?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not to manufacture munitions.

Senator NELSON. For the allies?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; to ship abroad. They were asking for everyone.

Senator NELSON. Oh!

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is what I understood and what was going on at the time, and he said, to the best of my memory: "I will think it over," and finally he continued coming around, and he finally came to the conclusion that he would like to try it, and he said that he had friends who are Americans, who are seriously interested in this question of saving, humanity, that is, to preserve life; and I got interested, and he said that he would see his friends again. He finally came back, and I said to him: "Doctor, I am convinced that this appeal as you want it will not be published in our papers as a news item. The only way it could be published would be as an advertisement."

Senator NELSON. How did you say that? The only way it could be published was how?

Mr. HAMMERLING. As an advertisement.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I said, "If it is published as an advertisement it should be published not only in our papers, but in the English papers, for the reason that our people are so much in the minority;" and he agreed with me, but he said that he could not get enough money to publish it in the English and the foreign-language papers from his friends. A few days went by, and he said that he succeeded to have his friends agree to raise $100,000, and when we figured out what it would cost in the English papers and in our papers, it amounted to over $200,000; so that I said to him, "You have to get the other money," and he tried, and went out again and came back a few days later. This all took time from February until about April 1, and he claimed that he convinced his friends to do it.

Then Mr. Momand and myself, and then the agency that we had placed the business through in the English papers, the vice president, Mr. Rankin, came down and we made out the copy and Dr. Rumely was there from time to time and helped do it, which came out this year.

Senator NELSON. Did you not know all this time that this was a a movement to aid Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not; no, sir.

Senator NELSON. You did not have any suspicion that it was a movement to aid Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not the least suspicion. I would be willing to give my life to it.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how he got the money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He said he got it from these people who wanted to preserve humanity.

Senator NELSON. You acted solely to get the money? Was it for the money that was in it or was it for the sake of humanity or to help the Germans that you did it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I acted to get the advertisement.

Senator NELSON. To get the money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; to get the money.

Senator NELSON. That was all you wanted?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not think anything then about that. I did not like to help the Germans.

Senator OVERMAN. He did not tell you from whom he expected to get the money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he discuss Dr. Albert with you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not know Dr. Albert?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I saw him on the boat, on the boat that I came back on, but I never knew that he was a man that had anything to do with German propaganda or with the German Government. I understood from the captain of the boat that those three men that were always together there and had a fight with all the rest of the passengers on the boat—we were all sore because we could not get any money exchanged to come to Copenhagen——

Senator NELSON. Did you at any time when you were carrying on this business ever have any remotest suspicion that it was connected with Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not. If I had, I would never have touched it. I wish I would be dead before I touched it.

Maj. HUMES. You say you finally came to an agreement with Dr. Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that a few days before you commenced the investigation of this matter and the outlining of your plans for the publishing of this appeal, Ambassador von Bernstorff called at your office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that he never called there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He did not. If you can prove it, I will be dead right here.

Maj. HUMES. Now, while these negotiations were going on, you were in constant touch with Dr. Rumely, were you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; he used to come in. He was there all the time, practically.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any conversation with or any business with Dr. Albert at his office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never before.

Senator NELSON. Did you at this time?

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any business with Dr. Albert at his office in relation to this matter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You never went to Dr. Albert's office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went there once to collect a bill.

Maj. HUMES. A bill in connection with this transaction?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; a balance.

Senator WOLCOTT. How much was the balance?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About $4,900.

Senator WOLCOTT. When did you go there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. After the advertisements were all expired. The arrangement was that I had to present them receipted bills for the entire amount of money paid, and when I turned these bills over I was laid up in my house. Dr. Rumely said that the bills I had to present to him, and not being in the office he came to the house and brought Dr. Albert to me, introduced me to him, and he asked me to hand these bills to Dr. Albert, and Dr. Rumely finally gave us a check for the balance, which was about $5,000, which check was not cashed, the bank reported short of funds, and I finally went over to see the man Albert and had it out with him, and finally got the money from Mr. Rumely.

Maj. HUMES. How much did you receive from Dr. Rumely in cash?

Mr. HAMMERLING. $200,000.

Maj. HUMES. You got $200,000 from Dr. Rumely in cash?

Mr. HAMMERLING. And the balance also in cash.

Maj. HUMES. You got the balance from Albert?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir: from Rumely.

Maj. HUMES. You told him——

Mr. HAMMERLING. I conferred with him.

Maj. HUMES. And subsequent to that Dr. Rumely came around and paid you the balance?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. When was that that Dr. Albert came to your house?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say that it was a few days after the bills were gotten in.

Maj. HUMES. But is it not a fact that you gave an interview to the New York Times that was published on April 6?

Mr. HAMMERLING. What year?

Maj. HUMES. The day of the publication, April 6, 1915, in which you said:

I accept full responsibility for it. No German propagandist or German interest whatever is concerned in it. The money was contributed through a campaign I started on August 14 last. Individuals, societies, churches, and other organizations gave to the fund.

Did you not give such an interview to the New York Times?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You know that such an interview was printed in the New York Times?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not read the New York papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do; but I do not pay any attention to them. [Laughter.]

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that an interview of that kind was published in the New York Times and you did not repudiate it if it was not true?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If I did repudiate it they would not print it anyhow. They print many things they would not repudiate.

Maj. HUMES. Why would they not print it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The papers do what suits their advertisers. I have tried it. I have sent——

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a minute. Did the advertisers have any grievance against you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The advertisers of the New York Times may not like me, or the New York World.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know whether any of them did or not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If I do?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. It certainly must be, the way they are treating me.

Senator WOLCOTT. No; I am going back into 1915. Do you mean to say that the reason you were reported this way in the Times was because any advertisers of the New York Times had anything against you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I mean before. The English newspapers have no love for me, for the reason that I am taking so much money away from them and placing it in these foreign-language newspapers, which they had before; so that I am one out of 110,000,000 people.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your statement, then, now is that it would have been absolutely useless for you to deny this?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. To deny this interview in the New York Times?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. For the reason that the Times would not have published your denial, for the reason that the Times might lose some of this advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Now, a practical illustration of it is this. I was a few days ago asked by the Committee on Public Information to help them out to place an advertisement in New York in an English paper and in an Italian paper and one French daily. I placed this advertisement for one-half——

Maj. HUMES. Be exact in your statement.

Mr. HAMMERLING. The agency that got it charged them $2,900. I got it in for about $1,300, and when I sent it to the papers and sent the details the papers would not publish it, but they published the besmearing about it, for the reason that they wanted to injure me, or Mr. Creel, I do not know. I never saw him in my life. That is a fact.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that the last $4,900 you got was German money, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not know that it was.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not know who Dr. Albert was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I did not know at that time. I knew it later, when the papers began to expose it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not say that you had him pointed out to you on the steamer?

Mr. HAMMERLING. As a Hamburg-American director. The captain of the boat is still alive. He introduced me to a good many of the passengers that were on the boat that night, and he said these were three Hamburg Line directors.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that he was a German citizen?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I did not know about his citizenship—I mean of what country he was.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not know Mr. Albert in St. Louis while he was there from 1904 to 1908?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never knew that such a man existed.

Maj. HUMES. You did not know him during that time at all?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at the time you were putting out this appeal one of your employees came to you and told you that he knew this was German money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is false. He did not make such a statement. I know to whom the Major refers.

Maj. HUMES. Arthur Gabriel was treasurer of your company at that time.

Mr. HAMMERLING. By name.

Maj. HUMES. His name was on your letterhead.

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was, by name. The officers of the association outside of myself are officers by name.

Maj. HUMES. What do you mean by that, "by name"?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They are clerks.

Maj. HUMES. They are clerks——

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; he was a solicitor.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; but he carried the title of vice president?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; to sign the mail and go around.

Maj. HUMES. He was just as much a vice president as Nomand was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; exactly.

Maj. HUMES. He was made vice president by you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; by me.

Maj. HUMES. And that was his title?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; that is the way most of our banks and other things are run; the people that own it are not vice presidents

Maj. HUMES. Did he not, at the time this appeal was in your hands, come to you one day and say this was a German scheme?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; he did not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not call him into your office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not ask him what he knew about the matter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, Major, before we ever dreamed——

Maj. HUMES. Just answer the question.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I said no.

Maj. HUMES. You never did. And did you not say to him, "What people do not know will not hurt them"?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. And if he kept his mouth shut he would not get hurt?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He would say anything for a drink.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the kind of man you made vice president of your company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me, Senator; I did not know it at the time, what was in the man. I knew it later, after he went into business and made a failure of it. He went into the same business. He was my competitor and lasted a short time, and then he combined with this man who is trying to save himself and discredit me.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who is he?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. Zotti, a notorious man named Zotti, who took the money of 15,000 poor countrymen of his and went bankrupt and never paid them a cent.

Mr. LEWIS. Never mind that.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is the man that is bringing me here.

Maj. HUMES. No; he did not bring you here. The committee brought you here.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me; he is claiming so. A few days ago he made a speech at a banquet claiming that he did.

Maj. HUMES. We are not concerned about that. When you came to this country from Hawaii, you came here on a transport and you had no funds, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You landed in Wilkes-Barre in 1898 or 1899, and you had no money then, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not.

Maj. HUMES. What are you worth to-day?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think this is personal, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Well, it may be personal, but it is rather pertinent, we think.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I can sell everything I possess in this country to you for $250,000 to-day, or to anyone you would designate.

Senator WOLCOTT. So would I, or half of that. Your answer is not very illuminating.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say that you would sell everything you possess for $250,000. That does not indicate that you are worth that.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is all I am worth.

Maj. HUMES. Do you say that you are worth that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; about that.

Maj. HUMES. You own an estate in Galicia?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. When did you acquire that?
Mr. HAMMERLING. About eight years ago.
Maj. HUMES. About eight years ago?
Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1911, I think.
Maj. HUMES. That is not included in that $250,000 estimate, is it?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; for the reason that I do not own it any more. It was confiscated.
Maj. HUMES. When was it confiscated?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I have received word that it was confiscated.
Maj. HUMES. How do you know?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I was told so.
Maj. HUMES. Who told you so?
Mr. HAMMERLING. A gentleman told me so, from Copenhagen.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not tell Mr. Benham when you talked with him last week that you had not heard a word, and did not know anything about what had happened to that estate?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. I will repeat what I said to Mr. Benham. I did not hear from my place since March, 1916, and I heard from a man in Copenhagen whom I trust, a gentleman, who said that every piece of American property in Austro-Hungary was confiscated by the government since war was declared.
Maj. HUMES. Is the Austrian Government treating you as an American?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.
Maj. HUMES. How do you know that?
Mr. HAMMERLING. How do I know that?
Maj. HUMES. Yes.
Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1908, when they had an amnesty there, releasing from serving in the army people who had run away any man who was a citizen of another country could come back. When I left the place there, in the last days, maybe, the 27th or 29th of July, 1914, I put up the American flag.
Maj. HUMES. Where did you put it up?
Mr. HAMMERLING. On the house.
Maj. HUMES. You mean in Galicia?
Mr. HAMMERLING. On that place; yes, sir.
Maj. HUMES. All you know about the disposition that has been made about your estate over there is what you hear from rumor?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Senator NELSON. Who is this man in Copenhagen?
Mr. HAMMERLING. That man is a representative of the ——
Senator NELSON. What is his name?
Mr. HAMMERLING. E. Dircks.
Senator NELSON. How do you spell it?
Mr. HAMMERLING. D-i-r-c-k-s.
Senator NELSON. Where is he from?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Copenhagen.
Senator NELSON. What is his nationality?
Mr. HAMMERLING. He is a Swede, I think.
Senator NELSON. He is a Swede?
Mr. HAMMERLING. He is Swedish or Danish.
Senator NELSON. He is a Dane?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; maybe he is a Dane.
Maj. HUMES. Do you know Louis E. Miller?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Of the Jewish Weekly?
Maj. HUMES. Yes.
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the fact of his going to Europe after the war started?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. I think he told me. No, sir; I do not know about it.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not ask him to look after some matters in connection with your estate when he went?
Mr. HAMMERLING. After the American war stated?
Maj. HUMES. No; after the European war started.
Mr. HAMMERLING. Well; I said if he went through that way—yes. He came in, I think, to ask me to help him to get some papers to accept these articles. But I do not remember exactly what passed in the conversation.
Maj. HUMES. Do you know a man by the name of Berko?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; he is a publisher of a Hungarian paper.
Maj. HUMES. What are your relations with him?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know.
Maj. HUMES. Are you not friendly with him?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Not that I know of.
Maj. HUMES. You know whether you are or not, do you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Well; I do not know who my friends are now, Major.
Maj. HUMES. You know Horwarth, do you?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember him.
Maj. HUMES. Horwarth?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Horwarth, from Cleveland; yes.
Maj. HUMES. He and you and Berko are very friendly?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; to my face; but behind my back very far from that, so far as I know.
Maj. HUMES. You are friendly with them now, are you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Not friendly. I do business with both.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not attend an anniversary dinner, the eighty-fifth anniversary of Franz Joseph, in New York?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not; not that I remember. I understand that my name is put on the program, as they do almost every week all over the United States; they put my name on the program, that I am there; but I was not there, to the best of my memory.
Maj. HUMES. Are you sure you were not there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I asked every soul in my office before I came to Washington, to see if I could correct this one thing, and no one seemed to remember.
Maj. HUMES. Do you not remember being there when Berko proposed a toast to the Kaiser?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Major.
Maj. HUMES. At the Whitehall Club?
Mr. HAMMERLING. At the Whitehall Club? I do not remember, Major.
Maj. HUMES. Are you a member of the Whitehall Club?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. This $200,000 that you got from Rumely and Albert, how was that spent?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was paid for advertising in the English and the foreign-language papers, for the mechanical work and the commission.

Maj. HUMES. How did you place the English advertisement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I placed it through the John E. Mahan Advertising Agency.

Maj. HUMES. How did you pay that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the best of my knowledge, as I told you, I delivered to them the receipted bill. I thought it was $48,138.

Maj. HUMES. This was $38,148. It does not exceed $48,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Something like that; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you offer that advertisement to all of the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did they print it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pretty nearly all.

Maj. HUMES. Did you pay them all for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. All that printed it were paid, were they?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you have it printed in the Scandinavian papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. In what Scandinavian papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. There was an advertisement in the Skandinavien, of Chicago.

Senator NELSON. Was there in the Decorah Posten?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. The Posten is a Norwegian paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. The Danski Pioneer had it, too.

Senator NELSON. That is in Omaha?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That is a Danish paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I think it was printed in Norwegian. It was printed in the Minneapolis Tidende?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was in all of the papers; yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. It was?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Senator Hitchcock printed it free of charge.

Gentlemen, I want to say this as to what happened to me: If I would have listened to the solicitors and publishers of the newspapers to give this advertising, I would have been out, because the cry was to get more and to get more. "We will do anything to get more"—that was the cry. But as soon as the World came out that it was German propaganda I dropped it like a dead one. I have the signatures right here. I understand that some blackmailers say that these are not genuine names. I have the original signatures, every one of them [producing paper].

Maj. HUMES. All right, sir; we will let you find some of them.

Senator NELSON. May I just interpolate there?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Did you have that notice published in the Normander, of Grand Forks?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Or in the Northman, of Minneapolis?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Or in the Skandinavine, of Chicago?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. They all published that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you know what was paid them? Have you got the bills? Put the bills you paid those papers in the record.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Senator, the exact amount.

Senator NELSON. Then you hand that to the stenographer.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember the amounts.

Senator NELSON. Have you got the records in your office?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not for that year. The papers have those records.

Senator NELSON. Oh, but if you paid them would you not have a record of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not for that year. We only kept the record for the last two years.

Senator NELSON. What did you do with the others; destroy them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We put them out; yes, sir; otherwise it would take more room than we can afford to keep them.

Maj. HUMES. I have a list of papers here that I wish you would find the authority to sign.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Are they on that list?

Maj. HUMES. Here is the way it appears [indicating list].

Mr. HAMMERLING. They are the signatures [indicating].

Maj. HUMES. Here is the same thing from the New York World [indicating list].

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; you have not gotten it, Major, for the reason that the World did not have that additional list [indicating another paper].

Maj. HUMES. Then there are some that we have not checked. This is the one that the World printed. This is a part of the list. Look and find the authority that you had to use the names of those publishers.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Will somebody help me with this list?

Maj. HUMES. I expect we had better do that at the recess time, after the committee adjourns.

Senator NELSON. Was the Decorah Posten one of the papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it was, but I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Have you those in the order?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We put them in the order as they signed.

Maj. HUMES. As they signed?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you say a while ago that you understood that the shipment of munitions that was complained about was shipment to Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. You thought that this appeal, if it was effective, would stop the shipment of munitions to Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To Germany, exactly. That is the way we understood it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was this appeal published in any Austrian papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In this country, you mean?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. In the Hungarian-Austrian papers, yes, sir; also in German papers.

Senator WOLCOTT. Those papers certainly could not have thought that this appeal was against the shipment of munitions to Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. When it is paid advertising the papers do not care what it is. So long as they know that the big English papers take it, they will take it.

Maj. HUMES. You say that you thought this involved shipments into Germany as well as into Austria?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. At the time of this occurrence you were having difficulty in keeping in touch with your own property interests in Germany, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If I had trouble?

Maj. HUMES. Were you not having trouble in keeping in touch with your property interests in Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not in 1915.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first have trouble?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To get letters or to send anybody there? I think that the man who went down there to look after my property, a Polish man, went down when Italy declared war. I do not remember the date.

Maj. HUMES. How did he go there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Through Italy.

Maj. HUMES. Did you expect that munitions would be sent to Germany through Italy, or some of the countries at war with Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I understood they were going to Denmark and Sweden or Holland.

Senator NELSON. Did you not know that the British had a blockade, preventing communication with Germany on the North Sea?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not at that time.

Senator NELSON. Yes; at that time, 1915.

Mr. HAMMERLING. But I did not know it at that time.

Senator NELSON. Why did you not know it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know everything——

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Hammerling, everybody in the United States that was endowed with a moderate amount of intelligence knows that the complaint was that these munitions were being shipped to France and England, to the allies. Nobody was complaining about the shipment of munitions to Germany. Do you mean to tell me that in the face of all that information that everybody in the United States had you did not know it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know it; no, Senator. I did not. I worked about 18 hours a day.

Senator WOLCOTT. I know, but you do not look like a stupid man, Mr. Hammerling.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Thank you.

Senator WOLCOTT. With all due respect I make that statement. You were in the minority in the United States, I think, in that belief.

Maj. HUMES. We will check up these papers later, during a recess of the committee, with Mr. Hammerling.

Do you know, or did you ever know, a man by the name of Romer, who was at one time directly or indirectly connected with the Austro-Hungarian consulate?

Mr. HAMMERLING. What is the name?

Maj. HUMES. Romer.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never heard of him.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know a man by the name of Gregr?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Very well.

Maj. HUMES. What was his activity along political lines or national lines?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I understood from people that he was very proally. He is a very big man in the Bohemian community.

Maj. HUMES. You and he are very close friends, are you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well—close friends. I like him; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you and he were in touch with the Austrian consulate through this man Romer, and was it not your effort, and Gregr's with you, to align the Bohemians in this country up with the Austrians?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false; no, sir; absolutely false. I think it is a crime saying things about Gregr.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know a man named Wandmayer?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. You do not know about him?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. How much advertising did you receive from the German steamship companies up until the time war was declared?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I handled every steamship company in the United States, including the Canadian Pacific. I could not give you the number offhand, but I should think that the largest one—am I answering your question properly?

Maj. HUMES. Go on.

Mr. HAMMERLING. The largest one, I think, would be the Cunard Line, $15,000. Then there was the Hamburg-American next, with $12,000; and then the Italian lines, with perhaps $10,000, and the North German, $8,000, and then it dwindled down to the Scandinavian, about $5,000 a year.

Maj. HUMES. When did that stop?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I got a cable, when I came in from the farm there. I cabled that I was leaving and that is the way I kept in touch; and the last cable was about the 30th of July, 1914, and they discontinued a few days before that, every line, with the exception of the Scandinavian, the Cunard, and the Italian, which are still running. We are not handling the Cunard. We are handling the Italian, I think.

Senator NELSON. There are three of those lines—the Scandinavian, the Swedish line, and the Norwegian line?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you handle all three lines?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, you knew that the German steamship advertising had ceased before you got back to the United States?

Mr. HAMMERLING. All steamship advertising had ceased, with the exception of these three I have mentioned.

Maj. HUMES. Which were those?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The Cunard, the Italian lines, and the Scandinavian lines.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was not that notice to you that there was not any shipment of munitions going on to Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not understand——

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not understand at all?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know why it was then.

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not have any idea that it was because of the war?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Or that the British blockade had interposed any obstacle?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Why did you not come back on the Hamburg Line? Why did you come back on a Danish line?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had a ticket on the Hamburg Line, and they returned me the money.

Maj. HUMES. Then, as a matter of fact, you knew that there was no shipping going into Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of course I knew there was no steamers going in there.

Maj. HUMES. Then, if you knew there was no shipping going into Germany, you knew that the so-called appeal——

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). Was intended to interfere with the activities of the allies, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, Major, I will go back to the simple statement, which in my humble way is truth; I did not know a thing about it. He said that this money was spent by people to protect humanity and not to ship munitions anywhere, and I understood from publishers that I asked that the people had been mostly destroyed in Poland by what was taking place in Russia, and it was Germany, and that this was going to Germany, and in all that time I never heard of munitions being made anywhere except by those companies—the Du Pont Co. and the Remington Arms Co.—and Mr. Schwab told me a few years ago that at another place here they were making guns for Austria-Hungary. I am not in favor of militarism, so that I do not know a thing about it and never studied it, and never hope to.

Maj. HUMES. How did you get authority to sign the names of different publishers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They are right here in this list [indicating papers].

Maj. HUMES. How did you do it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I sent out a letter.

Maj. HUMES. Did you send a letter to all of them or communicate with them personally?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Every one got the same circular letter.

Maj. HUMES. Did you send it to all through the mails?

Mr. HAMMERLING. All through the mails.

Maj. HUMES. Did you undertake to persuade or coax any of them to sign it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never. I did not care whether 10 of them signed it or a hundred.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the publishers who would not sign this appeal at your request were taken off your advertising list, and that you threatened you would take them off and did take them off and never put them on afterwards?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false. The same man who has been blackmailing me makes the same statement.

Maj. HUMES. Who is he; Mr. Zotti?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; Mr. Zotti.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Popovich?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What paper is he connected with?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He has got a little Serbian paper.

Maj. HUMES. His connection with Mr. Zotti is purely imaginary, is it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir. I have a paper here I will show you.

Maj. HUMES. Now, just wait a minute and answer the questions. Mr. Popovich runs a newspaper and Zotti is not connected with it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. Mr. Zotti runs a good many papers that he is not supposed to be connected with.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you sent one of your solicitors out to secure the signature of Popovich to this appeal——

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Wait until I finish the question.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Pardon me.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). That he refused to sign it, and that he called you up on the telephone and told you he did not think it was right for you to put out a thing of that kind, and you told him he had better sign it or he would be sorry for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact that from that day on you have never given him one dollar of advertisement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is absolutely false, for the reason that I did give him advertising since that for a daily paper, a Serbian paper, that was established, and some advertisers who want to reach the Serbians use that paper. That is all there is about it and nothing else.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that Serbian paper started in order that there should be a Serbian paper that you could dominate and control?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely had nothing to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. How many of your advertisers furnish you a list of the papers that these advertisements are to go into?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About 99 per cent of them.

Maj. HUMES. About 99 per cent of them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Andreae never designated them, did he?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I know, but that is quite a different proposition

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Rumely designate the papers that he wanted his advertisements to go in?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir—not the foreign papers, but all the English papers.

Maj. HUMES. I am speaking about foreign papers. Did he not designate the foreign papers that he wanted used?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He used them all.

Maj. HUMES. He used them all?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did the Standard Oil Co. designate their papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do they give you the particular papers they want used?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you the data showing what they designate?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; the regular order. They give the information.

Maj. HUMES. You have a form of order here [indicating paper]. Here is one right here.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; that is it. I will give you the whole thing.

Maj. HUMES. This is your form [examining paper].

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; that is my form.

Maj. HUMES. Supposing a man wanted matter published in 200 or 300 papers, how could you designate them on the forms you use?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Designate it?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. He generally says, "I want to cover this territory. I want to cover this kind of people, or nationality."

Maj. HUMES. Does he not mention the sort of papers or the class of papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you select the papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I do not.

Maj. HUMES. But your office does.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; in some cases they could select them themselves.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you have not given Mr. Popovich one dollar's worth of advertising since——

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is absolutely false. I saw him here, and he called up only a few weeks ago and asked if a certain bill was paid from my office, and it was paid.

Maj. HUMES. Tell us what you know about the organization of the Liberty Immigration Society, a few years ago.

Mr. HAMMERLING. This society was organized to work against the literacy-test bill.

Maj. HUMES. Who organized it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was among the organizers.

Maj. HUMES. And you gave out a little green card, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You sold those cards for membership?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not sell them. The membership for a year was $1.

Maj. HUMES. You issued them these green cards?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that it was represented to the aliens, whose membership was sought, that that would enable them to bring into this country, through Ellis Island, their friends, and that they would not have any trouble there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. Did not the Government take a hand with that organization?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What became of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The President of the United States at that time was the honorary president of it.

Maj. HUMES. What became of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. When we got through with it it was wound up by the attorney.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the President?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. President Taft.

Maj. HUMES. He was the honorary president?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was.

Maj. HUMES. Did he know about it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I should say he did. Most of the money put into it I put in.

Maj. HUMES. How many members did you have?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A couple of thousand.

Maj. HUMES. What did that organization do?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They went around on committees to make speeches in different places to educate people against the literacy-test law, on the ground that it was not the fault of a human being if his father or his country did not give him an education, and it was not right to expect him to be kept out of the country on that ground.

Maj. HUMES. How many meetings did you have?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of this society?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Quite a few; as many as were necessary.

Maj. HUMES. Was not the first purpose of that organization to give you a name that you could use for your propaganda purposes?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, I did not need that at all. I did not need it, Major.

Maj. HUMES. You could use your own name for propaganda purposes?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir—what propaganda purposes, if you will pardon me?

Maj. HUMES. The immigration propaganda.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Do you think it was a wrong thing to defend the rights of these people?

Maj. HUMES. I am not discussing the merits of the question.

Mr. HAMMERLING. The strongest men in the country were in that. I was only one among them.

Maj. HUMES. Just shortly before you put out this appeal you carried on some investigations of labor conditions about munition factories in this country, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not investigations. We had the inspection. You take a business of an unknown kind and the thing to do is to find out what they are doing. I will give you an example. A few years ago a man came from Louisiana by the name of Watkins. He wanted to sell farms in Louisiana. We said to him, "We will take this advertising if the papers can feel that they can handle it"; we sent a committee down there to see that land and see if the title was correct, and so forth; and it was all right, and when the report was that it was all right we accepted the business.

When Rumely began to talk that he was going to do this advertising the question was how we shall reach these foreigners; I said to them, "The best thing is to find out who these workers are, where they are from." I did not know a thing about it—where they were from. So that in the course of time he brought me in a list, a piece of yellow paper, and handed it to Mr. Momand, who repeated it to me yesterday—he is now an officer in the United States Army—and he said when I got the list I went into my room and said to Arthur Gabriel, "You go there," and to another fellow, "Go there," and I think it was five or six names, and we asked Wazeter, and he personally went to Brooklyn, he said. I would not have remembered it, but he said he went to Brooklyn and spent a couple of hours and came back.

Maj. HUMES. What did you send these men for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. These men were to find out where these places are, and what there was there, and the priests, or the newspapers, or whatever there was there—what these fellows have in this work and to inquire of the priests or the papers or the saloons. They came back in a couple of days and I understood from Mr. Momand that the reports was that they said—if the ladies will pardon me—"They did not give a damn what they were doing so long as they made good money," and they said there were less than 20 per cent foreigners and the rest were Americans or Germans.

Maj. HUMES. Then if you found out a situation of that kind as the basis for your activity with this appeal, why did you go on and put out an appeal and spend $200,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Major, I went just according to Dr. Rumely exactly, and I did not discourage him to place the advertisement, for the reason that I wanted the advertisement. Times were hard and I thought it was good business to get it.

Maj. HUMES. This appeal you put out was an appeal to the American people, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And it was not an appeal to the foreigners?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We called ourselves Americans. If a man addresses me as an American he is protected under our flag.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not your purpose in sending these men out to these different munition factories to get a line on this proposition with a view of carrying a propaganda into munitions factories.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. These men who went out and made a written report——

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not a written report that I ever saw. I asked Mr. Momand yesterday, and he said that it was absolutely false.

Senator WOLCOTT. You mentioned just a moment ago, as an illustration, the case of a Louisiana advertiser, advertising for the sale of land?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not want to accept that advertising until you had satisfied yourself that there was such land there as they represented they owned, and that the title was all right?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your purpose in doing that, I should suppose, was——

Mr. HAMMERLING. To protect the purchasers.

Senator WOLCOTT. To make sure that there was no fake advertisement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And that it would go out and that these people that put up their money would not be defrauded by somebody who had gotten up a scheme to get their money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. The investigation you made into the munitions plants as preliminary to the publishing of this advertisement could not have been from any such motive as that, because this advertisement was not of something to sell. Therefore it strikes me that the investigation you were conducting into the munitions plants was not for any such reason as that which you conducted in the Louisiana case, and there must have been some other reason. What was that other reason?

Mr. HAMMERLING. There was another reason, to find out what these people were. I did not know what papers to employ. He paid it himself. We did not pay these expenses.

Senator WOLCOTT. But is not this as clear as sunlight, that the thing the advertisement was intended to accomplish was the stopping of the shipment of munitions; and in that case how did you get any information from communicating with the Du Pont people who manufactured powder or with the Remington people who made guns? It did not make any difference; you wanted to stop the shipments.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not me; the advertiser wanted to stop the shipment.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; the advertiser.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. But you made the investigation to protect your concern from putting out a fraudulent or fake advertisement or something of that kind, you say?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Will you explain to me how an investigation such as you conducted in connection with a thing like this would prevent your handling any fraudulent thing? Can you explain that now?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am trying to, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are making a very poor try of it, I must say.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not get that, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not follow your explanation, at all.

Mr. HAMMERLING. My explanation is that we sent these men over there to see what kind of men, to find out if this advertising would have any value, and we reported the truth. When Rumely came in, I called him, and I think Gabriel is here, and no different opinion was presented. They said that this fellow said they did not give a damn what they were doing, so long as they made money; that they were mostly in the minority; that they are mostly Americans and Germans; and he said "Go ahead with it."

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, he would have said that, whatever the result of the investigation might have been, because the investigation threw no light on the question of whether you should take the advertisement or not.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely.

Senator WOLCOTT. It was absolutely irrelevant.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely.

Senator WOLCOTT. And it was time wasted and no use.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Absolutely foolish and ridiculous.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then, if that is the case, what was the real reason of making that investigation by these men you sent to the munitions plants?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I told you, Major.

Maj. HUMES. If this appeal had been successful it would have meant that the munition factories and workers in munition factories would have quit working on munitions.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That is an appeal to ask these men to quit working in munition factories? That was the purpose?

Mr. HAMMERLING. This was the feeling of the Nation at the time, anyhow; of the residents of the United States, and of the Senate.

Maj. HUMES. The thought that you and Rumely had in mind was not to prevent the shipping of munitions already manufactured, but to prevent the manufacture of munitions by workmen in the country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had nothing of the kind in mind at all.

Maj. HUMES. That was evidently what Rumely wanted?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Who wrote this?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am telling you, Momand and myself and Mr. Rankin and Dr. Rumely.

Maj. HUMES. Then you helped write it. Who wrote this paragraph?

"We appeal individually to the workmen of such factories, even at the sacrifice of their positions, to go on record as being unalterably opposed to being employed for the purpose of manufacturing ammunition to shatter the bodies and blot out the lives of their own blood relatives."

Who wrote that paragraph?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that was in there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I have not read it since it appeared. I read it before it appeared.

Maj. HUMES. How could that appeal that I have just read interfere with the shipping of munitions?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. I do not think I understand your question.

Maj. HUMES. You say this was to prevent the shipping of munitions. If that appeal that I have just read had been heeded in this country, how would it have interfered with the shipping of munitions?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not understand it yet.

Senator WOLCOTT. Apparently there would not have been any munitions shipped.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. In other words, apparently this appeal was to cause industrial trouble and to prevent men from working in munition factories. That was the purpose of it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am not an industrial trouble maker.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that the effect of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. Was not that the purpose of it? Was not that the result?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am not responsible for that.

Senator NELSON. I am not asking you if you are responsible. I am asking you if that was not the effect of such an appeal as that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know.

Senator NELSON (continuing). Upon the men.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know.

Senator NELSON. If that had been addressed to you would it not have impressed you so?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. At any rate I am not impressed with what an advertisement says.

Maj. HUMES. You say you helped write that advertisement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You will put this in the record?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Put it all in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

(The appeal and supplement thereto are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 155.

[The World: Monday, April 5, 1915.]

NOTE: The name of the Narodni List will not be found below. It refused to sign the "Appeal," or to publish this advertisement.

Compliments of Narodni List, the oldest American daily in Croatian.

AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

"LET US ALLEVIATE HUMAN SUFFERING AND PRESERVE LIFE—NOT HELP TO DESTROY IT."

As a result of receiving hundreds of thousands of letters, cables and messages through various sources containing heart-broken appeals, prayers and pleas from the people of our mother countries, we, the undersigned editors and publishers, have concluded to place this appeal before the great American people on behalf of our readers.

The readers of our newspapers are vitally affected, almost without exception, by this disastrous conflict of the European nations. Their brothers, their sisters, parents, children or relatives live in the warring countries. This does not mean that the American people as a whole is not vitally affected, but our readers are more closely linked through the bonds of blood relationship with the peoples of countries now plunged in the depths of barbaric warfare. Each day's mail with its news of the pitiful progress of the war, brings some new and bitter anguish to the hearts of our people.

The pleas of the millions of widowed mothers, the appeals of the fatherless children and orphans and the prayers of the starving thousands of Europe directed to us, justifies us, we believe, in making this appeal in the name of humanity and justice.

We appeal to the American people, to the high minded and courageous American press, and to the American manufacturer of powder, shrapnel and cartridges, and we appeal to the workmen engaged in the plants devoted to the manufacture of ammunition for use by the nations at war, to immediately cease making powder, shrapnel and cartridges destined to destroy our brothers, widow our sisters and mothers and orphan their children as well as destroy forever the priceless possession handed down by our ancestors.

We appeal particularly to the American manufacturers and their workmen engaged in manufacturing any of these articles, to suspend at once the manufacture of powder and bullets which are being made for the cruel and inhuman purpose of mutilating and destroying humanity.

We appeal individually to the workmen of such factories, even at the sacrifice of their positions, to go on record as being unalterably opposed to being employed for the purpose of manufacturing ammunition to shatter the bodies and blot out the lives of their own blood relatives.

The honor of the American people, the integrity of the Nation, the standing of our manufacturers and the patriotism and manhood of the workmen, demand that the entire world be shown, once and forever, that money soaked with the blood of humanity cannot purchase these qualities.

We ask the American people, therefore, in the name of humanity and a true spirit of neutrality to do everything in their power as individuals and collectively as a Nation to influence the manufacturers and workmen in the United States, engaged in the manufacture of powder and bullets for use by any of the warring countries of the world, to end this manufacture, the selling and the shipping of such materials.

We appeal to you, and every reader, to help us save our brothers abroad from further destruction. Let us Americans rise with courage and decision to our responsibility.

First, we must stop the wholesale manufacture of ammunition for profit, and thus end our own participation in the war.

Then, we can insist that Europe heed our demand for peace. Stop your work on powder, shrapnel and cannon.

Make your will felt through resolutions of your societies, by appeal to your local press, by action in your churches, by letters to your representatives in public office.

Our participation must stop now and then our influence for justice and righteousness can help end the war.

The cost of this advertisement has been voluntarily given in the shape of small contributions by our people, who are actuated by a sense of humanity and justice and a patriotic desire not to have this peace-loving Nation directly or indirectly the cause of futher loss of life or destruction of property.

The following is the resolution signed by the publishers authorizing this appear to the American people:

"We, the publishers of the undersigned newspapers, authorize an appeal to the American people, industries and workmen, not to manufacture, sell or ship powder, shrapnel or shot of any kind or description to any of the warring nations of Europe, or Japan."

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with David Lamar?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Jeremiah O'Leary?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never saw him in my life. I saw him mentioned in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with the Labor's Peace Council?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never known it existed until I saw it in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that the propaganda they were carrying on was included in this appeal, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Your purpose was to prevent the manufacture of munitions, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had nothing to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. But you wrote this advertisement, or helped to write it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was there with them, but I had nothing else to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Henry Martin?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never heard of him. Where is he from?

Capt. LESTER. Associated with Lamar.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never heard of him.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Hammerling, in the American Leader—what contract did you have with the other writers besides Andreae for the articles that appeared in the Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We just had three paid contributors.

Maj. HUMES. Who were they?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Ira Bennett, of Washington, and L. B. Namier.

Maj. HUMES. Was George Creel one of your contributors?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never.

Maj. HUMES. I notice an article by him.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am not acquainted with it. It may have been put in in my absence. I would have sworn that I never saw it. Are you sure it is there?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have not seen it.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with George Sylvester Viereck?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have only seen his name in the paper.

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever had any business transactions with him of any kind?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have never seen outside of the papers, Major.

Maj. HUMES. You are familiar with the periodical the Fatherland, are you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of what I saw in the papers. I have not read it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it a German periodical?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is what I understand.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know it was English?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never saw it.

Senator NELSON. You have never seen the Fatherland in New York City?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. You must be blind a part of the day.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I may be. I think I have enough papers to see without the Fatherland.

Maj. HUMES. And you never had any business transactions with it at all?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any arrangement with Viereck by which he was to republish any articles in the Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the issue of the Fatherland of May 5, 1915, and show you an article to discourage the traffic in arms and munitions, by Hon. Charles Nagel, ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and ask you what agreement you had—what arrangement you made—for the publication?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Myself—no, sir. Right here is the statement "Everything contained in this is not copyrighted and can be republished by anybody." It does not need any arrangement at all.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the statement that the article is published by the courtesy of the American Leader. That is the heading under which it is printed.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. Nagel may have printed it. We did not print it.

Maj. HUMES. But they were reprinted in the Fatherland—the articles that appeared in the American Leader.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. If there is a general consent to republish articles from the Leader, that statement is unnecessary, that it is published by the courtesy of the Leader.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Many publications republish like we do from others, and from us.

Maj. HUMES. You did publish, and paid a contributing editor to write in the spring of 1915 in the Leader about the time this appeal was put out, an article advocating the same things as this advertisement was advocating, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Major, Mr. Nagel, when he agreed to act as our contributor, was understood fully at the time as an ex-member of the cabinet of the United States, that we would not interfere with what he wrote, and we never did.

Maj. HUMES. And was he confined to any particular subject?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; absolutely not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you always publish everything that the contributing editor sent in to you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To the best of my knowledge, yes; the ones we paid for.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the American Leader of November 22, to an article by Nagel on the traffic in arms and munitions. Does not that article carry the same sentiment that is embraced in the "Appeal to the American People"?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have not seen it.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not read the American Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do, but I do not remember every week nor every article. Mr. Nagel, I think, should take the responsibility, because of the arrangement we had with him.

Maj. HUMES. How much did you pay him?

Mr. HAMMERLING. $125 an article.
Maj. HUMES. And how frequently did his articles appear?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Pretty nearly every issue.
Maj. HUMES. Your magazine is a weekly?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Semimonthly.
Maj. HUMES. And he got $125 cash for each article?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.
Senator NELSON. Did John Koren contribute any articles?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember now. I do not think so, Senator.
Maj. HUMES. Does it strike you that there is anything peculiar about the fact that this article appears in the American Leader in April and the same article appears in the Fatherland at the same time that this appeal goes out to the American people?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I never suspected. I thought Mr. Nagel was an American, as honest as any that I know of in the United States, so his articles when he sent them in were printed, to the best of my knowledge. Of course Mr. Caldwell had charge of that department most of the time.
Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Stephen Brosevich?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Never heard of him.
Maj. HUMES. He was formerly managing editor or something on Mr. Zotti's paper.
Mr. HAMMERLING. There are so many of those fellows, I do not remember him.
Maj. HUMES. You do not remember him?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not.
Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Mr. Brosevich came to Washington and had a conference with Dr. Dumba, the Austrian representative, and came back to you with a letter of introduction or something from Dumba, and that you had him start a paper by investing $500?
Mr. HAMMERLING. If it can be produced then——
Maj. HUMES (interposing). Just answer the question.
Mr. HAMMERLING. False; I want never to leave Washington, if that is true. This is going a little too far. I think it is terrible that such blackmailing be admitted in this high body—the highest legislative body on earth—that such a crime could be produced. I want only the facts on this thing.
Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the question without remarks.
Mr. HAMMERLING. I know, but it puts my life out of me that such things should be said.
Maj. HUMES. Do you remember on one occasion when you bundled up four bunches of papers and sent them up to your house to be burned?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false. Can I answer this question?
Maj. HUMES. Go ahead.
Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1913 we moved our office from the World Building to the Woolworth Building, and it takes a few carloads of stuff to clean out our place twice a year. It takes about two carloads to clean out the papers. But when we moved our records like orders that we received from clients and things, we had previously had one of our employees steal some of our records, so that instead of leaving them in the World Building to burn up, as the superintendent said it was against the rules of building to do so, the manager of the Mansfield, where I lived, said that we could take them there and burn them up.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that when these papers were taken to your house to be destroyed you discovered that the house was being heated other than by a furnace and that it was impossible to burn them, and you said you would take care of them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know anything about that. The building is still standing there, and the manager would be glad to tell you if he remembers.

Maj. HUMES. In 1915 and 1916 did you not have a good deal of correspondence with a man named Heinrich, of Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What became of that correspondence?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it is there.

Maj. HUMES. In 1915?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If 1915, it is not there. We keep only one year's papers.

Maj. HUMES. We subpœnaed the correspondence with brewers or anyone in connection with the propaganda.

Mr. HAMMERLING. We have hundreds of people that we deal with.

Maj. HUMES. Where is the correspondence you had with Paap?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It must be in the office. I was not asked to bring it.

Maj. HUMES. You were asked to bring it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not understand so.

Maj. HUMES. Paap is a brewer, is he not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think he was an advertising manager of some concern. I did not know his business.

Maj. HUMES. You did not know his business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He owns an interest in a brewery.

Maj. HUMES. We subpœnaed the correspondence you had had with brewers, did we not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not in Paap's name. I would be glad to bring it.

Maj. HUMES. You also know that he is president of the Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, do you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To-day, maybe. I did not know it at that time. I do not think he was. I understood a man named Schmidt was president.

Maj. HUMES. Why did you insist on the Rumely money being paid in cash?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never did anything of the kind. He handed me the money in cash. Nothing of the kind. If anybody says so, it is false.

Maj. HUMES. Did it not strike you as a rather peculiar thing that $100,000 cash currency should be given you instead of a check, in the ordinary course of a man's business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To tell you the truth, it did. I was so glad to get the advertisement that the money looked better than the check.

Maj. HUMES. What was the company that Rumely was president of?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The Rumely Co., a $30,000,000 corporation.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not know at that time that the company was in the hands of a receiver?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; but he was such a big man I had no reason to suspect.

Maj. HUMES. What entry of this transaction did you make on your books?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Entry?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I turned over the money to the treasurer.

Maj. HUMES. How did you have it charged on your books?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Charged to Rumely.

Maj. HUMES. To Rumely personally?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And what is your practice with reference to your books; do you destroy them every year?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Every year. I do not have anything to do with that. It is the regular custom in New York business houses, and especially advertising, to throw out the paper that they are through with every year.

Maj. HUMES. Do you destroy your ledger records?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We do not keep a ledger.

Maj. HUMES. So you even destroy your financial records and all the records you have on the receipt and disbursement of money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The vouchers show this.

Maj. HUMES. But it does show receipt of money.

Mr. HAMMERLING. But we have a card, which I showed you. Our system is accepted by accountants that it is all right.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not one of the stipulations that you had with Rumely that the transaction was not to appear on the books?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false, if anyone made such a statement.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know a man by the name of Horowitz, over in Scranton?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Wilkes-Barre: Joseph Horowitz. He is dead.

Maj. HUMES. What were your relations with him?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was a very high-grade man. I had a great respect for him—if it is the same Horowitz. He was in the foreign-exchange business.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is the same man.

Maj. HUMES. You and he were very close friends?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I liked him; he was a very high-grade man, in my judgment. I understand he died two or three years ago.

Maj. HUMES. Now tell us about the transaction between you and Mr. Houston when you made the donation of $5,000.

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you will pardon me [referring to certain papers] I want to recall the transaction. I was asked some time during the year 1917 by Mr. Houston to serve on a committee of 17, on the advertising board, and naturally I accepted. I was in Chicago at the time and came back and attended a meeting—a couple of meetings.

Senator OVERMAN. What Houston is this?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Herbert Houston, the partner of the ex-Ambassador to England, Mr. Page, connected with World's Work. And while on this committee, as the gentlemen have no doubt read the correspondence, you notice that I contributed only $5,000. I heard that the thing was not as represented, and sent in and found out through the Treasury Department that this committee was not a Government committee, that they had nothing to do with it, and did not want to recognize it, for the reason that they wanted to get money from the Government for paid advertisements. I understand from Mr. Houston—the correspondence corroborates my statement—that it was not a Government institution and therefore I did not have any right to contribute this money from my company—besides the State laws of New York did not permit it—and I did it in haste, and I asked this money back. I finally turned the money back to the company and Mr. Houston paid me back $4,200, and the balance I finally contributed so as to get rid of it.

Maj. HUMES. The reason I am asking about this, Mr. Hammerling, is that I want to clear the thing up.

Mr. HAMMERLING. We finally got the money back, and here is what we spent it for. [Indicating.] We took a page in the New York Times, the Sun, World, Tribune, and Chicago—I do not remember whether it was the Tribune or the Examiner—and the Cleveland Plain Dealer, some name like that, eight of our papers, and not only spent this money from the agency, but spent $3,200, to show the American people what the foreign-language papers were doing with the Liberty Loan. That is all I can answer on the Houston question, Major, unless you want to go into details. I would have to look it over.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Hammerling, I want to try to refresh your recollection on two or three matters. Is it not a fact that you first returned to Austria about 1893?

Mr. HAMMERLING. 1893? No, sir; it was not.

Maj. HUMES. About 1893?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not at that time seek the father of the girl that you married, saying that you wanted to marry her so that you could escape the draft in Austria?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Utterly false.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not then go into the Austrian Army?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. When I was taken in there, when I was called, I was laid up with an abscess, and they put me in a hospital and I went to the hospital; never in the army.

Maj. HUMES. You were in the service for a while?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not a day.

Maj. HUMES. You left on a furlough and came back while on a furlough?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you were on a furlough when you were married?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And did not the Austrian Government notify you after some little time, after your furlough had expired?

Mr. HAMMERLING. And I came right here.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). That if you did not appear you would be prosecuted?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You borrowed the money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not have to borrow any money.

Maj. HUMES. You had money at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had enough. I told you that I hired myself out.

Maj. HUMES. How old were you at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I was about 27. It was either in 1896 or 1897.

Maj. HUMES. What are the ages of compulsory military service in Austria?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Between 21 and 23 at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Then, if you were 26 or 27, how did they happen to call you for military service?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that when they want to examine you, and you are sick, they may call you any time. It depends on the condition of the regiment to which you are assigned.

Maj. HUMES. You went from your home to Bremen, Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When you were in Bremen you communnicated with your wife and told her how she could find out where you had gone?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember it.

Maj. HUMES. And did you not leave word there that you had gone to South America?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false. She knew as much where South America was as I did where Jerusalem was.

Maj. HUMES. Now, is it not a fact that your wife came to this country about 1897?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not have the year exactly, Major. I told you she came after I did. You just said 1897 or 1898.

Maj. HUMES. I am accepting your dates up to this time. I am asking you about some other dates. Was it not in 1897 that your wife came to this country and you found out that she was living in Philadelphia, and did you not write to her from Honolulu?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did, yes, sir; and I came right here; but I do not remember the year.

Maj. HUMES. She had been in Philadelphia about six months when you notified her that you were in Honolulu?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and I came right away.

Maj. HUMES. And about three months after that you came and joined them in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did not your father-in-law send you the railroad ticket from San Francisco to Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Are you on friendly terms with your father-in-law?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think not.

Maj. HUMES. Are you on friendly terms with your brother-in-law?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The worst blackmailer that ever lived.

Maj. HUMES. Your associates seem all to be blackmailers.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; that is what some of them were.

Maj. HUMES. How did you happen to be friendly with them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was not. That is the misfortune. You gentlemen do not know the kind of people that exist in this country. If you deal with 2,000 people, and you find 3 or 4 of that kind, it is not so bad.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, in 1904, tell your wife and her family that you were there at Wilkes-Barre, and that you were going to live with them in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Will you say you did or did not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not buy a house in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Where was that house?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I bought two; one on Spruce Street and one of them near the park. I do not remember the street, Major.

Maj. HUMES. And you opened an office in Philadelphia, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was your business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not an office. I bought some interest in a lubricating company.

Maj. HUMES. In a lubricating company?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you engage in this business?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I was here a year and a half or so, but I was not running the business. I was interested. I was an officer in the company.

Maj. HUMES. After engaging in the business in Philadelphia for some time—

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was still keeping my home in Wilkes-Barre.

Maj. HUMES. You maintained two homes?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I always had only one home, Wilkes-Barre.

Maj. HUMES. You were engaged in business in Philadelphia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was not; I was coming to Philadelphia to see—I was interested in this lubricating company.

Maj. HUMES. Then some short time afterward you went back to Austria and Germany, did you not—or went to Europe, in other words—about 1905?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went to Europe the first time I could after 1908, after the amnesty, as they would have taken me into the army before.

Senator NELSON. You went to Galicia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I could not go there without that paper being passed first. But I think I was in Italy and the other parts of Europe before.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that before you ever went to Europe on that occasion, your wife pointed out to you that you could not go to Austria because you were a political offender, and did you not say to her that you were not afraid and that you had your discharge, and did you not pull it out of your pocket and show it to her at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. When you went back you went to Carlsbad, among other places?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did, sir. This was in 1909 or 1910.

Maj. HUMES. How long were you over there on that trip?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About three months or three and a half months.

Maj. HUMES. And when you came back you told your wife that you wanted to sell out and go back to Austria—wanted to leave the United States—did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Well, was that your sentiment when you came back.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was that the time you acquired this estate in Austria?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; in 1911.

Senator NELSON. May I ask a question there? How big is that estate?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About 600 acres.

Senator NELSON. Have you got tenants running it for you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. I had had my own men running it.

Senator NELSON. You hired them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Had a manager there?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. This is all under cultivation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What is it worth?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, before the war they claimed it was worth a couple of hundred thousand dollars.

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever said that it was worth half a million?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Never said that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When you came back from Austria did you not tell your wife that you had enough money to live for the rest of your life, and that you had no love for this country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Absolutely false. Is this her statement, Major?—pardon me.

Maj. HUMES. That does not make any difference, although it does not happen to be.

Mr. HAMMERLING. If it is my brother-in-law, you want to look out and see what he is before you take him seriously.

Maj. HUMES. He is a blackmailer, is he?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; one of the worst kind.

Maj. HUMES. At that time, after you came back you sent your wife back to Austria, did you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. She went back for her vacation.

Maj. HUMES. And you sold your house in Philadelphia at that time, and you told her at that time that you wanted time to wind up your business in this country, and then you would join her?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. You did follow her, did you? You went over shortly after that and stayed over there a little while and then came back again?

Mr. HAMMERLING. What year was that?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know. That is what I am asking you.

Mr. HAMMERLING. She went over there in 1911, when I bought that place.

Maj. HUMES. When you bought her a place?

Mr. HAMMERLING. When I bought her that farm; yes.
Maj. HUMES. She went over at that time?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. And you bought this farm at that time?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. After that you bought a house in Brooklyn, did you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Not after that; no. I bought a house in Brooklyn before that.
Maj. HUMES. You lived there a couple of years after that, after you and your wife came back from Austria, did you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not go to Austria.
Maj. HUMES. You went over after she went over?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; that was after I sold the house in Brooklyn.
Maj. HUMES. After you both went to Austria, did you not live in Brooklyn for a couple of years?
Mr. HAMMERLING. After I came back?
Maj. HUMES. Yes.
Mr. HAMMERLING. No.
Maj. HUMES. When did you live in Brooklyn for those couple of years?
Mr. HEMMERLING. I think in 1909 and 1910.
Maj. HUMES. Was that before your wife went to Austria?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. I know, according to when I sent my boys. I sent the boys to school in England at the same time, seven years ago.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not send your wife to Austria twice, once before you acquired this estate and then once after you acquired it?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I think she went over a couple of times with the children to a summer resort.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not say to her that you would arrange your business in this country so you could live in Austria and attend to it from there?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.
Maj. HUMES. Attend to it here?
Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.
Maj. HUMES. And you say that you had authority to sign the names of all these foreign newspapers, and that you have the record of it?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Every one of them, but outside of yourself or any one you would designate, I would not leave them here.
Maj. HUMES. I want you to find them and put them in order, so that we can look at them. Have you got them in the order in which the names appear?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I think so.
Maj. HUMES. All right. We will check them over when we get leisure.
Mr. HAMMERLING. I am willing to stay here all night if you want to, to tell every name, until every name is verified on this list that I have there. Of course, I am appearing continuously, I think for six or eight months anyhow. I could stay all night if you want me to.

Senator OVERMAN. It is nearly 6 o'clock, and I think we had better adjourn until half past 10 to-morrow. How long will it take you to finish with this witness?

Maj. HUMES. I do not think it will take a great while longer. I would like to check over a great mass of stuff and see if it has been covered. I do not think it will take very long to finish with him in the morning.

Senator OVERMAN. Then we will adjourn until half-past 10 tomorrow morning.

(Accordingly, at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., the committee adjourned until Wednesday, December 4, 1918, at 10.30 a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m. in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Sterling, and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. You may proceed, Maj. Humes.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING—Resumed.

Mr. HAMMERLING. With your permission may I correct a statement?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling wants to correct a statement he made yesterday.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I made a statement yesterday about when I found out that I was born in 1870 instead of 1874; and last night I was thinking, and I found a card on which is written the date, the card being dated June 9, 1917, about a year and a half ago.

Maj. HUMES. And the card you use to refresh your recollection is of the military enrollment of the State of New York?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That was made in June, 1917?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you secure that information as to the date of your birth just at that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About that time.

Maj. HUMES. What called it to your attention at that particular time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They told me that I should not make an affidavit.

Maj. HUMES. Who told you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. My relatives told me not to make any affidavit.

Maj. HUMES. Not to make any affidavit; and then when they told you to make no affidavit, what investigation did you make as to your correct age?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went to my uncle and he told me that.

Maj. HUMES. You went to your uncle, and your uncle is your authority for the statement that you were born in 1870 instead of 1874?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then this investigation, resulting in making you four years older than you thought you were, came about as the result of a prospective military enrollment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I beg your pardon—for the reason that my sister, who comes from the second mother of my father's marriage, is 45 years old, and she lives in New York and has 3 children.

Maj. HUMES. But you made this investigation because of a prospective military enrollment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; they made me do it. They asked me to do it.

Maj. HUMES. Your family made you do it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You were not interested in it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Senator OVERMAN. You knew how old you were when you came here, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I did not. I was too young.

Senator OVERMAN. You were nine years old when you came here?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And too young to know that you were nine years old?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In our country, it is. We have no schools nor any system of education nor anything. I never saw a school in my life.

Senator OVERMAN. You have never been to school?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; never have been.

Maj. HUMES. It was on the theory that you were born in 1874 that you said you were 9 years old when you came to this country, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You must have been 13 or 14 years old, then, if you were born in 1870.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I do not know about that. I always claim I was 9 years old when I came. They would not let me work in the mines. This could be verified.

Maj. HUMES. Here is a paper which I will ask to have marked "Exhibit 1140." Mr. Hammerling, I show you a photostat of a letter signed by you, on the letterhead of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, and ask you if that is a letter sent out by you.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Sent out by the association.

Maj. HUMES. And signed by you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. This was a letter sent out in interest of the signatures and support of the foreign-language press, in signing the appeal.

Senator OVERMAN. Support to what? What is that letter about?

Maj. HUMES. It is a letter that he sent to the foreign-language newspapers to get their consent to sign this appeal.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are you going to make use of it?

Maj. HUMES. I was going to offer it to be printed in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. You are not going to read it?

Maj. HUMES. That depends on the desire of the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better read it.

Maj. HUMES. Very well, I will read the letter:

EXHIBIT No. 1140.

Telephone, Barclay 5592–5593. Chicago Office, People's Gas Building. American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Woolworth Building.

NEW YORK, March 27th, 1915:

To the publishers.

MY DEAR SIR: Since August 1st we have made a careful study of the serious and world-wide affect of the dreadful conflict now going on in Europe from every viewpoint and we have come to the conclusion that the 33,000,000 foreign born residents and citizens of the United States, including those of foreign parentage, are directly affected without exception as most of them have their brothers, sisters, parents or relatives in the warring countries. This does not mean that the American people and the American nation as a whole are not gravely affected, but we are more closely linked with the warring nations and are feeling the effects more every day.

We believe that the plea of the widowed mothers, children and orphans of Europe to us should cause us in turn to appeal to the American people, to the American manufacturer of powder and shot and to the workmen engaged in these plants devoted to the manufacture of ammunition of any description to immediately cease manufacturing this powder, shrapnel, and bullets destined to destroy our brothers, widow our sisters and mothers and orphan their children. We believe this should cease no matter if the workmen lose their positions as a consequence. The patriotism of the American people, the integrity of the American manufacturer and the honor of the workman are such that we must prove to the world that money soaked with the blood of humanity cannot purchase them.

We, therefore, ask you in the name of humanity, justice and true spirit of neutrality to do everything in your power, through your newspaper, your societies, and your churches to bring about an end to the manufacture, sale and shipping of ammunition of any kind or description to the warring countries for the purpose of destroying and mutilating humanity.

We are preparing an appeal to the American people, manufacturers and workmen in this connection and we are enclosing herewith a blank and ask you to sign it and return to us in the enclosed stamped envelope on behalf of your publication. This work has been undertaken in the name of humanity, the spirit of patriotism and is being supported by small contributions to cover the expenses of the work. We, therefore, ask you to extend the influence of your paper and join us in this laudable undertaking and we hope that your name will appear as one of the signers of the appeal we are preparing and which is for the preservation of the lives and happiness of our brothers, without regard to creed, color or nationality; they are all our brethren.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEWSPAPERS, INC.
LOUIS HAMMERLING, President.

Now that is the communication that you sent to all of the foreign language press of the country, is it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. As a result of your talk with Dr. Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. At the time you sent out this letter you knew that this appeal was not being financed by small contributions——

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not know that, Major, if you will pardon me.

Maj. HUMES. Just wait until I finish my question. At the time you sent out this letter you knew that it was not being supported by small contributions that covered the expense of the work, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that the money was to come from Dr. Rumely, didn't you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He said he got it from patriotic Americans.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you not say yesterday that he said he got it from rich friends?

Mr. HAMMERLING. From patriotic——

Senator WOLCOTT. Friends.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Friends, or Americans.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you not testify here yesterday that he told you that they were wealthy people who were putting up this money?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If I said it, I said it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you get any small contributions in response to this letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We did not; no, sir. All the money we got was from Dr. Rumely.

Senator NELSON. Is this what you had published in your advertising papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The same thing.

Senator NELSON. All over?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. How many of these foreign newspapers responded to that letter?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think—I really don't know the number.

Senator OVERMAN. What per cent?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The majority. I don't know how many.

Maj. HUMES. I think there were over 400 whose names appear on the appeal.

Senator NELSON. I would like to have a copy of that letter.

Maj. HUMES. We have some extra copies, and I will see that you get a copy of it, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Will you supply me with a set of copies? I want to use them.

Maj. HUMES. We will get the set together for you. Now, Mr. Hammerling, in this letter you also appealed to them to use the influence of their papers and their editorial columns to prevent the manufacture of munitions and the shipment of them, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The letter speaks for itself, Major. The letter was not made out by me; it was made out by Mr. Rumely and myself.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand, you said yesterday that your only interest in this transaction was purely a commercial interest.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is all it was.

Maj. HUMES. As an advertising proposition.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is all it was.

Maj. HUMES. Then a portion of the consideration to be given by you, a portion of the service to be rendered by you, was your influence with the foreign-language press of the country, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Shall I answer that?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. The average papers, including the largest in the United States, support their advertisers in different ways. I am simply doing what I learned in this country from the American newspaper people in the way they are doing it. There is hardly an advertiser who is not asked if he wants something in that paper when he advertises.

Maj. HUMES. Then your practice in conducting your advertising business is to undertake to use your influence to deliver the editorial support of the paper to the advertisers, no matter who the advertisers are. Is that correct?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is, in a general proposition, Major.

Maj. HUMES. You say that is a common practice?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I mean as a whole. Many papers also will say many things, if their business manager would not have to consult with the editors.

Maj. HUMES. You did use your influence to furnish the editorial support of the papers in consideration for the advertising which was being furnished?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not furnish any editorial support in my life to anybody.

Maj. HUMES. I said your influence to secure editorial support.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know.

Maj. HUMES. That letter appeals for that support, does it not? Now, Mr. Hammerling, you made a statement to the Alien Property Custodian in regard to this matter, did you not—to Mr. White, who represented the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Over my signature?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. That is your signature, is it?

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examination). Yes; it is.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not at that time say that you had said to Mr. Rumely, "I also stated that the copy which would go into our papers and be sent out by the association would have to be written by ourselves, to which he agreed"?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; including himself. Yes; he was there. We could not do it without his "O. K."

Maj. HUMES. Then you insisted upon controlling the character and contents of this advertisement when you negotiated this with Mr. Rumely?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that I had the signatures of the papers, and I thought it was my duty to do that. I did not want anything without it.

Maj. HUMES. Then you are absolutely responsible for the contents of this appeal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know—whatever you gentlemen say.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Rumely acquiesced in your demand that you prepare the advertisement, did he not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. He was there to prepare it. I did not know anything about that thing.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were all responsible for it, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am supposed to be, and I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility, if it is put on me. And I want to be punished if it was such a thing as I ought to be punished for.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also exact as a requirement from Dr. Rumely that this advertisement must be printed in some of the English-language newspapers?

Maj. HUMES. Then this investigation, resulting in making you four years older than you thought you were, came about as the result of a prospective military enrollment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I beg your pardon—for the reason that my sister, who comes from the second mother of my father's marriage, is 45 years old, and she lives in New York and has 3 children.

Maj. HUMES. But you made this investigation because of a prospective military enrollment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; they made me do it. They asked me to do it.

Maj. HUMES. Your family made you do it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You were not interested in it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No.

Senator OVERMAN. You knew how old you were when you came here, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I did not. I was too young.

Senator OVERMAN. You were nine years old when you came here?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And too young to know that you were nine years old?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In our country, it is. We have no schools nor any system of education nor anything. I never saw a school in my life.

Senator OVERMAN. You have never been to school?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; never have been.

Maj. HUMES. It was on the theory that you were born in 1874 that you said you were 9 years old when you came to this country, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You must have been 13 or 14 years old, then, if you were born in 1870.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I do not know about that. I always claim I was 9 years old when I came. They would not let me work in the mines. This could be verified.

Maj. HUMES. Here is a paper which I will ask to have marked "Exhibit 1140." Mr. Hammerling, I show you a photostat of a letter signed by you, on the letterhead of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, and ask you if that is a letter sent out by you.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Sent out by the association.

Maj. HUMES. And signed by you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. This was a letter sent out in interest of the signatures and support of the foreign-language press, in signing the appeal.

Senator OVERMAN. Support to what? What is that letter about?

Maj. HUMES. It is a letter that he sent to the foreign-language newspapers to get their consent to sign this appeal.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are you going to make use of it?

Maj. HUMES. I was going to offer it to be printed in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. You are not going to read it?

Maj. HUMES. That depends on the desire of the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better read it.

Maj. HUMES. Very well, I will read the letter: -

EXHIBIT No. 1140.

Telephone, Barclay 5592–5593. Chicago Office, People's Gas Building. American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Woolworth Building.

NEW YORK, March 27th, 1915:

To the publishers.

MY DEAR SIR: Since August 1st we have made a careful study of the serious and world-wide affect of the dreadful conflict now going on in Europe from every viewpoint and we have come to the conclusion that the 33,000,000 foreign born residents and citizens of the United States, including those of foreign parentage, are directly affected without exception as most of them have their brothers, sisters, parents or relatives in the warring countries. This does not mean that the American people and the American nation as a whole are not gravely affected, but we are more closely linked with the warring nations and are feeling the effects more every day.

We believe that the plea of the widowed mothers, children and orphans of Europe to us should cause us in turn to appeal to the American people, to the American manufacturer of powder and shot and to the workmen engaged in these plants devoted to the manufacture of ammunition of any description to immediately cease manufacturing this powder, shrapnel, and bullets destined to destroy our brothers, widow our sisters and mothers and orphan their children. We believe this should cease no matter if the workmen lose their positions as a consequence. The patriotism of the American people, the integrity of the American manufacturer and the honor of the workman are such that we must prove to the world that money soaked with the blood of humanity cannot purchase them.

We, therefore, ask you in the name of humanity, justice and true spirit of neutrality to do everything in your power, through your newspaper, your societies, and your churches to bring about an end to the manufacture, sale and shipping of ammunition of any kind or description to the warring countries for the purpose of destroying and mutilating humanity.

We are preparing an appeal to the American people, manufacturers and workmen in this connection and we are enclosing herewith a blank and ask you to sign it and return to us in the enclosed stamped envelope on behalf of your publication. This work has been undertaken in the name of humanity, a spirit of patriotism and is being supported by small contributions to cover the expenses of the work. We, therefore, ask you to extend the influence of your paper and join us in this laudable undertaking and we hope that your name will appear as one of the signers of the appeal we are preparing and which is for the preservation of the lives and happiness of our brothers, without regard to creed, color or nationality; they are all our brethren.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not also exact as a requirement from Dr. Rumely that this advertisement must be printed in some of the English-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. If this was a purely commercial transaction, why did you require of him that the advertisement be inserted in some English-language papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. For the reason that I did not think we could handle this advertising and accomplish what he wanted to accomplish by putting it simply in our papers.

Maj. HUMES. Then your purpose was to pursue a policy that would accomplish the purpose Mr. Rumely had in mind in sending it out?

Mr. HAMMERLING. He was the advertiser. He was an advertiser, that is all I knew about it.

Maj. HUMES. You wanted to assist him in accomplishing your purpose?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Just as people leave it to us to place any business.

Senator OVERMAN. You wanted to put it in the English papers to accomplish the purpose of your advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Of the advertising. It was not my advertising.

Senator OVERMAN. You said you wanted to put it in the English-language papers in order to accomplish your purpose.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not my purpose—his purpose. He wanted this advertising to be placed before the American people, before the people who either manufacture these munitions or the workmen who make them, and, as I stated yesterday, the men who inquired in a few places stated that the majority of them were American-born men who worked in these factories.

Senator NELSON. Why were you anxious to have it in American papers? Why were you anxious to have this published in American papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was not anxious. I simply suggested it.

Senator NELSON. How is that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I told them.

Senator NELSON. I am not asking you what you told him; I am asking you why you were so anxious.

Mr. HAMMERLING. For no particular reason but what I stated.

Senator WOLCOTT. See if I state your position correctly. This man Rumely came to you to get publicity for this idea?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And as an expert advertising man you said, "If you want to give it wide publicity, use not only our papers but the English-language papers." Is that the idea?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Exactly. That was the idea I wanted to convey.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not your purpose, in requiring that it should be published in English-language papers, to prevent yourself and the foreign-language press from being placed in the position of exclusively conducting this particular kind of German propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That was not your reason?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir. I had no idea that it was German propaganda. As I said yesterday, and will repeat, if your honored body think I did know it, I want to be punished to the limit, and the first one to be hanged in the United States, and if you don't do it you are not doing your duty, if anybody can prove I had anything to do with any German propaganda. I would be the last man on earth to destroy my home, and I can not stand anything like this.

Senator STERLING. You knew it would have a wider influence if published in the English-language papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. This was a time when advertising was bad, and when that man said he would spend $200,000, I am frank to admit I was so enthused about it that I took it, and I did not give it any thought.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not say that you could not accept the business and undertake this work for $100,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; it could not pay the bill.

Maj. HUMES. You insisted on the full $205,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, if he had had more—if he could have paid more—I would have asked him to pay more.

Maj. HUMES. And yet you were not so anxious to secure advertising that you were willing to do this advertising unless Dr. Rumely assured you that it would simultaneously appear in English-language papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't think I understand that, Major.

Maj. HUMES. You demanded of Dr. Rumely that he give you absolute assurance that this would appear in English-language papers at the same time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did.

Maj. HUMES. And you did not want this $200,000 worth of advertising badly enough to take the money unless you knew it was going to appear in English-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't see why I didn't want it. The more papers it went in, the more commission we made.

Senator NELSON. How much did you get out of the $205,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I got our commission, from 10 to 15 per cent—whatever the papers say.

Senator NELSON. How much in the aggregate?

Mr. HAMMERLING. About $30,000, I should say.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, you say you only received the commissions. Is it not a fact that you did not pay the foreign-language newspapers of this country as much as $25,000 for the advertising space that they gave you on this?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is absolutely false. Every time I will give just the same answer.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any record to show how much you paid to each one of these papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The papers have it. Every paper has it.

Maj. HUMES. I have a report here from a very considerable number of these papers—from the papers themselves. The ones I have heard from indicate that they have received not to exceed $14,000 for the publication of this advertisement from you. Do you question the accuracy of their report to this committee?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do; yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are not prepared to say that, are you? You do not know how many papers are represented in these reports.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not. Pardon me. I simply answer that I do not know how many papers there are. Thank you, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, a certain number of papers would not receive over $14,000—five or six papers, say?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How many foreign-language newspapers were there that received nothing?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know.

Maj. HUMES. I have here a bundle of a good many of the papers who signed this, who say, in communications addressed to this committee, that they received nothing for the publication of this appeal.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Some of them have not been used; no, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any way of checking to determine whether the information that they are furnishing to this committee is correct?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I have not.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you a list of those that did receive money from you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; we do not have it now.

Senator NELSON. What have you done with the list?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I was saying that every year, when the year is over, like 1916, the records are put away, as long as we are in business.

Maj. HUMES. How does it come that you kept these signed authorizations to sign that appeal, and yet you kept no record of the payments you made to the papers for printing it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. These authorizations, that I kept, I always kept those. Those are the arrangements for everything that we have. We have kept that in our box, so that at any time any papers that say they did not sign it, we always have it in our vaults.

Senator OVERMAN. How did you pay—by check?

Mr. HAMMERLING. By check and cash; just as we always do.

Senator OVERMAN. Whom did you pay by cash?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not do the paying. I don't think I paid one.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you destroy your checks?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Where are those checks?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We did not pay with checks. We paid with vouchers.

Senator OVERMAN. Vouchers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The voucher system.

Senator OVERMAN. Is the voucher destroyed?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know if they are there for that year. I don't know.

Maj. HUMES. Here are the so-called authorizations that you have produced, purporting to have been signed by each one of the newspapers that signed the appeal.

Mr. HAMMERLING. That list; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And that is the only record of any kind that you have preserved of this transaction?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I have the copy, and I have the letter we sent out with it. That is all the thing we kept.

Maj. HUMES. But you kept no record of the financial transaction?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not keep them.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Dr. Albert tell you to make a statement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have to present the bill—the mechanical work connected with that thing cost a great deal of money. Dr. Rumely asked me to hand it in, and I have handed it in to him. I had it ready for him.

Senator OVERMAN. He told you he wanted it sent to Dr. Albert?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; he did not. He introduced me to Dr. Albert.

Maj. HUMES. Did you go on record yourself in favor of this propaganda that you were advertising?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have not had any propaganda at all.

Maj. HUMES. Is not this a propaganda—this appeal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I do not call it such.

Maj. HUMES. You do not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you advocate, personally or through your association, an adherence to the embargo that was advocated in the appeal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. You are the editor and publisher of the American Leader, are you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am one; yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a copy of the American Leader of April 22. and the leading editorial.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, this here has not been written by me.

Maj. HUMES. It is the leading editorial in the magazine that you own and control, is it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, it is all right—do you mean commenting on it?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. This is done by the editor, Mr. Caldwell; yet I am willing to take the full responsibility.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say you will not assume responsibility for the articles appearing in the Leader?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Jointly, I suppose I have to; I don't know.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this editorial, appearing in the American Leader of April 22, 1915, which I will read to you:

FOREIGN-LANGUAGE EDITORS APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

A truly astounding instance—

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you will pardon me, can I interrupt you? I remember Mr. Caldwell bringing that to my attention. He said this editorial appeared in the New York Evening Post, and he asked me if he should copy it, and I said I did not know anything about it. I remember the incident; and, if you will examine the New York Evening Post, you will see that we copied it.

Maj. HUMES. You did not give the New York Evening Post credit for it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. We never do.

Maj. HUMES. Then you printed it as an original editorial?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I understood so from Mr. Caldwell at the time.

Maj. HUMES. And the purpose of the American Leader was to put out editorial matter that could be copied and used by the foreign-language newspapers of the country, was it not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If they wanted to; yes.

Maj. HUMES. In this editorial you say:

A truly astounding instance of the democratizing effect which residence in this country has upon strangers from foreign lands is the "Appeal to the American people," which a large number of the editors of foreign-language newspapers of this country have signed and caused to be published, in full-page display, in some of their own papers and in the chief papers printed in the English language. It is a fine thing to realize that in this broad, free land, members of all of the chief races of the earth can touch shoulders in daily toil and come to know and respect one another. The national hatreds, so natural in Europe, are here largely rubbed away under the leveling influence of our tolerant and liberal institutions. The cosmopolitan character of our population tends to destroy prejudice. Knowledge of a people breeds sympathy and respect for their qualities. We no longer generalize about the Swedes, the Poles, the Germans, or the French, because we have met so many worthy specimens of each, and have come to know that a gentleman is a gentleman the world over no matter what language he speaks; and that a good workman is a good workman no matter what hill or valley of Europe he originally came from.

And, now, when our Government is striving so hard to maintain, officially, a strict neutrality in the present European conflict, it is a fine thing to see so many of the leaders of thought and the shapers of popular opinion among the various language groups of our population come thus voluntarily and frankly out with a plea that the American people, as a whole, attempt to shorten the war, not only by general suggestions offered from time to time to the belligerent peoples, but by a definite and active program of our own, calculated to reduce the number of days of strife and misery in this most brutalizing of modern wars. Among the petitioners are Poles, Hungarians, Russians, Italians, French—in fact, members of all the non-English-speaking belligerent nations (except Germany), and with them all the adjacent neutral countries.

But is a significant fact that the list of signers, while representing all the principal races in this country, does not include the names of the publishers, managers, or editors of all the newspapers which go to make up the foreign-language press. This important fact emphasizes the too-little-known truth that the foreign press of this country is independent in policy and opinion. The papers of the country in each language differ among themselves in their attitude on vital questions and show the same individual independence of thought as do the big American dailies published in the English language.

Now, you published that with a view of having it republished in the foreign-language newspapers, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know. They can if they want to.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that this appeal was not the result of the independent thought of the foreign-language press, but was inspired by you and Dr. Rumely and prepared by you for their signature and for their publication, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I don't know.

Maj. HUMES. There you presented in that editorial to the public something that you knew was absolutely untrue?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have said how the thing happened, and this Senate committee can verify my statement. May I read from another editorial, which I was accused that it was not written by me, and the editor, Mr. Caldwell, who has been heralded as a Scotchman, has written me this note? I do not want to call any names.

Senator OVERMAN. When was it written?

Mr. HAMMERLING. August 13, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. You can put in anything that you want.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I will consider it a privilege if you will permit me to do this.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I want to state how this came about. When I landed in Breslau, about the 28th of July, 1914, I read in the London Mail, I think, an article about the different crimes Austria had committed. I made some changes, and I dispatched it immediately to Mr. Caldwell, as I thought it was timely, and Mr. Caldwell states in his letter——

Senator WOLCOTT. You mean you sent him an article taken from the London Mail?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; changed to suit our purpose. I will read it. This was the leading editorial that day:

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 156.

AUSTRIA'S CRIMES.

The bloodiest conflict of recorded history is now on. Austria—the ferret of Europe, the chronic disturber of continental peace—has again plunged the civilized countries of Christendom into international warfare. The great English statesman, Gladstone, once asked, "Can anyone put his finger on any spot of the map where Austria has done any good?" But Gladstone died 16 years ago. What would he say of Austria's rôle during these later years? All over Europe there has been a rapid advance in civilization in which Austria has not fully participated. In diplomacy, her ways have been medieval, barbaric. Her present conduct is no exception.

After years of encroachment upon the Serbs, she annexed the Slavic countries of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in 1909, without so much as a "thank you," and with Germany's full approbation. During the recent Balkan war, Austria tried once more to set the prime nations of Europe at one another's throats. But masterly diplomacy warded off the catastrophe. Now, hardly has the smoke of the Balkan war cleared from the skies, when Austria trumps up a charge against the small, exhausted state of Serbia. She accuses a whole race of an individual's murderous folly. She sends an imperious ultimatum to Belgrade. The Serbian Government, aware of its own comparative weakness, bows the knee to every condition of the offensive ultimatum save one, viz, that Austrian officials shall sit in the court which is to investigate the assassination of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his consort. To grant Austrian representation, under the circumstances, was to sign Serbia's own death warrant, since Austrian prejudices had already convicted Serbia. Furthermore, Serbia realized that she was not nationally responsible, and could not manfully bring herself to the admission of any such high-handed charge.

On this slim pretext—unprecedented in history—the great dual monarchy invaded depleted Serbia. Never was there such subserviency on the part of a weakened but proud nation; never was there such open violation of the basic usages of modern civilization on the part of a so-called civilized modern power. And, from these slight causes, all the armed strength of Europe is arrayed brother against brother.

And who is to bear the brunt of the war? With all the bourses of the world closed, with the merchant marine of the world nearly at a standstill, with prices soaring and famine staring even neutral countries in the face, who shall pay the piper? The Serbians are fighting the unsought aggression of a hated race; the Russians are supporting their kindred Slavs—but for what are the line-men of the Austrian ranks fighting? What shall they gain, even if they win—but impoverished fields and fortunes and the perpetuation of a mistrusted government?

To begin with, Austria is an artificially constituted empire. The Germanic blood of the ruling class constitutes less than a quarter of the total population, while the Slavic population of Austria numbers 46 per cent of the total inhabitants. Austria is made up of a variety of conflicting and unassimilable peoples—Bohemians, Moravians, Poles, Ruthenians, Croats, Serbs, Slovaks, Morlaks, Bulgarians, Italians, Armenians, Jews, Gypsies (100,000), Magyars, Germans, and Roumanians. What can we expect of national unity from this mixture of tongues and nationalities under a government which is unpopular with most of them? For what is the individual contending? What may he hope to reap as a reward, save death and further subjection?

Of the outcome of the gigantic slaughter, we can only hazard the possibilities. Among the plausible probabilities are: That France will endeavor to take back Alsace-Lorraine; that Serbia will secure Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as form a union with Montenegro; that these last-named countries, aided by 100,000 seasoned Greek allies, and thousands of Rumanians, will alone be able to hold Austria in check in the fastnesses of the Serbian hills; that Poland will seek this last favorable opportunity to achieve its freedom; that Great Britain will permanently cripple the German fleet, and thus destroy for a half century Germany's naval competition; that Russia will take part of the adjacent Austrian territory; and that there will arise from Austria's ruin a new Slavic union of small states. These loom up only as possibilities. Meanwhile, Italy has chosen wisely in electing to remain neutral, if possible.

One thing seems just now certain—the map of Europe will be fundamentally altered. Germany has bitten off a larger chunk than she can easily chew. Besides, she has alienated a lot of good feeling by disregarding the neutrality of Luxemburg, Belgium, and Switzerland, and by invading France before a declaration of war. The neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by the treaty of 1864, signed in London, and Germany's utter disregard of her obligation in this matter has been the chief factor in dragging unwilling England into the war, thereby jeopardizing all of her marine movements.

The frightful toll of life and property will set Europe back nearly a quarter of a century. Germany has most to lose and seemed rashly willing to risk it. Her 40 years of tremendous industrial advance is now to be robbed of its chief benefits. Never was there waged so ruthlessly unjustifiable a war as the present, and no part of the world will fail to be harmed by its effects. We can be reconciled only by the meager confidence that much peace must follow.

Senator STERLING. From what did you read?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I am reading from the American Leader, the leading editorial.

Senator STERLING. And that is an editorial that appeared, you say, in an English paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It appeared and we changed it. I gave the statistical figures, etc., and sent it in for our papers, for the Leader; yes, sir—made the changes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, at the time that was printed in the American Leader you were in Europe, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When had you gone to Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I went to Europe in April.

Maj. HUMES. You went there in April?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you had been in Europe continuously from April up until the time this was printed in the American Leader on the 13th of August.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you were on the high seas, on your way back to this country, at the time this was printed on the 13th of August?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Here is the authority for it [producing paper].

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Hammerling, at the time that you were in Europe and at the time this was published, Mr. Arthur Gabriel was one of the vice presidents of your company, was he not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Armour Caldwell was the editorial writer?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact that when you came back to this country you took Mr. Caldwell to task for that editorial——

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). And threatened to dismiss him if he ever made a repetition of it; and did you not systematically go out to the foreign-language press of the country personally, or have your representatives go out personally, and apologize to them, and explain that it was written while you were out of the country, and was not a correct expression of your sentiments?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is absolutely false.

Maj. HUMES. You deny that, do you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I deny it. Mr. Caldwell denied it. He brought it to my attention.

Maj. HUMES. And this is a letter that Mr. Caldwell——

Mr. HAMMERLING. That Mr. Caldwell sent to me after Mr. Gabriel made that statement.

Maj. HUMES. Dated May 29, 1918?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; he handed me the letter without my suggestion.

Maj. HUMES. Do you want this to go in the record with that article?

Mr. HAMMERLING. If you say so.

Maj. HUMES. It is a matter of your desire.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1141.

[The American Leader. Published semimonthly by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers (Inc.), suite 908–926 Woolworth Building, New York City.]

MAY 29, 1918.

Mr. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING,
President American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers,
Woolworth Building, New York City.

DEAR MR. HAMMERLING: You asked me a few days ago from what source I secured the material for the editorial entitled "Austria's Crime," which appeared in The American Leader, in the issue of August 13, 1914. In reply I would state that, to the best of my memory, the editorial was based on a clipping received from you taken from an English newspaper, about which I wrote in the general editorial way.

Very cordially yours,

ARMOUR CALDWELL, Editor.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, I show you an interview with you, published in the New York Times on April 6, to refresh your recollection, and ask if you authorized that interview, or if you ever saw it before?

Senator OVERMAN. What year?

Maj. HUMES. 1915, the day after the appeal was first printed.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I remember that.

Maj. HUMES. You remember the interview?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not give any interview.

Maj. HUMES. You did not give any interview?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You saw it published?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I saw it. It was brought to my attention.

Maj. HUMES. You never made a denial of it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I denied it every time.

Maj. HUMES. You never made any formal denial?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I denied it to every one that came out.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ask the Times to print any denial?

Mr. HAMMERLING. The Times is not the Government. I gave the Government of the United States, the Department of Justice, the information when I was asked. I do not see why I should give it to these papers.

Maj. HUMES. I should like to put that in the record; but I will read it in later and not take the time now.

There was something said yesterday about your testimony before Mr. Becker. I show you the stenographic report of your testimony there, and ask you if that stenographic report is a correct report.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know, Major. I have not read it. I did not see it.

Maj. HUMES. Well, glance at it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. They brought me over there in the excitement of a political campaign, and I really do not know. I was brought over from my farm Saturday afternoon, just like I had killed somebody. I do not know what was said there.

Maj. HUMES. If there was the excitement of a political campaign on, what were you doing out on your farm?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had nothing to do with the campaign. Mr. Becker did.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, Mr. Becker?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not called before that committee in connection with the investigation of Mr. Rumely's activities?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; about Mr. Becker's election.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Becker's election?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Mr. Becker wanted some of this stuff to help him to be elected.

Maj. HUMES. To be elected what?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To be nominated—I beg your pardon—for Attorney General.

Maj. HUMES. And when was the primary?

Mr. HAMMERLING. A few days later, I think.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker, or Mr. Lewis?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Mr. Becker. Mr. Lewis ran for governor, I think.

(A gentleman in the hearing room stated that Mr. Becker was the candidate for Attorney General of the Republican party.)

Maj. HUMES (producing paper). On the 15th of July you signed this statement for Mr. White, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not. This statement I gave to Mr. Harper, of the district attorney's office; not to Mr. White.

Maj. HUMES. To Mr. Harper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. To Mr. Harper.

Maj. HUMES. You did that on the 15th day of July?

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examining paper). Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And as a result of this statement, then, in connection with the investigation of Mr. Rumely's affairs, you were called as a witness before Mr. Becker, were you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. I think so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And do you deny that you made the statement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. Yesterday I heard you read that I said that Hawaii was the most wonderful country in the world. I said it was the most beautiful country in the world, not the most wonderful. I am out of there 20 years, and still have marks on my back. I would not state here that it is wonderful. I say it is beautiful—beautiful flowers and beautiful country, but not a beautiful treatment. I would rather be dead than to have made such a statement.

Maj. HUMES. You also testified yesterday that your purpose in sending these men out to all the munition factories of the country was to find out what the condition of industrial rest or unrest was in those factories, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Why did you send these men out to Bethlehem and Bridgeport?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I stated that yesterday, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Well, I want to know. I have my recollection of what you said yesterday, but I seem——

Mr. HAMMERLING. I stated, and am very glad to repeat, that when this man wanted this advertising placed I said in the course of a week's negotiation, after talking to a few of the publishers, we should find out who these people were and where they were working; and he finally came in with a piece of yellow paper and brought in five or six or seven names, I do not remember just how many, and I handed it to the secretary of the company, Mr. Momand, and told him, as we do in other business transactions, "Send out these fellows to let them find out."

Maj. HUMES. What did you want that information for?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We wanted to know what papers to use. This was all in the negotiation, Major—how much money he was going to spend.

Maj. HUMES. He wanted to know the papers of which nationalities to use?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. This was in the talk. It was not agreed right there to put up $200,000. It takes a good solicitor to get $200,000 of advertising.

Maj. HUMES. Was it your purpose to buy special copies of papers with these advertisements in them?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I never buy any papers.

Maj. HUMES. Then you had to utilize the papers of the nationalities that were published in the various communities, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In the various communities?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, you mean where the munitions were made?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. To buy papers to distribute them?

Senator WOLCOTT. No; utilize them, use them.

Mr. HAMMERLING. There were no papers in the places that Mr. Momand told me, lately. Brooklyn had foreign-language papers. The other [illegible] that they went, I think, was Wilmington, and there [illegible]ge no foreign paper there; and some small town [illegible] was no paper there.

[illegible] Bridgeport?

[illegible] know. Somebody went to Bridgeport.

Maj. HUMES. There are foreign-language newspapers there, are there not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think there are.

Maj. HUMES. There are foreign-language newspapers at Bethlehem, are there not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. No, sir; there are not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. You had the newspaper directory, and you were entirely familiar with the various nationalities of the papers published in these localities?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, but Major, the papers were not the question to consult. It was to find out what this man wanted.

Maj. HUMES. As a matter of fact, you found out that most of the employees were Americans, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Americans; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And then you insisted upon the advertisement being put in the American newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir. It was all in the negotiation.

Maj. HUMES. And your purpose was to lead workmen to quit employment?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not my purpose at all. I had nothing to do with it. I placed the advertising.

Maj. HUMES. Of this $205,000 there was $48,000 paid for the publications in the English newspapers, was there not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Something like that. I could not swear to it.

Maj. HUMES. I show you your statement, made over your signature.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, something like that; I have not the exact figures.

Maj. HUMES. Refresh your recollection.

Mr. HAMMERLING (after examining statement). Yes; $48,000.

Maj. HUMES. $48,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I would not say it was exactly that.

Maj. HUMES. And the balance, $153,000, was used for the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. What English newspapers did you put it in?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In all the leading papers in the United States, the big papers; what they call the metropolitan papers, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. You put it in as an advertisement?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; a page advertisement. That is all any newspaper had. I would not place anything else.

Maj. HUMES. I show you Exhibit No. 1143. Is that one of the authorities or authorizations that you secured from a newspaper to sign the name to the appeal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir. The seal shows it. It is a society paper, an independent church paper—a Polish independent church paper.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Mr. Mirski, the manager of that paper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; I am not.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a letter which he has addressed to this committee, and ask you for your explanation of it.

(Maj. Humes here read the letter above referred to, which is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1142.

THE POLISH WEEKLY STRAZ,
Scranton, Pa., November 21, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Committee on the Judiciary, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your favor of November 16 we must state as follows: In your letter you said: "Early in April, 1915, you published an advertisement entitled 'An appeal to the American people.' You also appear as one of the signers of that appeal."

We must deny of advertising such appeal in our paper Straz, we not received any money for such political advertising. And when some unfriendly newspapers published that Straz signed appeal of Mr. Hammerling to American people, Publishers of Straz have denied it in N. 16, April 22, 1915, in the follow statement: "In last week Mr. Hammerling from New York announced in appeal to American people that some Oskala from Straz signed this appeal. First we have not in editorial staff of Straz no such man Oskala, and secondly Straz as organ of the Church have nothing to do with politics and have no intention to defend of Germans. Publishers do not agree with this appeal and nobody of them signed it." To prove that our declaration is correct, we send to you the copy of mentioned paper, which you will be so kind to return after using. And if will be necessary we will be glad to send to you all our publications in April, 1915.

Very respectfully yours,

POLISH NATIONAL PUBLISHING CO.
By G. MIRSKI, Manager.

Maj. HUMES. How do you account for that transaction, Mr. Hammerling?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it explains right here, Major. You can see the signature and the seal of the organization is there.

Maj. HUMES. Who is this man Oskala?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know, but Mirski is a new man there, and this is why he states it. The best thing is to send for him.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever see the denial that they published in their paper within two weeks after the publication of this appeal?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I never saw it. Maybe they did. I do not know.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say the explanation of it is here?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, absolutely. There is the official seal of the society, Senator. This is a society of an independent church. It belongs to a priest by the name of Father Hordor, and this publication is known all over the country as just what it represents. If I am permitted to say so, before I came here I heard from one of my men in the office that some of the publishers in New York said: "We will just dig out circulars for the United States Senate," and I wanted to be certain which ones it is, so that the Senate can send for these fellows that signed it and then said they did not sign it, you see. That is the way those fellows do business; and yesterday I checked up here with this gentleman to show that every signature on that paper is here.

Senator NELSON. Let us see that list.

Mr. HAMMERLING. You know some of the signatures, Senator, so you can see it.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, you sent all of these out by mail, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. All by mail; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. This was sent out under date of March 27, 1915. I notice that you have in your files the signed authority from a paper in Texas dated on the same day. How do you account for that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Maybe he has a man in New York. I do not know, Major. If you will let me see the paper I can tell you.

Maj. HUMES. I will come to it in a minute.

Mr. HAMMERLING. You see, a good many of those papers have representatives in New York, and we send all the mail, payments, orders, and everything to their representatives, just like the English papers do. Other papers have their representatives in Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, and such places.

(At the request of Maj. Humes, the reporter marked as "Exhibit No. 1143" the letter of authority above referred to, dated Scranton, Pa., March 29, 1915, and signed "Polish National Publishing Company, publisher, F. Oskala," and bearing a seal reading: "The Polish National Publishing Company. Scranton, Pa. Seal. 1906.")

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, I have here all of these papers that deny that they ever signed or authorized you to sign this appeal.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I say it is false, Major, as we verified it last night with you.

Maj. HUMES. I do not want to take the time to go over them one by one.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I know; but do you not think I am entitled to that fairness from the Senate of the United States?

Senator OVERMAN. Did you check them over with Mr. Hammerling?

Maj. HUMES. I have what purports to be the authority attached to each letter and the letter of the publisher.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you check over with him to see whether these papers correspond to each other?

Maj. HUMES. I did not check all of them, but I checked the ones that I had information did not sign it. I did not undertake to go through the whole bunch. It would have taken two days to do that.

Senator WOLCOTT. You checked some of them with Mr. Hammerling?

Maj. HUMES. He picked out what he claims was the authority for the use of the name. We picked those out together here last night, and I have attached what he presents as his authority for the use of the name and the communication of the publisher denying that authority was ever given.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want to put those in?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know what the desire of the committee may be on that subject. Of course, that is a question purely of veracity.

Senator WOLCOTT. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if the committee consider it material, the people who undertake to repudiate the signature ought really to be summoned as witnesses, and not have them stick a letter in here.

Senator STERLING. How many are there that deny the authority, Major?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Thirty-six, exactly.

Maj. HUMES. I have forgotten the number.

Senator KING. I suppose Mr. Hammerling claims the authority from some writing?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Oh, yes.

Senator KING. So that there would be an equal dignity to the denial to the paper which he claims to be the authorization?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is right.

Senator WOLCOTT. The difference is that Mr. Hammerling supports the writing that he brings here with his oath. The other people do not support it with anything.

Maj. HUMES. But the disposition to be made of that matter can be considered by the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Let the fact go in that 36 deny that they ever signed it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Thirty-six deny by letter that they ever signed it.

Senator OVERMAN. Thirty-six deny by letter to this committee that they ever signed it.

Senator KING. Perhaps the names ought to be given to the reporter.

Maj. HUMES. There are several in which I am satisfied that the signatures are the same. In other instances the signatures do not correspond sufficiently that I can judge which is the correct signature.

Mr. HAMMERLING. No; but pardon me, Major; they change. Are they the same people?

Maj. HUMES. In some instances.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are there some instances, Maj. Humes, where the authorization to Mr. Hammerling seems to be signed by one official of the publication and the denial that comes to this committee is signed by a different person connected with that particular publication?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; there are instances of that; and there are instances where there is a denial that the man who purports to have signed the authorization to Mr. Hammerling, is or was ever connected with the paper or ever had any authority to sign.

Senator STERLING. How many authorizations are there about which there is no question?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know about the rest of these authorizations. We want an opportunity to check that over a little bit.

Mr. HAMMERLING. A little over 400, Senator—450.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Hammerling, I want to ask you one question with reference to the naturalization business.

Senator WOLCOTT. Maj. Humes, before you proceed with that, I should like to ask a question. Mr. Hammerling, referring to the authorizations that you have produced here and which you received, justifying the appending of these various names to the appeal, do you swear that you knew that the men signing them had authority to sign?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I could not swear to that, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. You do not know?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. I will say to the committee that there are a great number of these that, because of the handwriting, we want an opportunity to go into pretty carefully. There are about 125 of them in which the handwriting is of such a nature that we want to make an investigation of it.

Senator OVERMAN. All right; go ahead, Major.

Maj. HUMES. With reference to your naturalization, and the naturalization that was being carried on in the locality in which you resided at the time of your naturalization, was it a common practice there for aliens to be naturalized without regard to the length of residence in this country?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Before elections; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Before elections it was a common practice to bring in a lot of aliens and get them naturalized so as to qualify them for voters?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That was my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Was there an organized effort being made in that community to carry on this practice?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not say in that community. It was all over the coal region.

Maj. HUMES. All over the anthracite-coal region?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Were there certain men there who made a business of rounding up these aliens and getting them in and getting them naturalized?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It did not require them. It was the county organizations; the political parties.

Maj. HUMES. The political parties?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you simply went along with that practice; one of these political organizations came to you and asked you to be naturalized, and they prepared your papers, and you paid no attention to them, and they went away?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They were not prepared at all. It was a regular thing to just put in the name. That is the way citizenship was given. Now it is changed. It is the United States Government. Before, it was a county court.

Senator OVERMAN. They naturalized you in order that you might vote in that election? Was that the reason?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was it that came to you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, Senator.

Senator STERLING. Where were you at the time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Wilkes-Barre, Pa. It is never more than about a week or two weeks before an election in that county that they tell you who they want elected. There is nothing wrong about it. It is done. If we have some town like Duryea, the election is over whenever the parties on both sides agree that such a man shall be elected.

I will give you an instance. We had a Congressman by the name of Henry W. Palmer, who was a very high-grade man. I worked under him in the United Charities. Mr. Palmer was a good man, but he recommended a postmaster not satisfactory to the Irish. In Wilkes-Barre they wanted a certain Irishman by the name of Athener. The district, as you gentlemen will see from the Congressional Directory, is overwhelmingly Republican, but we elected

John T. Lanahan with an overwhelming majority as a Democrat, for the reason that those were the instructions from the bosses—I mean from Washington, whoever is the head of the party.

Senator OVERMAN. Both sides agreed that he should be elected?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That John T. Lanahan should be elected against Mr. Palmer, and we elected him. It is a matter of record. Mr. Lanahan would be very glad to come here, and I can tell him to his face. He told me the night of the election; he said: "This is the biggest surprise I ever got in my life." He had no show.

Maj. HUMES. Naturalization frauds were a common practice up in the anthracite-coal region?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Nobody considered it a wrong thing to do. It was just done. When they were short of men in a certain district they used to send to another town, to Scranton, get a couple of carloads in, and vote them. That is absolutely true.

Senator OVERMAN. They sent them over by carloads?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they sent them over by carloads. One man might go into 10 different places to vote—I mean the less intelligent ones—not only foreigners, but everybody.

Senator OVERMAN. They repeated, then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. Nobody objected to it that I know of.

Maj. HUMES. And your activities in that particular were what got you into politics in New York, were they—your experience in that line?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Politics in New York? I have never been in politics in New York. They elected me against the most popular man in New York City for a delegate to the Republican national convention. I was elected against Oscar Straus. He was a Roosevelt man, and I happened to be against Roosevelt for the reason that when he went to Europe he wanted the foreigners to stand in parade and bow to him, and I, with my humble influence, said, "No"; and it was not done, and he knows it, too. So I was elected by an overwhelming majority against Oscar Straus as a delegate from New York. The people did not know me. They did not know anything about who they were voting for.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, are you acquainted with Mr. Byoir, of the Committee on Public Information?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have you had any business transactions with him?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Never. I met him about a year ago in Chicago. He came over to see me there and asked me to go with him.

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever had any conference with him with reference to your affairs?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I saw Byoir a good many times. He asked me to do many things for the committee in regard to foreign papers. The last thing, gentlemen, is here, I think, that he wanted me to do. I am glad to have an opportunity, by the way, to show it. Mr. Byoir asked me to make a special campaign for the Provost Marshal General of the United States in behalf of the last registration, and I have a letter from the Provost Marshal General of September 26, acknowledging what I have done.

(The letter produced by the witness is here printed in full, as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 157.

Mr. LOUIS N. HAMMERLING,
Pres., American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers,
Woolworth Building, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I wish to express my appreciation and the appreciation of the War Department for the splendid support secured by you with the Foreign-Language Press in assisting to make the Selective Service Draft Registration a success. Many publishers of these papers have sent sample copies and clippings to this office, and they are revelations. Your ready response to my appeal for widespread announcement makes me confident of your future cooperation.

E. H. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.

By LUCIUS B. BARBOUR,
Capt. Inf. U. S. A.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Mr. Pruden?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with the Von Patten Agency?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Unfortunately, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that even after the time that this country entered the war you sought and consulted with them about a publicity campaign that you proposed to put on immediately following the close of the war in behalf of German interests and looking to a reconciliation, commercially and otherwise, with Germany?

Mr. HAMMERLING. It is absolutely false, Major.

Maj. HUMES. All right, sir. Do you know Mr. John Nemath?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it or is it not a fact that in the fall of 1916, through him, you transferred a considerable sum of money from this country to Europe?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir; I never remember anything of the kind in 1916.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever, through Mr. Nemath, transfer a considerable sum of money at any time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not remember whether you sent any money over?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, not during 1916, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. At any time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. At any time before, years ago?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I supported the entire family——

Senator OVERMAN. During the last six years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; but I do not think I did it through Nemath. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES. Did you transfer in 1916 a considerable sum of money through anybody else?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you transfer approximately $180,000?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not 180 cents to anybody. If it is produced here I want to be the first one shot in this country, and I am going to demand it by the justice of America, which I believe in, if I have done anything of this kind.

Senator OVERMAN. You did transfer money, you admit?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Before. This was maybe 10 years ago or so.

Senator OVERMAN. Not within 10 years?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Not during the war, Senator.

Maj. HUMES. There is no charge of illegality in the case of that particular transaction.

Mr. HAMMERLING. But I would not do it. To whom shall I transfer money? I have nobody there. My place was destroyed. My people were killed.

Maj. HUMES. When was your place destroyed?

Mr. HAMMERLING. My place was destroyed the first week in December, 1915. My father-in-law went there, and he said: "The place is completely destroyed."

Maj. HUMES. Destroyed by what means?

Mr. HAMMERLING. By the German Army.

Maj. HUMES. Moving over it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. They were moving over it. The Russians were a couple of miles away from it; and when the Germans came there, with the American flag and my reputation—they knew all about this stuff that I was doing in this country. If I am permitted to answer this, gentlemen, I really believe that it is due to the great justice of America, and why we immigrants come here, to give me that opportunity.

This opportunity of mine to appear here has been the greatest of my life; and I want to say this, gentlemen, that if there is anything that this honorable body or any Government authorities have that I have done against the interest of the United States during this war or previous to this war, I think it would be the greatest benefit to America to punish a man like me, who is as well known among the foreigners, and settle this thing forever, for the reason that it will give them a good lesson. Now, I believe that at our peace conference our great representatives there will demand that no peace or bread shall be given to those fellows there until they produce the guilty people—and they no doubt have them there—who have done wrong things. I am sure the Austrian Government would do it, for the reason that it is now in the hands of people that would be very glad to help this country to know who the spies were; and I think the same thing would apply to Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. That is enough, now. Go ahead.

Maj. HUMES. You were discussing the Galician estate. When did you acquire it, from whom did you acquire it, and what did you pay for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I bought it from a man by the name of Samick in 1911.

Maj. HUMES. In 1911?

Mr. HAMMERLING. In 1911.

Maj. HUMES. What did you pay for it?

Mr. HAMMERLING. $105,000; about $60,000 cash, the rest mortgage.

Maj. HUMES. If you were so attached to this country, why in 1911 were you so anxious to acquire a large estate in Austria?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I bought it for a summer place. Many people have it.

Maj. HUMES. And that was your only purpose?

Mr. HAMMERLING. That is all I ever had any purpose.

Maj. HUMES. Did you always spend your summers there after that time?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, yes; a few weeks.

Maj. HUMES. And you invested this $105,000 in an estate which you say now is probably worth more than that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I said it was worth about $200,000, for the reason that I made improvements.

Maj. HUMES. You invested about $200,000 in a place for the purpose of spending a couple of weeks there each summer?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and, besides, I had it in mind to do something for this country as an example, to show what a boy who came here from slavery can accomplish. That also was one of my happy moments.

Maj. HUMES. Then it was a philanthropic enterprise, among other things?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hammerling, yesterday you identified some exhibits with reference to the translation of this personal-liberty article for foreign-language newspapers. Whom did you get to translate it for the Armenian, Bulgarian, Roumanian, Serbian, and Syrian papers?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). To whom you paid $200 a month?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you arranged with individual editors in New York, at a nominal compensation, to do that translating for you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have arranged it. I did not do, Major, all this arranging. Sometimes the office did.

Maj. HUMES. Well, you are responsible for the work of your office.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Well, I do not know about that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not arrange with Mr. Popovich at the rate of $10 a month——

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. At the rate of $10 a month?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not, Major.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). For the translation from Serbian and possibly some other languages, for the work Mr. Andreae was turning over to you?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not know. Some of this work was done outside of our office——

Maj. HUMES. You did not spend the whole amount of the compensation you were allowed?

Mr. HAMMERLING. We did not have to.

Maj. HUMES. You made a profit on that, then?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I suppose so; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And yet, when you billed these expenses to Mr. Andreae, you billed them as a pay roll, and your contract required that you pay translators.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not bill it.

Maj. HUMES. You identified a great many bills here yesterday.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; they were from our office. The association did.

Maj. HUMES. You do not disclaim responsibility for what the association did?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not say I disclaim it, but I do not know the details of the billing at all.

Maj. HUMES. Then you made a profit on this pay roll?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We no doubt did.
Maj. HUMES. Did you not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We no doubt did.
Senator OVERMAN. Do you mean that you would pay a certain sum for translating, without regard to what you were paid?
Mr. HAMMERLING. We had nothing to do, to pay a man. He made his own specifications.
Senator OVERMAN. You sent in a bill for the amount of money you employed him for, and it was more than you paid him?
Mr. HAMMERLING. According to the contract—the specifications.
Senator OVERMAN. And the difference between what you paid him and what Andreae paid you you put in your bill?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I did not put anything in my bill.
Senator OVERMAN. You did not?
Mr. HAMMERLING. It was the association.
Senator OVERMAN. I mean the association?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; I suppose so.
Maj. HUMES. What dividends has the Association of Foreign Language Newspapers paid in its existence?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Different dividends.
Maj. HUMES. How much a year?
Mr. HAMMERLING. The preferred stock pays 6 per cent and the common stock pays sometimes 12 per cent and sometimes more.
Maj. HUMES. What is the most that it ever paid in one year?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I do not remember.
Maj. HUMES. What is your salary?
Mr. HAMMERLING. My salary to-day is $1,500 a month.
Maj. HUMES. $1,500 a month?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. Are you not collecting $3,000 a month?
Mr. HAMMERLING. It used to be $3,000 before the war, but since July—the minutes will show it—we decided to reduce it. I think the first year, if you gentlemen will notice on the minutes, I did not receive any salary at all, and then my salary began with $200 a month, and so on, according to the condition of the business.
Maj. HUMES. Up to July you were getting $3,000 a month?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Maj. HUMES. And you have been getting $1,500 a month since that?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes. I pay my own expenses from it. I am on the road most of the time.
Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Hammerling, the most you have ever received per month is $3,000?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; to my knowledge.
Maj. HUMES. When did you commence to receive that much?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I would say maybe in 1911 or 1912; somewhere along there. The books will show.
Maj. HUMES. In 1912 you commenced to get $3,000?
Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.
Senator OVERMAN. You mean $3,000 a year or a month?
Mr. HAMMERLING. A month. My expenses are more than half of that per month.
Maj. HUMES. What did you receive before that time?
Mr. HAMMERLING. I think it was $1,500 or $1,000.

Maj. HUMES. $1,000 or $1,500?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you get $105,000 in 1911 to buy an estate in Galicia?

Mr. HAMMERLING. I had it long before. I sold some of my stock and bonds that I had.

Maj. HUMES. When you came to Wilkes-Barre in 1899——

Mr. HAMMERLING. It was not 1899. I said yesterday, Major, I did not remember; 1897 or 1898 or 1899, or whatever it was.

Maj. HUMES. Whenever it was, you came there without a dollar, did you not?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In about 1900 or 1901 you had $300 to invest in a newspaper?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you had sources of income other than papers and newspapers, etc.?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; lots of advertising; and I do printing.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have known men that made millions over night. If I had with you gentlemen all together what Morgan has made during the last two years we would have all of us more than we want. I am proud of what I have made in this country. I am proud of it. I made it all by hard work.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not true that most of the money you have made you have made from political and other propaganda?

Mr. HAMMERLING. No, sir.

Senator STERLING. Did you make any of it by speculation?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Very little. I never bought anything on margin in my life. I do not believe in it.

Maj. HUMES. All that you have made you have made from your own personal efforts?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and in good investments. Here, Senator, I believe that will interest you in my feelings. This was the first loan, when America was pretty well divided. I subscribed and paid for that [handing paper to the chairman].

Senator OVERMAN. You want this to go into the record?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes, sir; if the Senator will permit it to be put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. This subscription is of Anglo-French bonds?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Yes; and I was one of the 8 or 10 managers who made it a success.

(The letter referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

HAMMERLING EXHIBIT No. 158.

THE LIBERTY NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK,
October 26, 1915.

LOUIS N. HAMMERLING, Esq.,
924 Woolworth Building, New York City.

DEAR SIR: We hereby acknowledge receipt of the full payment, namely—$98,000.00, of your subscription to $100,000.00 Anglo-French 5% Loan of October 15th, and it is our understanding that you do not wish to withdraw your share of the bonds from the Syndicate.

We, therefore, tender you this letter to use as a temporary receipt during the life of the Syndicate and to be surrendered to us at the expiration of the same when we shall be glad to make the adjustment in accordance with the terms of the Underwriting Agreement.

Yours very truly,

L. W. KNOWLES,
Assistant Cashier.

Mr. HAMMERLING. Can I ask the honorable Senator to permit me to read a few lines and communicate what I have done during this war?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; or if you want to put it in the record you may do so.

Mr. HAMMERLING. This is a few important things.

Senator OVERMAN. If you do not want to read it, you can put it in the record.

Mr. HAMMERLING. I have it all in my memorandum here. The reporter could not read it. It is all scratched up. It is not readable, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. Give it to the stenographer or read it.

Mr. HAMMERLING. On the 12th of May, 1913, we got the publishers together and presented to the President a memorial to express their devotion to the Nation. That is, on my instance. I have shown you a letter about subscribing, in August, 1915, to the Anglo-French loan. I subscribed to the Dominion of Canada loan also, which was the next loan. I handled the advertising campaign for Lee Higginson & Co., Senator, on the Italian loan in the Italian papers. It was not successful with the American people, and I placed it with the Italians and sold it.

I took part in the movement for the protection of the people during the war, a safety-first movement. I was invited to submit a form of work, and not only that, but we had a campaign through the papers; I personally contributed $2,400 to hire a man to write the stuff for our papers. I got 450 papers to contribute $75,000 worth of space, and we supplied the copy, for the work of the United States Government. The space was used by the Treasury Department for liberty loans, by the war savings, by the War Department for advertisements and different things, the Navy Department, and the Labor Department, etc. This is what I have done. It would have cost the Government a couple of million dollars. I traveled from one end of the country to the other to make speeches on the request of the different departments, for which I have letters from the Treasury Department, etc. In 1916 I traveled, under the auspices of the National Security League, all over the country and made speeches in the same way.

I organized, on the request of the different reserve districts, committees of the different races to help and assist in the sale of war-savings stamps, and I have letters of acknowledgment from the different directors.

I have purchased bonds in every liberty-bond drive myself, have been a member of the committees to the limit, and I think when my fortune is checked up you will find that the majority of what I possess in the United States to-day is in liberty bonds.

I also had every one of the employees in my office to subscribe, with the guaranty that they would never lose money; if the bond goes down they would always cash in with me and get interest; and during one of the liberty-bond drives we presented each of the employees with a bond, because they said they could not afford to take it.

In November, 1917, I succeeded with friends, maybe 100 of them who joined me, and sent 21,000 Christmas presents to the American soldiers, and Gen. Pershing sent me a letter that I would not give up for the world. These 21,000 presents consisted each of 200 cigarettes in a package, 10 packages of smoking tobacco, and 10 packages of chewing tobacco, and a letter. I contributed the majority of the money for that myself. I am proud of it.

Now, my wife has two first cousins as officers in the Italian Army, and I can give you the names if the Senate wants them. We contributed $12,000 and purchased for them—it was on the request of one of the relatives of the King—through the Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York, of which I am a member, and we sent for that money, for which I have a receipt, 10,400,000 cigarettes. We bought them at wholesale.

I also contributed cigarettes to the Polish and Bohemian volunteers, at the request of Mr. Marburg and Mr. Paderewski.

I also contributed personally, and I have the receipts here with me, to every movement of the Red Cross, all the way from $2,500 to $750. To the last campaign, $2,500 I gave.

I also contributed specially, for the reason that the different races asked me, to the Polish victim relief fund so much a month, and I contributed to the Knights of Columbus, to the Jewish relief fund, and to the Italian relief fund right along.

When Russia threw over the Czar, I thought it was a timely thing to do, and I called the publishers of New York together, and said, "Let us send these people a cable of encouragement"; and after speaking five or six hours, two of the publishers insulted me and would not sign it, and we sent it, and were very proud that we did it.

There is a Russian paper which was published by a man by the name of Leon Trotsky, one of the worst destructors in the world to-day. He is now at the head of the Russian people. He was not known, when he was in New York, for what he was. He was twice in my office, and he would not see anybody but me, and he not only made statements and threatened to organize unions to destroy manufactures, but threatened to take my life.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is that?

Mr. HAMMERLING. Leon Trotsky, who is now the foreign minister of Russia. I finally took him by the neck, one time, and he had on a rubber collar, and I cut my hand—the people in my office will remember; he used to wear a collar made of rubber, and I cut my hand; and I threw him out; and that paper, I reported to the Government—the Department of Justice, rather—that they would not accept a paid advertisement offered by the second Liberty Bond committee, and they would not take it; and the Department of Justice called the men in, and they said they would not take it; it was true; and they put them out of business.

I reported other papers, of which the Department of Justice has the record.

I was asked by Mr. Fosdick, the chairman of the war activities, to see if I would publish articles in the foreign-language papers, teaching them that it is more dishonorable to bring home a disease than to be defeated in battle, and I agree with Mr. Fosdick; and I traveled about the United States at my own expense; we wrote articles, and I myself paid for the transportation. Then Mr. Fosdick asked me if I would supply matter for the newspapers in the different languages, to assist these people that could not talk English, and to pick papers that were 100 per cent American, and the records will show, in Mr. Fosdick's files, he picked the papers, and some matter was submitted and they found it was O. K. and we did the work, and are keeping it up to-day. We pay, and do all that work, and we send out to 60 some papers matter, with a couple of new features each day. I am not saying this for bragging. I think it is little enough—for what this country has given me the opportunity to do. I do not want any particular credit for it.

In August, 1918, the Labor Bureau was organized, and a representative came down from the Secretary of Labor and asked me if I could put out an advertising campaign making these people understand what the people mean with this Labor Bureau, so that they do not get foolish and move and do things. I immediately sent out a letter to these papers showing what this meant, and the response was that 812 pages were given free for the United States Government, with the advertisements that the Labor Department sent them. The letter that I read here from the Provost Marshal General they allowed a page, a half page, or a quarter of a page, which their papers insert free.

I sent a letter, and it is in the hands of the War Department, to the foreign-language papers, requesting them to give to the Government of the United States a page free regarding the last draft, and 600 pages of free advertising were given to the Government.

Now, this is what I have done for the country that I love, and people are trying to show that that is different. I have made mistakes, gentlemen, and if justice is done me, all right; and if not, I want to be punished; and I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to show how I have suffered for two years. My child fell out of the nurse's arms, and died as a result; and my wife has been ill since that.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Not with this witness, except two or three exhibits I want put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want to offer those for the record?

Maj. HUMES. If it is your purpose to continue the session a while longer, we have a very short witness we could put on.

Senator NELSON. It is after 12 o'clock now, Mr. Chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take an adjournment at this point until half past two.

(At 12:10 o'clock p. m., the subcommitee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

A duly authenticated copy of the naturalization petition and records of Louis N. Hammerling is, by direction of the committee, here printed in the record, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Pennsylvania, Luzerne County, ss:

In the court of quarter sessions of Luzerne County.

Be it remembered, That on this eleventh day of November, Anno Domini one thousand nine hundred and one (1901) Louis N. Hammerling an Alien and a Native of Hawaii having complied with all the Acts of Congress respecting the Naturalization of Aliens, was sworn and admitted as a citizen of the United States and of said Commonwealth.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Court of Wilkes-Barre, this Fourth day of June, 1918.

GEORGE WAGNER,
Clerk of Quarter Sessions.

Petition without previous written declaration of intention.

To the honorable Judges of the Court of Common Pleas of Luzerne County:

The petition of (a) Louis N. Hammerling, an alien, hereby applying to be admitted to become a citizen of The United States, respectfully Represents:

1. That his present place of residence is (b) 379 South River in the City of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne and State of Pennsylvania; and that the name of his proposed witness in support of this application is James H. Shea, who resides at 299 South St. in the City of Wilkes-Barre, County of Luzerne and State aforesaid.

2. That the petitioner was born in the 21st day of March A. D. 1874 in the (c) town of (c) Waipahn in the (c) State of (c) Ohau in the (c) Kingdom (c) of Hawaii, and is now over twenty-one years of age, to wit, of the age of 27 years.

3. That he arrived in the United States of America, to wit, at the Port of Sanfrancisco in the 20th day of May A. D. 1885, at which time he was a subject of the (d) Kingdom of (d) Hawaii under the age of eighteen years, and that he had not since acquired citizenship under any other foreign government.

4. That he has never borne any hereditary title, or been of any of the orders of nobility, of the kingdom or state from which he came. (e) He has not

5. That no court of the United States or of any of the states thereof has ever refused, upon application of the petitioner, to admit him to become a citizen of the United States. (f) They have not

6. That he has for the continued term of five years at least next preceding the time of making this application, and ever since his arrival as aforesaid, including three years next preceding his arriving at the age of twenty-one years, actually resided within the United States of America and not elsewhere, and within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for the continued term of one year at least, and that doing all of said continued term of five years he had constantly behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.

7. That for the continued term of two years next preceding the date of making this application, it has been and it now is the bona fide intention of the petitioner to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty, particularly to the Kingdom of Hawaii of which he has been a subject.

The petitioner therefore prays that he may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States, and he will ever pray etc.

LUZERNE COUNTY, ss.:

I, Louis N. Hammerling the foregoing named petitioner, do, on my solemn oath, declare; that I will support the constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; that I do hereby renounce and relinquish any title or order of nobility to which I am or hereafter may be entitled; that for the continued term of two years next preceding the date of making this application, it has been and it now is my bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever, and I do absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure, all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty whatever,—particularly to Kingdom of Hawaii of which I have been a subject.

LOUIS N. HAMMERLING.

Sworn and subscribed in open court, this 11 day of Nov. A. D. 1901.

JOHN M. BAUSCH,
Prothonotary.
Pro clerk.

[No 744. Term 1901.]

Petition of Louis N. Hammerling (arriving under 18 years) of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., for admission to citizenship. Filed Oct. 4, 1901, proposed Witness James H. Shea, residing at Wilkes-Barre, County of Luzerne. Now, Nov. 11, 1901 after hearing, the application of the petitioner to be admitted to become a citizen of the United States is Granted By the Court.

JAS. H. SHEA,
Attorney for petitioner.

Certified from the records this 4th day of June, A. D. 1918.

GEORGE WAGNER,
Clerk of Quarter Sessions.
Per FRANK J. KEISER,
Deputy Clerk.

Explanations.

(b) In first space of this paragraph insert the number of the house and the name of the street or alley, if the petitioner resides in a city or Borough but if not, leave that space blank: also observe the directions in corresponding space for number of house and name of street or alley, in the case of the proposed witness.

(c) These six spaces, each marked (c) must be filled so as to indicate, first the name of the city, town or village where the petitioner was born, or if not born in either, the name of the smallest municipal or territorial subdivision in which the place of birth is located, second, the name of the State, which includes the smaller place of birth, on the one hand, and on the other is one of the first governmental sub-divisions of the ultimate republic, kingdom, empire or country to which the place of birth belongs: third, the name of such ultimate republic or kingdom, or other designation, as the case may be. To illustrate the meaning above intended, if a petitioner were born in Lemberg, In Galicia, his petition should read that he was born "In the City of Lemberg, in the Province of Galicia, in the Empire of Austro-Hungary."

(d) Insert the name of the republic, kingdom or empire as the case may be, of which the petitioner was a subject at the time of his arrival.

(e) If petitioner has borne any hereditary title, or been, etc., add the word "excepting" and state title, etc., definitely and in full.

(f) If the fact be otherwise, state what court refused to admit, the date thereof, and the reason assigned, if any.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. DUSHAN POPOVICH.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you live, Mr. Popovich?

Mr. POPOVICH. No. 207 East Nineteenth Street, New York City.

Maj. HUMES. What is your business?

Mr. POPOVICH. I am a printer, publisher, and editor of a Serbian newspaper.

Maj. HUMES. What is the name of that newspaper?

Mr. POPOVICH. In English it means the Serbian Sentinel.

Maj. HUMES. How long have you been in the publishing business?

Mr. POPOVICH. Seventeen years.

Maj. HUMES. Is your paper a daily or a weekly?

Mr. POPOVICH. It is a weekly.

Maj. HUMES. A weekly paper?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Mr. Louis N. Hammerling?

Mr. POPOVICH. Since he started that association of foreign-language newspapers. He came to my office asking me—this was about 10 years ago—I am not quite sure how long it is.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. POPOVICH. He came to me asking me if I would take an advertisement for my paper. I said, "Oh, yes; why not?" So that he asked me for rates. I told him my rate, I think 25 cents per inch, and he brought right away advertisements, and I can't say how much, but he paid me. Every first, in the morning, there was a bill and check in the mail, over there, all the time.

Maj. HUMES. Did you take a part or purchase any stock in the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes. He said to me that I can get advertisements from him under one condition only, if I buy shares in this association, so that I said to him that I don't want to buy any shares; I have no money for buying shares. I don't know the man, and to come right away and ask me to buy a hundred dollars of stock—so that he says, "You must not pay that. I will give you advertisements, and every month I will deduct so much, and I will give you the shares." So that in that way I got the advertisements and they were paid for, and in the same way I got the shares, too—two shares.

Maj. HUMES. The two shares that you got were of the preferred stock?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes; of the preferred stock. I have one of them here [handing stock certificate to the chairman].

Senator OVERMAN. This is one certificate?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes. One I sold, about a year ago.

Senator OVERMAN. You sold one. What did you get for it?

Mr. POPOVICH. $100.

Senator OVERMAN. You got par for it?

Mr. POPOVICH. I sold to Mr. Franz Zotti.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Popovich, from the time that you bought this stock up until the spring of 1905, how much did you receive a month, on an average, of advertising for Mr. Hammerling?

Mr. POPOVICH. From the beginning I did not get much. I got about—I don't remember exactly—from $15 to $25 a month, and gradually it was always more and more, so that I had up until he put that appeal before me that I should sign—I had then about $70 or $80 a month; and he sent Mr. Gabriel—should I continue about that?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; just go ahead and tell about that transaction.

Mr. POPOVICH. He sent Mr. Gabriel to me. There are two Mr. Gabriels in his office—there were two—I think two brothers; one who is now here. I think it is his brother. He came to my office at 384 Second Avenue one afternoon, as much as I remember, after dinner, and said to me, "Mr. Popovich, please sign that. Mr. Hammerling would like if you would sign it." So that before I sign something I want to see what I am signing, and I started to read one line, two lines, three lines, and then it was perfectly clear to me what it is. I read a little further, and so I found out that he wants that I should sign an appeal to the American people that they should stop manufacturing munitions and stop sending munitions to our allies. As a good Serbian, and a good American citizen, too, I got angry right away, and I said to him, in high words, "Mr. Gabriel, tell to Mr. Hammerling that Mr. Popovich will never sign that."

Senator NELSON. Whom did you say that to?

Mr. POPOVICH. To Mr. Gabriel, his representative, who brought that to me.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. POPOVICH. And as soon as he went on the street, after two or three minutes, I took the telephone receiver and I telephoned right away to the Serbian Vallie, to Mr. Rankovich. I said to him, "Mr. Rankovich, was Mr. Gabriel in your office today?" He said, "No." I said, "Well, he is coming right away. He is coming in a few minutes to get you to sign something, and you may not look at it. Do not sign what he will bring there. You are a busy man, and maybe you will not look at it; he is giving you so many advertisements every month and maybe you will be careless and sign that, and it as against our Serbian-American interests"—and I told him what it is—"and please inform your interpreter right away"—there is an interpreter on the daily Serbian papers—"and let them know not to do that"; and he did that, he informed the daily Serbian papers, and I saw in an editorial he wrote the next day, or a few days later, I found out that the Bohemian papers had sent letters right away throughout the country to the other Bohemian papers that they should not sign this appeal.

So that this was not enough for me, that I have telephoned to Mr. Rankovich, and I telephoned right away to Mr. Hammerling too, and I said that "as a member of our association I am protesting that you should send to the members to sign something like that." Then he said to me, "Well, Mr. Popovich, you can do what you want to, but I advise you that if you do not sign this appeal you will be sorry for that." These are the words he said to me. Now, I know why I can be sorry. The only thing is, I can lose money I am getting for advertising of tobacco and cigars and all kinds of things that he is sending to me; and really it did not last long. In the next two or three months, gradually—of course he did not stop all advertisement at once, but in a very short time, I do not remember exactly how many days, but in three or four months or four or five months—he drops from $70 or $80 a month to $4 a month, and taking his 10 per cent for his services, I got about $3.60 advertising from him. Since about two months, I have not a cent, and I am not sorry for that, because as a Serbian, and as a good American citizen, I could not sign that; never.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know as to whether or not the other Serbian papers and the Bohemian papers you referred to were treated in the same way that you were.

Mr. POPOVICH. I found out through the Serbian Vallie; he wrote an editorial about that, praising me, that I was such a good American and such a good Serbian patriot too, that I didn't sign that, and that I informed him that he should not sign, too, because maybe he was in a hurry and he might do something like that; and then he mentioned—he informed the Bohemian papers, and I don't remember exactly, about twenty, or how many papers they informed throughout the country, the daily papers and the Bohemian daily papers, so that they did not sign that appeal.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know whether or not the advertising was withdrawn from those other papers just as it was withdrawn from you?

Mr. POPOVICH. No; it was withdrawn just from me; just from me, because I dared to call him up on the phone and tell him in high words that I am protesting against that.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. POPOVICH. So that I think that he wanted to show me how strong he is and how nothing I am.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any understanding or agreement with Mr. Hammerling with relation to the translation of the personal-liberty articles appearing in the Leader?

Mr. POPOVICH. I do not know exactly the time when he started to place these personal-liberty articles in his Leader, but at that time he sent again Mr. Gabriel, who is just now here. He came again and brought me in my office translations, English articles, and said, "Mr. Popovich, you translate that and you will get $10 a month for the translations, and send us 10 proofs"; and as I was reading I would not translate anything that is not loyal to the American Government, but really I did not find in those articles I translated, myself, nothing else; just that on account of a few drunkards, why they should stop a sane man who is drinking just a little, maybe, one glass a day of beer—why they should stop him, why they should take his drink away; that if he wants to drink a glass of beer, not to drink it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. In other words, the translation you did was of the personal-liberty articles that were printed in the Leader under the name of Hammerling?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes; the same thing.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time did you continue that translating?

Mr. POPOVICH. I am sorry that I do not remember; but I know that it went on more than a year—I think about two years.

Maj. HUMES. For about two years you did that?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes, sir; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. And you got $10 a month for that?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes; $10 a month. And I hear yesterday he got $200 a month for that from the Serbian administration and that he was paid separately for those 10 proofs, mailing them; so that I see he did me wrong. He is a rich man and I am struggling very hard since 20 years. I have a little printing office, where I spent about $20,000 for three linotype machines, and so on, old machinery, and I don't know whether it is worth now $5,000; and after spending my whole life on it—and he takes from me these few dollars; and I see now——

Maj. HUMES. Did you at any period during your acquaintance with Hammerling learn as to what his nationality was and what his sentiments were?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was that?

Mr. POPOVICH. The first time I was in his office to inquire more about details of these shares and how it will be bought, I went in the World Building, where he had an office, and then he was asking me what I am. I said, "I am a Serbian"; and I was, naively, asking him, too, what he is. He said, "I am an Austrian, and I am proud of it that I am an Austrian."

Senator NELSON. An Austrian?

Mr. POPOVICH. Yes; and he is proud of it that he is an Austrian; so that, of course, I didn't say anything, but Serbians do not like much, Austrians; but he brought the advertisements for the whole of America; and there is so many people in America, Hungarians, Jews, and everything, so that I can not open my feelings what I have in myself what I feel as to those people. I had to leave it to them.

Maj. HUMES. From your experience as a newspaper man and publisher and a member of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, will you state what control Mr. Hammerling exercised over them and how he exercised it?

Mr. POPOVICH. I do not know anything about his dealings, because I was not his favorite. I was not in his confidence; but he would tell me what he was doing. I know only so much that he sent me contracts for advertisements and he sent me the bill for it; but I don't know. I could see through that he is the whole association, because, after those words, I wrote him two letters asking him, "Mr. Hammerling, how does it happen that, as a shareholder—I have two shares—I was never called on for meetings; to see what you are doing and what others are doing there, in the association; and I think, as a shareholder, I am entitled to know what they are doing. If they are doing wrong, or something, I would not be a member." So that he answered me, "I am not preventing you that you should not come in our meetings. We are announcing our yearly meetings in the newspapers." Now, I saw that it is useless that I should write him more letters, because there are thousands and thousands of newspapers, maybe, in the United States, and 365 days in the year, and I should look now all over to find out where he is announcing the yearly meetings; and I saw that I can not do anything with him, because in that Leader I saw prominent members—American high officers—who are writing in his paper. I saw in the papers that he gave a dinner, too, in the Knickerbocker Hotel; and there was Mr.

Cortelyou, his friend—he said so—and many others; so that I said, "What can I do against him? He is a power." I had to shut my mouth and be satisfied with those advertisements what he is giving me. Anyhow, I would never get those advertisements what he is giving me of the American Tobacco Co., and some sirup, and all kinds. I would never come to those people and I would never be able to get those, because many Americans they do not know even that the Serbians are living in the United States. It is very hard to get advertisements.

Maj. HUMES. That is all, Mr. Popovich, unless some member of the committee wants to ask you questions.

Senator OVERMAN. Stand aside. Call the next witness.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARTHUR GABRIEL.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you live?

Mr. GABRIEL. No. 117 Avenue B, New York.

Maj. HUMES. You are acquainted with Mr. Hammerling?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Were you ever connected with Mr. Hammerling of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. GABRIEL. I was acquainted with Mr. Hammerling from February 7, 1909, until November 7, 1917.

Maj. HUMES. In what capacity were you connected with him during that time?

Mr. GABRIEL. During that period I went through practically every position in the association, from office boy up to assistant treasurer. I was office boy, secretary, assistant treasurer, and vice president.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time were you vice president?

Mr. GABRIEL. I was vice president about a period of three years; the last three years—that is about from 1914 to 1917, or two and a half years. I do not remember the exact time.

Maj. HUMES. Will you tell us what the nature of the corporation, the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, was—what it was composed of and what its purposes and activities were?

Mr. GABRIEL. Well, as far as I know, during my connection their purpose was simply to solicit advertising from the various large corporations in the country, and to take action on any matters pertaining to foreigners, such as any legislative matter that may come up before the Senate or Congress of the United States; to cooperate in every which way with the advertiser in regard to his products, like, for instance, some States were voting against the cigarette bill, or to stop the sale of cigarettes or snuff; to go down to those States and help these cigarette and tobacco companies to have that bill defeated; practically, to help the advertiser in every which way. For instance, if a strike should occur with some concern like the Standard Oil Co.

Maj. HUMES. Was that handled through the foreign-language newspapers in the locality where the legislation was pending?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Or where the labor difficulty existed?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; going to that locality.

Maj. HUMES. And the foreign-language newspapers were used as the vehicle for propaganda work and for opposing legislation that was detrimental to the advertising?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Besides the ordinary solicitors for advertising, was there a field force connected with the association?

Mr. GABRIEL. What do you mean by a field force?

Maj. HUMES. I mean did the employees of the association go out in the field to take an active part among the publishers of foreign-language newspapers, to influence or dominate their political activities among foreigners?

Mr. GABRIEL. The only man we had going out in the field was Mr. E. H. Jaudon. He was the only man that would go out, on any question that might arise, among the foreign publications to try and influence the publishers on any matter, whatever it might be, which would be arranged according to the instructions Mr. Hammerling would give. That was about the only man we had going out among the publishers.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Mr. Hammerling himself go?

Mr. GABRIEL. Mr. Hammerling would quite often go to see the publishers. Three or four times each year he would travel, mostly not far west of St. Louis. That was about as far as he went. Sometimes he went to San Francisco.

Maj. HUMES. Was any effort made to promote the interests of advertisers through the influence of charitable or beneficial organizations?

Mr. GABRIEL. Not that I remember.

Maj. HUMES. There have been some bills from the association offered in evidence here showing dinners that were given and banquets that were given to priests and others at various times.

Mr. GABRIEL. The only banquet I remember given to a priest was at the Plaza Hotel. That was in 1916, I believe in November, to the Monsignor Jelatsky. He was just then given the monsignorship by Cardinal Farley. At that dinner Cardinal Farley was present, and of course some of the priests, and Dr. Rumely and Mr. Hammerling and myself. That was the only dinner I ever attended where priests were present.

Maj. HUMES. You know nothing about these dinners that were paid for by Andreae, then?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir; nothing at all.

Maj. HUMES. There was presented to the committee this morning by Mr. Hammerling an editorial that appeared in the edition of the American Leader of August 13, 1914. Were you a vice president of the company at that time?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you tell us the circumstances under which that editorial was published and the occurrences following the publication?

Mr. GABRIEL. I remember that editorial distinctly, because it dealt with the Slav question. Of course I am of Polish extraction, although born here, so that Mr. Caldwell, who was vice president of the company at that time, said "Gabriel, come on over; I want to show you something I am trying to put in the Leader"; so that he read to me what he had been writing; so that he asked me for some information on the Slav question. I said, "Caldwell, that is kind of strong." He said, "I don't care; I am going to jam it through"; so that he put the article in the Leader. After that article was published Mr. Momand came to me—at that time Mr. Hammerling had been in Europe and Mr. Momand came to me—and he said, "Gabriel, don't you think that that article was kind of strong, and wouldn't agree with Mr. Hammerling's ideas?" I said, "I do not think so. This entire article seems to be proally." He said, "It might affect some of our publishers"; and so he called in Caldwell, and we had a conference, the three of us, and at that conference it was decided that the three of us should go to all the publications in the city of New York which we thought were pro-Austrian, and apologize; Mr. Caldwell would take all the blame and we would apologize to the publishers, that this article has been put in the American Leader without Hammerling's knowledge and that Caldwell was held responsible for the entire article.

Maj. HUMES. How long after that article was it that Hammerling returned to this country?

Mr. GABRIEL. Mr. Hammerling returned some time the end of August. It was that month because I myself met him at the pier with Miss Leffler.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any discussion of this editorial after Mr. Hammerling returned?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; we immediately went in and I explained the case to him and told him what we had done, that we had gone around to the Hungarian publications, in fact, Mr. Berko and Mr. Horwarth, and explained the situation to them, and he called in Caldwell and gave him a reprimand, and after that all the proofs of articles that were put in the Leader—that is, the galley proofs, that is before they were sent for final printing—were O. K.'d by three people in the office. At that time it was Mr. Momand, Miss Leffler, and Caldwell himself. That was so as not to allow anything to slip in the Leader that would not be passed by these three people.

Senator NELSON. You said there that Hammerling criticized what had been done. You said he criticized what had been done when he came back.

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; he reprimanded Mr. Caldwell.

Senator NELSON. For what?

Mr. GABRIEL. For putting the article in, stating that it was too long and that it would hurt some of our editors like the Hungarian editors; and that is why he made the rule that the three people should sign the galley proofs.

Senator NELSON. He did not claim, then, that they had been published at his instance and request?

Mr. GABRIEL. Not to me.

Senator NELSON. Or indicate any approval?

Mr. GABRIEL. Not while I was present; no, Senator.

Maj. HUMES. Now, will you state if at any time you saw Ambassador von Bernstorff come to Mr. Hammerling's office?

Mr. GABRIEL. I saw von Bernstorff at Hammerling's office sometime in March, I believe, of 1915.

Senator NELSON. What was your answer?

Mr. GABRIEL. I saw Ambassador von Bernstorff at Mr. Hammerling's office some time, I believe, in March or February, 1915.

Senator NELSON. Was Mr. Hammerling in the office then?

Mr. GABRIEL. There was a long private hall, and there were three private offices the doors from which led onto this hall, and down at the right of this hall was Mr. Hammerling's office. My office was the center office, and I happened to come out into that private hall and I remember seeing von Bernstorff. I recognized him instantly, because he had this long coat with a Persian-lamb collar, I think it is, and he had his hat off and had just stepped into Mr. Hammerling's office.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Hammerling's private office?

Mr. GABRIEL. His private office. After that I did not see him any more.

Senator NELSON. How long was he there, so far as you know?

Mr. GABRIEL. That I do not know, Senator, because from Mr. Hammerling's private office there was an exit to the hall.

Maj. HUMES. State how long after that it was that the activities with regard to this appeal commenced.

Mr. GABRIEL. The activities started some time in March, toward the end of March. It was perhaps two weeks before the appeal appeared.

Maj. HUMES. Tell us what you know about that appeal and any conversation that you may have had with Mr. Hammerling relative to that.

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a moment, Major. I may have been woolgathering myself, but I did not understand from this witness how near, in point of time, Ambassador von Bernstorff's visit was.

Maj. HUMES. He said von Bernstorff was there in February or March, and that the activities commenced about two weeks before the appeal was published, which would be about the middle of March.

Senator WOLCOTT. I did not catch that.

(The pending question was read by the stenographer.)

Mr. GABRIEL. Before the advertising appeal came out I was called into Mr. Hammerling's private office; I believe it was on a Friday evening. He called me in alone, and Miss Leffler was present there, and he said: "Arthur, I want you to take your wife and take her to Bethlehem, give her a good time, and spare no expense; take a private car if necessary. Go there and find out the percentage of foreigners working in the munition plants up there. Go to saloons, go to headquarters, and go to the priests and rabbis if necessary, and bring me back the data there whether they are satisfied with the working conditions, the average earning, what they are earning per week, and bring that data back." I did not leave the next day. I was supposed to leave the next day, but the next day was Saturday; but I left on Sunday morning, and instead of taking my wife I went to a college friend of mine, Dr. Davidson, and I said: "Ralph, I am going to South Bethlehem, and I have got the money and will pay all expenses, and you come along with me." The two of us went to South Bethlehem, and we stayed at the Eagle Hotel up there and got the information. He went to the Italian priests and spoke with them and got the data on the percentage of Italians there. We finally brought the data back as to how many people there were and whether they were satisfied with conditions; but we were instructed not to go near the munition plant. So that I believe that I got back Wednesday of that week; and all of us boys that were sent on this trip——

Senator NELSON. Were there others sent at the same time?

Mr. GABRIEL. Oh, yes; there was a Mr. Dattner who was sent to Bridgeport; Mr. G. H. Berg was sent through the New England States; Mr. Momand was sent to Brooklyn; Mr. Leon Wazeter was sent somewhere in Philadelphia, I believe; and Henry Gabriel was sent to Utica.

So that when we came back we all met. Mr. Hammerling happened to be away for a few days, and we all met in the Woolworth in the rathskeller and compared our expense accounts, so that one man who had a shorter trip would not charge more than one who had a longer trip, and then we submitted a bill. In fact, when I presented the bill to Mr. Hammerling he said to me, "Is that all you spent?" So that then after that we each had a written report as to the percentage, and signed our names.

Then after that the copy was being prepared in the private office of Mr. Hammerling.

Senator NELSON. What copy?

Mr. GABRIEL. Of his appeal to the Americans. That was prepared in Mr. Hammerling's office by Mr. Momand and himself, and no one knew in the office what was going on in there.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know whether Mr. Rumely had any part in the preparation of it?

Mr. GABRIEL. Dr. Rumely was quite frequently there, but at the time while this was going on in the private office it was mostly Mr. Hammerling, Mr. Momand, and Mr. Rankin, of the Rankin Agency to-day; and I happened to go after that to the Empire City Electrical Co. and happened to see a copy of the appeal, which the Empire Co. was making, so that naturally I read the appeal, and when I got to my office G. H. Berkel happened to come in there—in fact, he had his desk in my office also—and my brother was there, packing electrotypes, and he came in my office and said he heard on the street that Hammerling was being paid by the Austro-German Government. With this information he goes in to Hammerling. Hammerling then calls me on the wire—an extension wire—and asks me do I know a man named Drewiecksi. I told him yes, because he was the publisher of the Polish pictorial weekly, the Krij, which means in English "country". He told me that it was charged that he was receiving German money. I told him across the wire, "Why, Mr. Hammerling, it is an open secret among the Poles in New York that you are supplied by the Austro-German Government."

Then about 10 minutes later Mr. Hammerling came to my office with his hat and coat on, and beckoned for me to come into his private office, which I did, and there were Miss Leffler, Mr. Hammerling, and myself alone. Then he spoke of this and said what do I know about it. I said, "That is all I know. That is all I hear among the Polish people here in New York, that you are being paid by the Austrian-German Government." With that he turns to Miss Leffler and asks did she say anything to her sister Margaret.

Maj. HUMES. Margaret was also an employee there?

Mr. GABRIEL. She was also an employee there. She was a sister of Bertha. She says "No." With that Hammerling turns to me and says, "Arthur, whatever you know, keep your mouth shut. Whatever people do not know will not hurt them." Then I sat for a while with Bertha Leffler talking, and I says, "Isn't it true?" She would not admit or deny it. So that at the end of that week—I don't know whether it was that week, but I know the next pay day it was—I received in my envelope, I can't say whether it was $500 or $1,000, as a bonus. In fact, everybody in the office, from the office boy up, received some sort of a gift at that time. That is all I remember about the appeal.

Senator NELSON. You got $500 extra?

Mr. GABRIEL. I really do not know, Senator, whether it was $500 or $1,000, because I was getting money every month, or every second month, I didn't know what for. At Christmas time I got as high as $2,000; and when my girl was born Hammerling paid the bills without my asking him; so that I do not know what I got the money for, that time.

Senator NELSON. Did you suppose you were getting the advertisers' money?

Mr. GABRIEL. No; I supposed I got the money to keep my mouth shut.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are not connected with Hammerling?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir; I left him February 7, 1917.

Maj. HUMES. You might state, in that connection, the circumstances under which you left his employ.

Mr. GABRIEL. About six months previous to that Mr. Dattner and myself—he was also at that time a vice president; we had about three vice presidents there—he and I were discussing the matter of how the foreign papers were beginning to understand the real workings of the association; that we had heard from some of the publishers that they intended to break away; and I said: "Dattner, I would like to get off the ship before it sinks." I said: "I am a young fellow in the advertising field, and I would like to make good." Around February 7—it was on a Saturday afternoon—there was a meeting held of some of the foreign-language publishers of New York. There was probably one from each nationality—one Italian, one Greek, one Polish, and then the daily publications.

I was invited, with Mr. Dattner, to this meeting, and at this meeting was discussed the advisability of opening the foreign-language press association, and the object was to disclose for the American public and for the American advertiser that Mr. Hammerling is nothing more than a recognized advertising agency; that it is not an association of the foreign-language press; that he has no authority to represent them and only has the authority to represent them as an agent.

Meanwhile one of the solicitors from one of the competitors of Hammerling had submitted to the P. Lorillard Co., which was one of our biggest advertisers, an estimate on all the foreign-language newspapers in the United States, and that Monday Mr. Hammerling was called to the P. Lorillard Co. with reference to this estimate, because the estimate was, as far as I heard, 35 to 40 per cent cheaper than what Hammerling had been getting from the P. Lorillard Co. So that afternoon Mr. Hammerling came back—I was not in the office—and instructed Mr. Momand as soon as I came in to ask me to give him a letter addressed to Mr. Belt, of the P. Lorillard Co.—Mr. Belt and Mr. Mahoney—over my name that the association worked strictly on a 10 per cent basis; but I know in my experience with the association that it has always been honest in its dealings. In other words, he wanted me to give him a letter showing that the association has only been doing business on a strictly 10 per cent basis. I considered the thing after Mr. Momand told me, and after this meeting that the publishers had held I thought to myself, "Now is the time for me to get out." I said: "Once I give this letter to Hammerling over my signature, I am absolutely killed in the foreign-language advertising field. Even if I did open business and compete with him, he has that letter to show, and whatever I do in the advertising business in competition with him, whether one agency submits a better advertising campaign or cheaper rates or not, I think that letter would condemn me in the future." And I refused to sign it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why would it condemn you: because it would not be true?

Mr. GABRIEL. No; it would not be true.

Senator WOLCOTT. It was not true?

Mr. GABRIEL. It was not true, because I knew that we were making on the average, on some papers, just which we could, which we knew were loyal to the association, we could make 35 to 50 per cent, on some papers as high as 100 per cent; so that I refused to sign the letter, because I had intentions to go in the business myself, which I did later on.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state just how Mr. Hammerling or this association conducted its business with the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. GABRIEL. Well, for instance, there would be an advertisement; I would be, for instance, sent to see the P. Lorillard Co., and they wanted to advertise the Zyra cigarettes, and I would come back, and Mr. Hammerling and myself, as a rule, would choose the papers, what papers would receive the advertising, and how much they were to receive. Sometimes the papers were given, according to rate cards, namely, those papers which we had to pay according to rate cards, like the Scandinavian—the Scandinavian we had to strictly abide by the rates—but some of the Polock papers, for instance, you could pay them anything. Say you paid them 20 per cent, they would take it. We would give them an amount and then submit this amount to the client, and then we would get an O. K. on the copy and on the list, because the average American advertiser, it is my experience with the foreign press, did not know practically anything about the foreign press, that is to say, the value of each individual publication. I could go up to the Standard Oil Co. people and tell them that this paper in Bridgeport was a better paper than any in New York and they would take my word for it; but they did not know the value of the publication or what its reputation was; so that whatever our pay was would be O. K., and it would be shipped to the newspapers and they would pay the bill accordingly.

Senator OVERMAN. You would make 30 or 40 cents an inch and put in for 20 cents?

Mr. GABRIEL. We used to get as high as $1.50 an inch and give a quarter. It all depends on what the people would take.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, instead of doing business on a given basis, you charged the advertiser as much as you could and paid the newspapers as little as you could?

Mr. GABRIEL. It all depended on the advertiser. If the advertiser was easy, we would figure the estimate accordingly. If the advertiser sometimes would pass his advertising through an American agency and then they would begin to ask us to give them sworn statements as to circulation and go into the details of the publication, then perhaps he would come down even to 10 per cent, and many a time we took the business at a loss just to get the business. It all depended on who the advertiser was.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever find out from Mr. Hammerling, in the regular conduct of the business, about the advertising of this appeal and the amount received for that advertisement and the amount paid to the several newspapers?

Mr. GABRIEL. I never did. That was kept secret right in that room, as I said before. I did not know anything about it.

Senator NELSON. That room that von Bernstorff went in?

Mr. GABRIEL. That is Mr. Hammerling's private office.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever see Dr. Albert in there?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir; I never did.

Senator NELSON. Did you see von Bernstorff there more than once?

Mr. GABRIEL. Only once. I remember Bernstorff very distinctly, because when the steamship Vaterland landed first in this country there was a luncheon given on the ship, and Mr. Bernstorff sat about 20 feet away from me, and, in fact, he made a speech there.

Senator NELSON. Was that at a luncheon given by Hammerling?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir; that was on board of the steamship Vaterland.

Senator NELSON. And Hammerling was there?

Mr. GABRIEL. No; he was not. I took his place.

Senator NELSON. That is how you knew von Bernstorff?

Mr. GABRIEL. That is the first time I saw Bernstorff, at that luncheon. He took a seat at the table close to me, and he made a speech there. He was introduced by Mr. Prendergast of New York.

Maj. HUMES. Are there other advertising agencies that have foreign advertising?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Is this association, then, essential to foreign-language advertising?

Mr. GABRIEL. Not essential, because it is the same as any other advertising agency.

Maj. HUMES. It is a purely commercial proposition, owned by Hammerling?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; so far as I know.

Maj. HUMES. And it is only an association in name?

Mr. GABRIEL. That is all.

Senator NELSON. He is really the owner of it?

Mr. GABRIEL. He is the owner.

Senator NELSON. He owns all the stock?

Mr. GABRIEL. All the stock.

Senator NELSON. All of the common stock and most of the preferred stock, that is?

Mr. GABRIEL. The majority of the common stock he owns, because he also gave me some common stock. He did not give it to me personally. He held it.

Senator NELSON. And it is only the common stock that has a vote, as I understand it. The preferred stock does not have a vote; is not that it?

Mr. GABRIEL. The common stock, there was only——

Senator NELSON. You do not understand me. When you come to a stockholders' meeting, it is only the common stock that has voting power; not the preferred stock?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Is not that true?

Mr. GABRIEL. That is true.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. GABRIEL. But I do not know how it was arranged so, because when I was secretary of the association I was called in and told just to "sign here" in the minute book. I was not allowed to read the minutes or anything. He did not sell the common stock; he kept that, except he gave some of it occasionally to a friend.

Senator NELSON. It was only the preferred stock——

Mr. GABRIEL. That he sold.

Senator NELSON. That paid 6 per cent dividends, that he sold?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And that stock had no voting power?

Mr. GABRIEL. No.

Senator NELSON. And he often paid as high as 10 or 15 or 20 per cent dividends on the common stock, did he not?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. But the preferred stock never but 6 per cent?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; it just got the 6 per cent.

Senator NELSON. So that, being the sole owner of the common stock, he got those immense dividends?

Mr. GABRIEL. He could declare any dividend he wants.

Senator NELSON. Yes; he could declare any dividend he wanted.

Mr. GABRIEL. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. Now, did you ever know of the stockholders meeting?

Mr. GABRIEL. I never knew of a stockholders' meeting as long as I was there.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know of any regular meeting of the board of directors?

Mr. GABRIEL. There was not any board of directors except the real board of directors was himself and some of the clerks in the office; they were the real board of directors; three of them, I believe. And all they would do would be to sign something and afterwards give it to Miss Leffler, and she would typewrite the minutes or whatever it was.

Senator NELSON. Who is Miss Leffler?

Mr. GABRIEL. Mr. Hammerling's private, confidential secretary.

Senator NELSON. There was a time when you had three vice presidents, was there not?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; four, in fact.

Senator NELSON. What were the functions of the officers as distinguished from those of ordinary clerks?

Mr. GABRIEL. The main thing why Mr. Hammerling gave us the titles, as he explained to us, was simply to raise our standing, so that if we went to see Mr. Lorillard, of the P. Lorillard Co., he would know that he was talking to a vice president.

Maj. HUMES. To give the concern a big standing as one that had four vice presidents; is that the idea?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know of Mr. Hammerling at any time telephoning to Boy-Ed or von Papen?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, Major.

Maj. HUMES. State what you know about that.

Mr. GABRIEL. I was coming in the room when he gave instructions to Miss Leffler to get Capt. Boy-Ed on the wire, and then I was asked to leave the room and Miss Leffler went out and took the place of the regular switch operator.

Senator NELSON. Who is Boy-Ed?

Mr. GABRIEL. Capt. Boy-Ed.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but who was he?

Mr. GABRIEL. I never saw him——

Capt. LESTER. He was connected with the ambassador here. He was a naval attaché.

Senator NELSON. I know he was, but I wanted it made a part of the record. He was a naval attaché, was he not?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What do you know about his telephoning to von Papen?

Mr. GABRIEL. The same thing—the same way.

Senator NELSON. Who is von Papen?

Mr. GABRIEL. Von Papen, as far as I understood at the time, was connected with the Austrians.

Senator NELSON. You are wrong there. He was part of von Bernstorff's force.

Mr. GABRIEL. As far as I know, at the time; I was not interested. All I remember is those names; seeing some of the letterheads and the backs of the envelopes. On the back of the envelope, the flap, the back of an envelope, I happened to see lying on Hammerling's desk, was "Captain Boy-Ed"; and I heard him call von Papen.

Maj. HUMES. You say you saw that on a letterhead or envelope on Hammerling's desk?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, on the envelope, where you paste it, you know.

Senator WOLCOTT. It was printed?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, printed.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have anything to do with the destruction of any of the records of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Tell what you know about that.

Mr. GABRIEL. I believe it was 1913, we were still in the Woolworth Building, and previous to that Mr. Jaudon had been the treasurer of the company, and Mr. Jaudon at that time had a conference with Mr. Hammerling and he left, and then Mr. [illegible] in Mr. Dattner and myself and said, "Destroy all the records and the files of correspondence," and I took the records and carried it up to my apartment in the Mansf[illegible] with the janitor and the firemen there"; and he said, "Take those books into the cellar there and burn them." He said, "Stay there until the last book is burned, because," he said, "I do not trust that crook Jaudon, and we had better get rid of these books." So that Mr. Dattner and I hired one of those two-horse trucks and loaded it and it was at least three-fourths full, and Mr. Dattner and myself had to lie on the top of those books; and we drove to Hammerling's apartment in the Mansfield and threw them down in the cellar, and then the engineer and the assistant engineer burned the books. It took about three hours before all the files and books were burned.

Senator NELSON. You stayed around to see them burned?

Mr. GABRIEL. We were right in the engine room while they were being burned.

Senator NELSON. Was it a practice of Mr. Hammerling's to annually destroy the records?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was his common practice?

Mr. GABRIEL. That was his common practice.

Senator WOLCOTT. These books that you just spoke of as being destroyed, were they books that he would ordinarily destroy every year, or were they not books that he would ordinarily preserve? In the regular course of things, would they have been destroyed in the course of that year?

Mr. GABRIEL. No; that was the first time that the books had been destroyed, in 1913. That was all the books since the beginning of the association. After that first time we destroyed the books, then the practice was to destroy the books every year.

Senator NELSON. Dead men tell no tales. I suppose that was the theory you acted on?

Mr. GABRIEL. I had to do it. I was ordered to.

Senator NELSON. Was Dumba around your quarters?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir; I never saw Dumba.

Senator NELSON. Or any representative of Dumba?

Mr. GABRIEL. No, sir.

Senator STERLING. What did the books destroyed include? What were they?

Mr. GABRIEL. All the doings of the associations; all the records of the amounts of money received and the amounts of money paid out; everything that the general bookkeeper would have.

Senator STERLING. Any minutes of stockholders' meetings?

Mr. GABRIEL. That I do not know, Senator, because with such a mess I did not go through the files. We just threw them out in the basement.

Senator STERLING. Was there any reason assigned at the time for the destruction?

Mr. GABRIEL. Yes; Mr. Hammerling said he did not trust Jaudon, who had just left his employ, who had been auditor previous to that.

Maj. HUMES. Jaudon was after that time employed, and as vice president of the association and as traveling director, to look after the interests of the United States Brewers' Association, was he not?

Mr. GABRIEL. As far as I understood, he was not the vice president, but he had the title of traveling director of the association.

Maj. HUMES. Or inspector, was he?

Mr. GABRIEL. Director and inspector; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, director and inspector?

Mr. GABRIEL. That was right after he had left Hammerling's employ, and then we moved to the Woolworth Building, and immediately after that I saw Mr. Jaudon come into the office, and he said, "Arthur, I have got a better job than I had before. Hammerling has fixed me up and sent me all through the country to see the papers."

Maj. HUMES. He was paid four hundred dollars a month in that connection, was he not?

Mr. GABRIEL. I do not know what he was paid, but he told me that he was getting a pretty good salary.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I think that is all, Mr. Gabriel.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HARRY JAMES PRUDEN.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you live, Mr. Pruden?

Mr. PRUDEN. Mount Vernon, N. Y.; No. 7 Ida Avenue.

Maj. HUMES. Have you been engaged in the advertising business?

Mr. PRUDEN. For 11 years.

Maj. HUMES. Were you ever connected with the Von Patten agency?

Mr. PRUDEN. For a little over one year, ending in February, 1918; from about December 1, 1917, to February 1, 1918.

Maj. HUMES. Were you acquainted with Hammerling during that period of time?

Mr. PRUDEN. I have known Hammerling for about 10 years.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state whether or not Mr. Hammerling, while you were connected with the Von Patten agency, made any propositions to your concern with reference to an advertising campaign to be conducted at the close of the war?

Mr. PRUDEN. Do you mean the close of the war between the United States and the central powers or the allies and the central powers?

Maj. HUMES. At the close of the European war.

Mr. PRUDEN. Of the European war; yes.

Maj. HUMES. When was that suggestion made—before or after the United States entered the war?

Mr. PRUDEN. Before the United States entered the war.

Maj. HUMES. Tell us just when it was.

Mr. PRUDEN. It was either in December, 1916, or early in 1917, I have forgotten which, Hammerling phoned for me one day and said that he was going to get me in touch with a big advertising account. I was in the advertising agency and my business was to get accounts for my agents. He asked me if I would come up to his house that evening. I remember it was in the wintertime, because it was snowing very hard. I went up, and he told me there was this big account, and they were going to advertise in the newspapers and magazines and foreign papers throughout the United States, Mexico, South America, and Canada. He said it would be a very large campaign. He did not disclose to me at that meeting who the advertiser was.

Maj. HUMES. Did he tell you the amount of the account?

Mr. PRUDEN. I do not remember whether he told me on that evening or whether it was at a subsequent meeting that we had. I think he did not at that meeting. He asked me if I would give them an idea of how much it would cost to use the principal papers—daily papers—throughout this country and Canada, and these other places, and the farm papers and magazines, basing it on a unit like the agate line, which we in the advertising business use as a unit. I roughly estimated the campaign.

Sometime later, I think it was only a few days later, he came down to the office, and he talked to Mr. Von Patten and myself, and I believe it was at that time that he told us it was to be the Hamburg-American advertising. There was at that time considerable talk about the end of the war. I believe that President Wilson had offered his good offices. There was a good deal of talk about the war ending, and he told me that the Hamburg-American Line were going to run this advertising campaign to rehabilitate their business in the Western Hemisphere.

Maj. HUMES. Did he at that time tell you the amount of the account?

Mr. PRUDEN. He said they would spend about a million and a half dollars a year for five years. I was familiar with the account, as it was prior to the war handled by the Frank Presbrey Co., with whom I was connected, and I knew that they had at that time spent in the neighborhood of $200,000 a year.

Maj. HUMES. That is, the Hamburg-American Line had spent that?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any subsequent interviews with Mr. Hammerling?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes. I do not remember how many, but for a number of weeks he talked to me on the phone several times, and I believe he was in our office a good many times. One more thing I might say about it: He told me that the advertising agent's compensation would be on the commission basis, 10 per cent, which is our stipend, and that the copy would be prepared by the advertiser, so that it would be very profitable to us.

Maj. HUMES. What was the nature of the advertisment?

Mr. PRUDEN. I do not know, because the copy was not shown to me, nor was any copy discussed, except that he said they were going to spend this money to rehabilitate their business in the Western Hemisphere.

Senator WOLCOTT. This was for the business, the American shipping business, of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes; the Hamburg-American Line.

Senator WOLCOTT. And they had been, before the European war, large advertisers in the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. PRUDEN. For many years. They were known as one of the profitable advertising accounts in the country.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever do any work for von Papen yourself, Mr. Pruden?

Mr. PRUDEN. This is Von Patten, an advertising agency in this city. It is not von Papen.

Maj. HUMES. Did you at any time during your discussion with Hammerling discuss the appeal and the purpose and merits of it?

Mr. PRUDEN. Do you mean the appeal to the American people?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; the appeal to the American people.

Mr. PRUDEN. About the time that appeal was published in the papers, Hammerling was in my office one day—that was when I was with the Frank Presbrey Co.—a little before lunch time, and we went out to lunch together at the Vanderbilt, and this thing, which was common talk at the time among advertising people, the general public, came up, and I remember that we got into a discussion about it. I contended that the Germans had been furnishing munitions to both sides for wars that had been carried on, for some time, the Boer War, the Japanese-Russian War, etc., and that if the Germans could get our munitions they would be getting them, and they would be welcome. There was no reason why we should not furnish the allies munitions. One particular thing that I remember was the Vera Cruz affair, in which I stated that the United States had to enter the port of Vera Cruz to keep the Germans from landing a shipload of munitions; and he told me that the appeal was made in the interests of humanity.

Senator NELSON. Of humanity?

Mr. PRUDEN. To stop the destruction of life. That is all I remember of the conversation. It was a general conversation.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Hammerling told us yesterday, and he was very positive in his statement, that he was under the impression all the time that these munitions that the appeal sought to interrupt the shipment of were being shipped to Germany; that these were American munitions being shipped to Germany. Now, in your conversations you had with him, you had discussed that whole thing with him on the theory that the shipments were of munitions as to our allies, is that correct?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that the theory on which you discussed it with him?

Mr. PRUDEN. There is no question about that. There was a general discussion, nothing personal; nothing about our personal feelings, except that he, having placed this advertising, I was naturally interested, and we were just talking the thing over.

Maj. HUMES. From that conversation did you get the impression that he thought that the munitions being shipped from this country were being shipped to Germany?

Mr. PRUDEN. No, no; he did not think so.

Maj. HUMES. He did not think so?

Mr. PRUDEN. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why, of course he did not.

Maj. HUMES. His purpose was to keep the allies from getting the munitions?

Mr. PRUDEN. His purpose was to starve the allies of munitions, so that the war would have to stop.

Maj. HUMES. Did he so state to you?

Mr. PRUDEN. I do not remember that he stated that in that manner, but that was the impression that I got from the conversation.

Maj. HUMES. He understood the situation as to the shipments?

Mr. PRUDEN. Oh, thoroughly.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know from Hammerling, or from any other source, whether he was personally acquainted with Ambassador Bernstorff?

Mr. PRUDEN. Only from the fact that he told me he was.

Maj. HUMES. He told you that he was personally acquainted with him?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did he say anything with reference to his acquaintance with the Emperor of Austria?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes; Mr. Hammerling told me that Emperor Karl, prior to his accession to the throne, had, I think it was, a hunting lodge, or some other place, near his estate in Galicia, and that he knew him very well; that he was a democratic sort of a fellow, very likable, and he thought that he would make a good Emperor for Austria.

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Hammerling tell you how he acquired this estate in Austria?

Mr. PRUDEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What did he say?

Mr. PRUDEN. Well, Hammerling, about 1911, met me one day, and we had a talk—I believe we were at lunch together—and he told me that his uncle had died in Austria. He had often talked to me about his uncle before being a very rich man, and he said he was going to Austria to look after his interests, and that he had inherited a very large estate near Cracow. In fact, he invited me to visit him there.

Maj. HUMES. Did he tell you as to the position occupied in military or social affairs by his uncle?

Mr. PRUDEN. He told me that his uncle was at one time a commander of Przemysl; that he was at one time commander of the forces there.

Maj. HUMES. Did he make any statement to you as to the standing of his father and the position that his father had held in military or civil affairs in Austria?

Mr. PRUDEN. His father, he told me, was a military man, very severe, and that on account of that he never had any home life as a child; he was in the hands of servants all his life.

Maj. HUMES. Did he say anything as to the rank of his father in military circles?

Mr. PRUDEN. I am not absolutely positive, but he was either a colonel or a general.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all, Mr. Pruden.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the next witness?

TESTIMONY OF MR. FRANK ZOTTI.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. State your name and residence.

Mr. ZOTTI. Frank Zotti; 314 West One hundredth Street, New York City.

Maj. HUMES. Are you the publisher of a foreign-language newspaper?

Mr. ZOTTI. I am.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time have you published that newspaper?

Mr. ZOTTI. Twenty-one years.

Senator NELSON. What is the nationality?

Mr. ZOTTI. Croatian.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Louis N. Hammerling?

Mr. ZOTTI. I am, from the day he landed in New York in 1908.

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with the organization of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How was that association organized and for what purpose?

Mr. ZOTTI. Shall I tell the story?

Maj. HUMES. Just answer the question.

Mr. ZOTTI. It was organized for the purpose of getting political advertising mostly, and through the influence of this political advertisement to secure patronage of large corporations, and through that patronage to subdue or at least to control these smaller newspapers that were barely making an existence; and eventually to put Mr. Hammerling in the position of a dictator to the foreign-language press.

Maj. HUMES. Were you present at any meeting at the time of the organization of the association?

Mr. ZOTTI. No; I was not.

Maj. HUMES. Were you present at any meeting shortly after the organization, or within a reasonable time after the organization of the association?

Mr. ZOTTI. There were not any meetings. It was simply a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York for $100,000 stock, and the corporation started business by——

Maj. HUMES. Just a minute, Mr. Zotti. I did not mean necessarily a corporation meeting. I mean, at any gathering of any kind.

Mr. ZOTTI. The first gathering was at the Republican club, when the first banquet was given.

Maj. HUMES. When was that?

Mr. ZOTTI. In 1909.

Maj. HUMES. How many were present?

Mr. ZOTTI. Quite a number of publishers. It was not what I would call a success compared with the other subsequent gatherings, but it was a sort of an initial introduction.

Maj. HUMES. How many publishers were present, approximately?

Mr. ZOTTI. Oh, about 150 or so, I guess.

Maj. HUMES. Who paid the expense of this banquet?

Mr. ZOTTI. Hammerling.

Maj. HUMES. Were there any men of prominence in attendance?

Mr. ZOTTI. Mr. George B. Cortelyou was the man at that banquet, and there were a few members of the cabinet at that time.

Maj. HUMES. Who presided?

Mr. ZOTTI. Mr. Hammerling.

Maj. HUMES. Was that the first time that Mr. Hammerling made a public appearance as the president of this association?

Mr. ZOTTI. That was the first time. He was introduced by Mr. George B. Cortelyou as the "president of the American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers duly elected by this great body of foreign-language publications." Mr. Cortelyou may have been very sincere in the matter. On the other hand, from a political standpoint, it may happen to both parties, where a man of his caliber was a good business proposition, to show to his party that he had a man like Hammerling, president of an organization of 500 or 600 foreign newspapers, and able to deliver the goods at any time—to serve the purpose for his own ends.

Maj. HUMES. Were there any advertising representatives of big corporations present?

Mr. ZOTTI. There were quite a few.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember any of the big concerns that were represented?

Mr. ZOTTI. I believe the Standard Oil Co. was represented, the Telephone Co., the American Tobacco Co., and a few others. The second banquet was really the debut.

Maj. HUMES. When was the second banquet held?

Mr. ZOTTI. The next year, at the Knickerbocker, in 1910. There Mr. Cortelyou was even more pronounced in his eulogy of Louis N. Hammerling. The banquet was a real success. The presents advertised before the banquet, to be distributed to the guests, were to cost $15 or $20. Each man that came to the banquet would get a present of a match box of gold, like this [indicating], and a cigar cutter and knife, and besides that his dinner, and we were told that the entire cabinet of the United States, including the good soul, Mr. Taft, would be there, and that from that time on no publisher of a foreign-language newspaper need go out to borrow any money from the banks to exist, because it would come from all sources.

Senator WOLCOTT. I should rather expect that you had a large and successful banquet, after that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZOTTI. Very successful. I remember distinctly that Senator Penrose eulogized Mr. Hammerling, and my friends Congressmen Goldfogle and Bennet; and, the fact was, it was understood at that time, or at least I understood it, that all these big corporations would open their coffers, and that Mr. Hammerling's patronage would amount to millions of dollars.

We have to take into consideration one fact, though, which is very important, and that is, that this man was put in a prominent position, no doubt, at the time.

Oh, I forgot to say that Mr. Wickersham was also there.

At that time it was the time when the American Tobacco Co. was in the courts for dissolution, and the Standard Oil Co. was in court for dissolution, and when the United States Steel Corporation was in the court for dissolution. At that time I brought the foreign steamship lines into the courts in New York under the Sherman antitrust law, as I am a former steamship man, and a newspaper man by circumstance and not by choice, and naturally, from the standpoint of the corporations, I suppose, these publicity agents representing all the corporations, it was the easiest matter in the world to present the case; to say, "Here is Hammerling sitting in the middle, with the Cabinet of the United States alongside him, and the Attorney General eulogizing him. The best thing we can do is to open our purses and let some of that long green flow, and with his influence he can turn things around and do things; he represents such a great body of men, these publishers."

And, then, the steamship lines were out always with an eye to business. The Dillingham bill was pending and other legislation pertaining to their status, as they have been in the happiest position of any corporations, because every time they were brought to court they would say, "We are foreigners," and naturally our courts here had no jurisdiction over them; so that naturally Mr. Ham-merling was placed in a position inviolable, and had he been a man of intelligence, a man of honesty and fair play, he could have made ten times as much money as he did. But a man of the walking-delegate stamp, that sells out his abilities to the highest bidder, endowed with power! I came to the conclusion right there and then that to condone the fact would be to condone a cancer which was growing on the body of Uncle Sam, and I started to fight him, silently and quietly, because I had troubles of my own, big troubles, on account of my former steamship business. I was the owner of an American steamship line in which I met my Waterloo in 1908, and I had a good many things to contend with until 1914, when this man came back from Europe.

Senator NELSON. You mean Hammerling?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes; Hammerling came back from Europe after this article appeared, practically against Austria, in his paper, and when his man Momand, and Caldwell and Gabriel, came to my office, thinking I was pro-Austrian or pro-German. Anyway, they came in the office and apologized terribly for having written that article. I thought to myself, "There is something here." Then, a little later than that, in cross-examining my managing editor, I found immediately that Mr. Hammerling was not satisfied. He found out this method to bring a paper the publisher of which was antagonistic to him, by making trouble in his home, trying to bribe his managing editor, or in any way coerce him to play and dance according to his music; so that I believe it was the early part of April——

Maj. HUMES. Of what year?

Mr. ZOTTI. Of 1915, that I sent out an S. O. S. call among the publishers and told them that I thought that it was up to their dignity among the publishers in New York of foreign-language papers like the Progreso and the Italian dailies—and they all knew me for a number of years—that it was about time to form a sort of association and put this man where he belonged as an advertiser, because he is using and misusing the name of the foreign-language press, and I can not see anything for it, although we are all getting a lot of business with them; that his movement is a power, and power in an ignorant man's hands and a man of his caliber is a dangerous weapon, and he is becoming so autocratic that he is already dictating the policies of the newspapers, and some day he will be so impregnable that any publisher who will assume to go against him will be ruined.

The European war started. With all due respect, some of the publishers are very good, intelligent men, but some are not, and we could not get them together. He always had a few publishers, as I would call it, on the payroll to do his dirty work—he has got them even to-day—and those publishers would naturally be sent out to sow the seed of discord among the other publishers, so that nothing could be gotten together. Besides, the war started, as I say, and one paper is an Italian paper and another paper is a Croatian paper, and a third paper is Serbian, and so on; they could not get them together. So I waited.

When the "Appeal to the people" advertisement came, Mr. Momand came to my office personally and said, "Now, Mr. Zotti, you better sign this." I said, "I told you I have it from my managing editor, who happens to be very close to Dumba, and the former ambassador of Austria-Hungary, and von Nuber, the former consul general and director of the Transatlantic Trust Co., of New York;" I said, "I have a tip that Mr. Hammerling got a lot of money from Bernstorff, and I do not intend to sign that appeal." "Well," he says, "If you do not sign the appeal you will be sorry." I am a little bit excitable at times, and I threw Momand out of the door, as my clerks can testify. Since that time the boy didn't have much use for me. However, the appeal was published.

Senator NELSON. Was it published in your paper?

Mr. ZOTTI. No, sir; I did not publish it. I saw Mr. Sites, of the World, and spoke to him about it after it was published, and took cognizance of it, and they resented it because the World, from that time on, started to open up on him whenever they had a chance.

I made the acquaintance of Gabriel and Dattner in a business way. The boys were more amenable to reason later on, and I had a little chat with both of them at times in my office, telling them where this thing would lead, and I really confessed to them that I am going to fight this man to the bitter end; that I knew exactly what I was up against, but that I was not afraid. In fact, I told them that on the day when might should be right I want to die.

I went on and fought this man as best I could. I called up a publisher's meeting again, of which Mr. Gabriel spoke before, in my office, and really I forgot that Gabriel and Dattner were there. It happened to be a large meeting.

The publishers came in while they were in my office, and I let them stay. They made a clean breast of the inner workings of the association.

I then turned around to the publishers and told them, "Now, you hear with your own ears from two men who are close to Hammerling."

Senator STERLING. Who were those two men you referred to; Gabriel and Dattner?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes; Gabriel and Dattner. He narrated the story before, but he did not say that it was done in my office.

I then knew, and was very careful to invite one or two of these tools, or at least one of those men that are getting most advertisement from Mr. Hammerling and that are humble servants of him. They got a little bit sick before the meeting was through, and they went out. I knew where they went. They went to tell Hammerling what happened there. Then when the meeting was dissolved, I warned Gabriel and Dattner. I said, "Now, when you get back to your boss he will ask you to sign some papers. He will know you spoke in front of 10 men, and if you tell an untruth I will act against you, too. I advise you to stand by what you said. You are both young. This country is big enough. That man is a crook; and, worse than that, he is a coward." "Now," I said, "do not sign any papers." They went back the same night, and sure enough he had the papers ready for them to sign.

Senator NELSON. To sign?

Mr. ZOTTI. They did not sign. After that an article appeared in the World, inspired by me.

Maj. HUMES. Now hold on, Mr. Zotti, I suggest we do not get all of those clippings in.

Mr. ZOTTI. All right.

Maj. HUMES. And get the newspaper controversy going. It is the fact of the newspaper association and its operations that the committee is concerned with, I assume.

Mr. ZOTTI. All right.

Maj. HUMES. What do you know, if anything, as to the manipulation of the compensations for different papers?

Mr. ZOTTI. In what way?

Maj. HUMES. In other words, was the business conducted as a straight commission business or was it conducted without regard to legitimate commissions?

Mr. ZOTTI. Absolutely not. It was not conducted as a legitimate business. It was, make as much as you can from the advertisers and pay as little as you can to the publisher, except to a few publishers who would stand by the rates, where he could not butt in. For instance, to-day I am receiving advertisements from the Standard Oil Co. and from the Edison Co. through Hammerling. He is bound to give it to me. He attempted to take it away but they said, "We want that paper because the paper has a circulation." Also, the Consolidated Gas Co. But he still handles the advertisements. He is compelled to give it to me by the corporations themselves, upon the merits of the paper.

Maj. HUMES. Now, tell me what you know about any attempt on the part of Mr. Hammerling to control the editorial policies of the foreign-language newspapers.

Mr. ZOTTI. As I have explained, papers that were not on a stable basis and that needed his help, as I would say, and were afraid to fight him personally, were naturally controlled through him, by always this same threat, "We will withdraw all the patronage"; like, for instance, in the personal-liberty matter. I never spoke to him about it, and never wanted it, although I knew he was getting paid so much per line. I know I saved other publishers, who did not publish that. But then there were others, because the easiest way was the best way, and they did not want to get into trouble with this man who was giving them $10,000, $20,000, and $30,000 a year's advertising; and they took the advertisements and published them.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know what the attitude of the publishers of the foreign-language newspapers is with reference to Mr. Hammerling? Are they afraid of him, and is the domination a domination of fear, or is it because of the remuneration received from him, exclusively?

Mr. ZOTTI. What we would call those papers which are absolutely independent—and there are some in New York, with good circulations, and in Chicago and other great centers—they are different. They do not care. You take the Progreso, and the Italo-Americano, and the big Italian dailies, they do not care. Mr. Barsotti told me himself that Hammerling was trying to buy his paper for German purposes and had offered him a million dollars.

Senator OVERMAN. How much?

Mr. ZOTTI. A million dollars.

Senator NELSON. For German purposes?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. What time was this?

Mr. ZOTTI. When the United States went to war.

They are indifferent. It was myself who called the attention of a French paper to the fact that they were carrying on their label "Member of American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers," and make them take it off.

Other papers whose publishers, as I said, would rather travel the easiest way and get the money, took the money and kept quiet. The little papers in the little towns, naturally he has been manipulating them any old way he wanted to. For instance, this fellow Jaudon, who was auditor of the Hammerling institution, explained to me—he is now in the Marine Corps, United States Navy—that the Standard Oil Co. advertisement would go to several of these foreign papers outside, little papers that had 1,000 circulation throughout the State, and as soon as they would get the 30-inch advertisement for the second insertion they would receive a letter from Hammerling stating that their paper has no circulation and that the company wants to withdraw that, but that he will use his influence so that the company would keep that advertisement, but that he can not pay them a rate. He would pay him a little less rate, if he gets the advertisement again, but he would advise the publisher to keep the "ad" for the time being and show his good will. In this way a good many of those poor fellows kept the "ad" for 52 weeks and got paid for 2 weeks. Mr. Hammerling collected the balance of 50 weeks from the Standard Oil Co. and pocketed it.

There were other instances of trimming of newspapers for which Jaudon was paid; they skinned them out of so many insertions a week. He was getting extra presents to do that. In fact, he opened my eyes when I gave the testimony in New York, when Henry Green, another advertising man and a so-called aspirant for Hammerling's shoes, brought Hammerling before the United States Court in New York under the Sherman trust law and I gave the testimony before Assistant United States Attorney Glasier for two hours. Then that thing was crushed and nothing heard about it, until the time came where I had to openly attack this man in my paper, and I started by showing him up. Mr. Foster, ex-chief of the Foreign Language Division of the Committee on Public Information, lost his job, he claims, through some reasons here, and he came to New York and gave me the statement that Mr. Hammerling was trying to get on the Hoover board, and how as soon as he got an inkling he would be there, he tried to blackmail the World Tip-Top Bread people in New York. I took his story, made him sign the affidavit, and I published it. Just to see the effect, I waited a little while to see what action Hammerling would take, and he has not taken any action; so that I came back, and I found a man by the name of Clarence E. Foote who liquidated the Savoy Trust Co., a bank in New York composed mostly of Italians, and who told me how Hammerling made the Savoy Trust Co.—Hammerling became a director in the Savoy Trust Co. through the machinations of Mr. Cummins, who was sentenced to seven years in the State's prison at Sing Sing, and Mr. Reichman, who was also sentenced, and at that time the attorney of Mr. Hammerling, Mr. Liston Lewis, was a director of the Carnegie Trust Co., and he told me how he got in there in the Savoy Trust Co. as a director. He made the Savoy loan $50,000 to the Carnegie Trust Co. and he gets Mr. Hyde, the chamberlain of New York City, into trouble.

He then promised to the directors of the Savoy Trust Co., when they made a loan of $50,000, that he would make good in case they lost it. When the Broadway Trust took the assets of the Savoy Trust Co. they asked him for the $50,000. As he had not put it in writing, they settled the matter for $5,000 through a firm of attorneys in New York, which is a matter of record. I published that.

Going on, Mr. Gabriel and Mr. Dattner at this time were out, and little by little I got this Bernstorff stuff, how Bernstorff was there, and this, that, and the other thing. I put up 27 questions, also in English, in my paper for Mr. Hammerling to answer. After these 27 questions were set up I remember, on the 29th day of March, 1918, Mr. Carl Byoir, assistant chairman of the committee on public information, came to New York, at the Vanderbilt Hotel, and begged me to come up and see him. I came up to see Mr. Byoir, who was not informed, I suppose, as to who he was going to see, because he went into a rage at once and threatened me that I must stop these attacks against Hammerling because he represented the Government of the United States. I asked him which government, because I thought that the Congress——

Maj. HUMES. You mean, now, that you represented the Government, or Byoir?

Mr. ZOTTI. That Byoir represented the Government of the United States, and he was speaking in the name of the Government, and that he had two affidavits against me whereby I was going to blackmail Hammerling for $10,000. I gave him the names of the two men that made the affidavits, and I did not care about that, but I wanted to know his reasons for threatening me.

Senator NELSON. Did Byoir threaten you?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes. I asked him if George Creel knew about it, because I said I knew Creel very well. He said, "Well, Mr. Zotti, I summoned you for just grounds. You leave this man alone, because you are going to get into trouble. He is doing great service for the United States." I said, "I am well acquainted with what he is doing. For that matter, you can get a convict from Atlanta, Ga., and put the stamp of Uncle Sam on his back, and he can do some service." I said, "I am not going to stop, and I am not going to take your advice, and I tell you to mind your own business. You have plenty to do if you mind your own business."

The next day I was in a friend's office when I got a telephone call. My office told me the brother of Mr. Byoir, he called up and told me that I better reconsider the matter. I told him I had reconsidered the matter, and I told him I would write a letter to Hammerling, and if he ever can digest that letter that I am going to write him he is a good one. So that on April 3, under my own signature, I wrote a letter to Mr. Hammerling, in which I told him that he was a perjurer, a thief, a crook, and several other things, which I have a copy of here if the committee wants it.

Maj. HUMES. Now, the question of the personal altercation between you and Hammerling does not interest the committee.

Mr. ZOTTI. I am coming to the question of the grand jury now, if you will permit me.

Maj. HUMES. All I care for is the facts.

Mr. ZOTTI. I am getting to the facts. He went before the grand jury to have me indicted.

Maj. HUMES. Then they did not indict you?

Mr. ZOTTI. Yes, sir; and then they started, and stopped.

Senator OVERMAN. What was this Government officer doing there?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Byoir was an assistant to Mr. Creel, was he not?

Senator OVERMAN. An assistant where?

Maj. HUMES. An assistant to Creel.

Senator OVERMAN. And he came over and——

Mr. ZOTTI. Intimidated me.

Senator OVERMAN (continuing). He tried to cause you to stop your attacks on Hammerling?

Mr. ZOTTI. He threatened me.

Maj. HUMES. What did he threaten you with?

Mr. ZOTTI. He threatened me with serious consequences, some of which I got a taste of on the 15th of August, in the Mr. de Woody escapade, as I call it, and I came pretty near being put out of business.

Maj. HUMES. You mean the chief of the Bureau of Investigations of the Department of Justice?

Mr. ZOTTI. The chief of the Bureau of Investigations of the Department of Justice.

Senator NELSON. Did he call on you?

Mr. ZOTTI. The papers reported that he raided my office.

Senator NELSON. Raided your office?

Mr. ZOTTI. Searching for papers incriminating me.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he take any papers?

Mr. ZOTTI. Just my telephone book with the names of the people I used to telephone. That is all he took, so far as I know.

Senator OVERMAN. What was Creel's interest in silencing you?

Mr. ZOTTI. Mr. Creel was not against me, so far as I know. I think it is personal matter between Byoir and Hammerling.

Senator OVERMAN. Are Mr. Byoir and Hammerling good friends?

Mr. ZOTTI. Very good friends.

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Byoir have anything to do with this last contract that was awarded to Mr. Hammerling, so far as you know, from the Committee on Public Information?

Mr. ZOTTI. I do not know. I know that the contract was given first to an Italian advertising agent whose brother is a big Italian writer in New York and who has been attacking Hammerling for a good many years. Mr. Augustino d'Brase and his brother Mario d'Brase have an advertising agency. They received the advertising from the Committee on Public Information in New York for about $2,021 to put the advertisements about Fairfax in the Italian papers in New York. No sooner had he started to place the advertisement than he received a call to come to the office and was told that another advertising agent had given much lower rates, and that the contract was taken away from him and given to this other one. He asked who the other one was, and he was told it was Mr. Hammerling, and he should go to Mr. Hammerling for his check. Now, as soon as Mr. Hammerling received this advertising from the Committee on Public Information, which he calls "the Government," he immediately sends a letter to all the publishers of the United States asking them to sign a certain paper to be sent to President Wilson for Thanksgiving, and therefore here I am; I am against the Government. And, actually, this thing went into the papers and on the 29th, I suppose, an able attorney, Mr. Becker, in New York, who had cross-examined this man, he gives his story of it, about these securities—of his examination. But previous to Mr. Becker it was Mr. Norman White, attached to the War Department, 302 Broadway, who put Mr. Hammerling on the stand and got the information from him. But previous to Mr. White, I want the honorable body of the Senate to know, I was instrumental in informing the Department of Justice of all these occurrences and that a man by the name of Perkins, sent from the department, came to my office and examined Mr. Gabriel and examined Mr. Dattner and got all these data, and then, I suppose, pigeon-holed them.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all, Mr. Zotti, unless there is something else the committee wants.

Senator OVERMAN. That is all.

Mr. ZOTTI. Thank you.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Konta, we will hear you now.

Mr. SAXE. I understand that Mr. Konta is to be permitted to make his statement to the commitee.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Mr. Konta wrote several letters to me saying he desired to make his statement to the committee. Since that time he has been subpœnaed as a witness. Now I propose that he go on and make his statement voluntarily.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALEXANDER KONTA.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Mr. KONTA. In the first place, I desire to express to this Committee my appreciation of your courtesy in granting to me permission to appear before you and testify in my own behalf, and also for your courtesy, when I was confined to my house by influenza, in adjourning the date of the hearing until I should be well enough to attend.

The reason for my pressing request to appear personally before you is the publication, on September 19, 1918, by the Alien Property Custodian, in connection with certain data in respect to the purchase of "The Washington Times," with funds raised by certain brewers, of a letter written by me to Bernard Dernburg, dated March 31, 1915, two years before the United States entered the war.

These two events had no connection with each other, and the publication of the two together, followed by various news articles, has done me great injustice and injury. Whatever the motives of the Alien Property Custodian, my loyalty to the United States has been baselessly impugned.

I was born on May 11, 1862, at Budapest, Hungary. I came to the United States in 1889. I became an American citizen on July 14, 1894.

Since I became an American citizen, I have been a loyal American, first, last and all the time. I have always continued an active interest in Hungary and Hungarian affairs; but I have never permitted my interest in Hungary to interfere in the slightest degree with my loyalty to the United States.

During the early days of the war, when the United States was not involved, my sympathies were with Hungary. If they were against any one, they were against Russia, Hungary's historic oppressor. I never was a German or Austrian sympathizer and I never participated in any German or Austrian propaganda.

For many years, I have been in close sympathy with the Hungarian Independent party headed by Count Michael Karolyi. He was my guest in New York in 1914, immediately before the outbreak of the war, and his mission in this country was in the interest of Hungary's freedom from Austrian and German domination.

Subsequent to the outbreak of the war I wrote a number of articles and letters and they were published in such newspapers as The Tribune, The Sun, The World, The Post and The Brooklyn Eagle. I made occasional speeches. I challenge anyone to find in my published writings or speeches anything disloyal to the United States or anything which can be honestly construed as German or Austrian propaganda.

The national government has repeatedly recognized my interest in Hungarian affairs. For instance, I presided on January 30, 1916, at a mass meeting of the Hungarians of New York City at the Madison Square Garden Theatre. We passed the following resolution addressed to the President and to the Members of Congress:

> We, the American citizenry of Hungarian origin pledge unwavering loyalty and protest against the constant systematic and increasing campaign of vilification, and are resolved that proper steps be taken to guard the rights of American citizens of Hungarian birth, and to devise means of dissipating the present groundless and unjust attitude of suspicion and antagonism, and to prevent its recurrence.

Following this meeting, a delegation of Hungarian-Americans, of which I was Chairman, proceeded to Washington to present this resolution to the President. In reply, the President said:

> You have thanked me for receiving you. I do not deserve any thanks. * * * I never myself have doubted for a moment the feeling that gentlemen such as yourselves have towards America. I recognize you just as much Americans as anybody.

I found time also to write frequently on the topic of emigration, in which, for many years, I have been interested. I then feared, and still fear, that when the war had ended, foreign governments would do their utmost to encourage the repatriation of naturalized Americans. In several letters to the press I pleaded for some new regulations to overcome a danger to the industrial America of the future. I also pleaded for a better education of the immigrant so that he might become a better American. And, in several public speeches, I impressed upon American-Hungarians the honorable duty of standing by their oaths of allegiance to this country.

On December 7, 1917, the United States declared war upon Austria-Hungary. Shortly prior to this date, I prepared a memorandum to be delivered to the President, wherein I set forth what I conceived to be urgent reasons why the United States should declare war on Austria-Hungary. The arguments in favor of the declaration seemed to me to far outweigh the arguments against such declaration. As an American citizen who knew Austro-Hungarian conditions, I felt it my duty to place my reasons for the declaration before influential quarters. Even previously to this, I had told the President that, when the Hungarians of this country (and by this I referred particularly to the unnaturalized Hungarians engaged in industrial pursuits) were wanted by the United States in support of American aims in the war, he would know where to find them. I meant by this that he would find many Hungarians eager to do their bit for the United States. In stating this so confidently to the President, I spoke as one who had always realized how important it was that the Hungarian communities of the United States should understand the American situation and how equally important it was that, in any moment of emergency, the United States should understand the position of the Hungarians.

Our declaration of war against Austria-Hungary came about; and for reasons which, among others, I had previously outlined in my memorandum.

At or about this time, it became evident that the government was desirous of allaying any possibility of misunderstanding amongst the Hungarians in this country as to its friendly attitude towards Hungarians. The President's desire to make this clear was shown in his pronouncement to the effect that the Austrians and Hungarians in America were to be treated in a friendly manner, so long as they did not engage in any activities against the government. I was desirous of strengthening this good feeling. I, therefore, suggested to Washington that it would be advisable to establish a League of Hungarians, whether naturalized or not, to afford all of Hungarian origin the opportunity of expressing their feelings of gratitude to the President for his action toward them and also to proclaim their loyal feelings towards the United States.

My proposal reached Washington at a time when Washington itself was desirous of seeing some such organization created. Washington accepted the suggestion, directed the establishment of the American-Hungarian Loyalty League under the auspices of the Committee on Public Information, gave the organization its name, and placed me at its head, as Chairman, to begin the work.

The formation of the League was discussed in the latter days of December, 1917. The preliminary work of organization began early in January, 1918. It was decided to give the League its start in the West. And at Cleveland, Ohio, on January 27, 1918, a mass meeting in connection with the convention of the Hungarian-American Federation was held, at which I was present. In a speech delivered on that occasion I outlined the object of the League. I told the audience that the President had asked for a line-up, and that we Hungarians had met in response to his demand. I also told them that there was only one course for Hungarians to pursue,—that of complete, unswerving loyalty to the United States. "It is our one and only duty," I said, "We must get behind Uncle Sam. We must help him to win the war. There are thousands of Hungarians here in the West who have not yet awakened to the truth, who cannot see what America is fighting for. Let us tell them. If they have been misled, let us lead them right. The power and effectiveness of the loyalty which we, as Hungarian citizens, proclaim to this nation, depends on our numbers and our unanimity. We must add to our numbers those who are not yet convinced of the truth. We must carry that truth into every Hungarian center of the country. That's what the line-up means. That's the kind of patriotism which will prove a potent force in the winning of this war."

Such in brief was the appeal to all American-Hungarians. It was an appeal which, in the same or similar language has since been made by myself before many other audiences in many parts of the East and West.

At that meeting, we passed a resolution. I ask leave to file this resolution with the Committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want to read or just insert it in the record?

Mr. KONTA. I ask leave to insert it.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. KONTA. I ask leave to insert it here.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. KONTA (reading):

MAGYAR RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED JANUARY 27, 1918, BY THE CONVENTION OF THE HUNGARIAN-AMERICAN FEDERATION ASSEMBLED IN CLEVELAND, OHIO.

We, delegated to the National Convention of the Hungarian-American Federation, assembled in Cleveland, Ohio, this twenty-seventh day of January, 1918, and representing Americans of Hungarian Blood throughout the United States, having been called for the purpose of expressing our heart-felt appreciation of the proclamation of the President of the United States regarding the status of the Hungarians in American, do hereby Resolve:

First: That we express our sincere and deepest gratitude to the President for his recognition of the most honorable purposes of Hungarian Residents in the United States by not regarding them as "Alien Enemies." We assure the President that his confidence was not misplaced and that the Hungarians in America will continue to give evidence of their genuine attachment and devotion to this country.

Second: That we reaffirm and reiterate our unflinching loyalty to our country, the United States of America, pointing with pride to the fact that Americans of Hungarian blood have at all times fulfilled their duties and obligations as American citizens evidenced by the heroic part which they have taken in our civil war. We appreciate the freedom and equality that the Constitution of this great Republic accords us, and are ever ready to uphold the great ideals of our President, aiming to make the world safe for democracy; and

Third: That we recognize the importance of Americanizing the people coming to the shores of the United States. Efforts in this direction have been pursued by and were part of the aims of all the organizations and institutions of Hungarians in this country at all times, and we hereby pledge ourselves to continue these efforts with undiminishing vigor; and

Fourth: That we have always stood for a free, independent, and democratic Hungary, on the principles proclaimed by Louis Kossuth. We reaffirm this stand when, just prior to the war, we offered and started to give our assistance to the great movement for the reconstruction of New Hungary on the principles of true democracy; and we rejoice at the fact that the aims of America, as expressed by the President, make the realization of this endeavor an absolute certainty; and

Fifth: That we are pleased to be apprised of the formation of the American Hungarian Loyalty League for the duration of the war; we indorse its aims and purposes; and we not only pledge our own co-operation but also urge upon all Hungarians, citizens and no citizens, to join it, and Sixth: That we further resolve that copies of this resolution be properly presented to the President and members of his Cabinet; and to both Houses of Congress.

Our next meeting was held at Lorain, Ohio. I attended it. I also attended large meetings on March 10, at Bridgeport, Conn.; on March 17, at Chicago; on March 24, at Trenton; on April 7, at Brooklyn; on April 28, at New Brunswick, N. J.; on May 5, at Youngstown, Ohio; on May 12, at Bridgeport; on June 23, at Johnstown, Pa.; on June 30, at Detroit; on July 14, at Perth Amboy; and on August 24, at McKeesport; and I also attended a number of small meetings. At each meeting a similar resolution was passed and wired to the President, who acknowledged it in most instances. For example, I beg leave to read the resolutions of the Verhovay Aid Association, which are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE VERHOVAY AID ASSOCIATION AT HAZLETON, PA., ON APRIL 15, 1918.

The Verhovay Aid Association, representing 27,000 Hungarian-born citizens and residents of the United States, assembled at Hazleton, Pa., this day, desire to express their loyalty; their united appreciation of the attitude of the Government towards them since war was declared upon Austria-Hungary; their unreserved condemnation of, and antagonism to, the German Emperor, German militarists, and all those German peoples who support the German Autocracy in its objects in the present war; their perfect confidence, not only in the righteousness of America's cause in the war, but also in the ultimate victory of American principle over the moral turpitude of its enemies and the triumph of America in the great cause of Freedom and Democracy; and their solemn promise, throughout the war, unswervingly to support the United States of America in its forward fight to that splendid victory.

The Verhovay Aid Society, realizing that the triumph of the United States in this war will more quickly secure that Independence of Hungary of which all Hungarians for centuries have dreamed, desire also to record their contempt for the Hapsburg rulers of Austria-Hungary who, in the past, have failed to keep their sworn oaths to the Hungarian people, and who, at the present time, are giving proof to the world of their traditional mendacity and their hereditary lack of the sense of honor. The members of the Verhovay Society, while expressing their full feeling of loyalty to the United States, would implore the President to aid the Magyar people to break away from the unhappy rule of the Hapsburgs, and to bring about the realization of an independent Hungary which will place the Hungarian peoples among the progressive leaders of the world's democracies.

The members of the Verhovay Association, in transmitting this sentiment to the President, desire to express their approval of the American Hungarian Loyalty League which, in its present loyal labors amongst the Hungarians of the United States, recognizes that whatever is done to bring about an American victory in this war will also bring about the full independence of the Hungarian peoples.

So, then, the League started on its work of education. It was beset, from the beginning, with obstacles of an internal nature and by external opposition. Regarding the internal difficulties which had to be faced, these were the result of suspicions of the objects of the League amongst the Hungarians themselves. There is no race which has been misled so often by self-serving leaders as the Hungarian race, and any new plan proposed for their adherence, invites suspicious questioning. As for the external obstacles, these were mostly traceable to the activities of men who were not loyal to the country and who wished nothing to be done that would wean the American-Hungarian from his devotion to his mother-land. As may be seen from reports which, as Chairman, I made to the Committee on Public Information, these oppositions are more specifically dealt with. All that I can say here is that from the very beginning the League had to fight its way. It was not enough that the United States should have shown to the Hungarians such a friendly feeling. That alone was not sufficient inducement to the Hungarians to make them join the League. They had to be persuaded that the joining of the League was a duty to the United States which they were called upon to perform as recipients of the friendly hospitality and the protection of this country.

I do not need to detail the history of the League during its development under my direction. It is enough to say that a membership, which grew very slowly during the first few months of unremitting efforts in propaganda, which was ably supported by the better class Hungarian newspapers, finally, in September, 1918, reached the number of 25,000. During the summer months, the membership grew rapidly. This was owing to the fact that the suspicions already mentioned as to the objects of the League had been allayed, and the work of its not disinterested opponents had, to a large extent, failed, or that the nature of the antagonism had been discovered. Never before in the history of the Hungarian communities of the United States has a result such as this been attained. It has astonished nearly every Hungarian of standing or of experience in organization work in this country. But I take no particular credit to myself for having achieved this result. The result was always to be expected when the fundamental object of the League had become known to the people and the force of the arguments in its favor had been realized. The League would certainly have failed if the object had not been such a great one and the work of American propaganda had not been so loyally and ceaselessly carried on.

It was deemed by those who took part in the formation of the League that membership should be obtainable on payment of $1 for permanent membership. It was understood that the funds acquired from these membership fees should be devoted so far as possible to publishing American propaganda in the Hungarian press. As the membership increased this fund increased, and in accordance with instructions carefully carried out the fund was disbursed as arranged. In order that no question should ever arise regarding the disposition of these monies, I insisted that no payment should be made except by check drawn upon a special account and signed by both the Chairman and the Treasurer of the League. Monthly reports of incoming amounts and expenditures have been submitted, in the form of sworn affidavits, to Washington. There is still a balance of these monies on deposit. Not a single penny of these funds has been drawn upon by Washington for any expenses connected with the League. The Committee on Public Information has paid all salaries, all traveling expenses and all petty cash expenditures, except that from time to time they have given me for petty cash expenditures small sums to the amount of $2040.37. All items of expenditure by myself from these advances have been accounted for, in a special statement by my business manager.

I have interpolated this statement regarding the cash used by me in order to make a positive denial of the statement published in The New York Tribune and elsewhere that we have squandered between $200,000 and $300,000 of the Government's money and have spent $80,000 in publicity for the League.

The Chairman of the Committee on Public Information has certified that the total cost of the American-Hungarian League to the Government is $14,000. Of this money I personally handled only $2,040.27. In addition to that, we have paid our own publicity expenses out of the $25,000 of membership subscriptions; and I have also paid many incidental expenses out of my own pocket.

I think, myself, that the exaggerated stories about the League's funds and our large expenditures constitute one of the reasons for the misinformation which has been circulated about me personally.

The Hungarians throughout the country, of course, did not know the truth, and had no means of getting at the truth. It has frequently been stated in these circles that I have been making huge sums out of my Chairmanship of the League. The sums have varied anywhere from a few thousand dollars to thirty thousand dollars. The fact of the matter is that I was getting $1 per year from the government for my work, and that in the work of organization I have spent my own money in various ways towards its support. In this connection, I say nothing of the endless hours,—worth to me a great deal of money,—which I have devoted to building up the organization.

I want to make a special point here of the fact that the total expenditures of the organization of the League have been amazingly small. This statement will probably be borne out by all who have had experience with other organizations connected with the government. One reason for this small expenditure is that the Hungarians themselves have footed many of the bills for the public meetings which have been held in various parts of the country. Another reason is that many prominent Hungarian-Americans have willingly proffered their services on a dollar per annum basis.

I have recently seen it stated that the American-Hungarian Loyalty League has partaken of a pro-German character. I beg to state, in the most vigorous terms, that this suggestion is wholly unfounded. The American-Hungarian Loyalty League was established in the interest of the United States government. Its sole aim was to keep the Hungarians of this country in line with America's course in the war. It has pursued an American policy of education in the interests of the United States. It has brought together, into a powerful and vocal consolidation, all Hungarian sentiment in the cause of truth and justice.

In this connection, I also want to say that, if the League has amplified, in any respect, the principles on which it was founded, it has been to suggest to the Hungarians of this country that they might eventually partake in the victory of American arms over America's enemies. I need not point out that the dream of all Hungarians for a century has been the establishment of an independent Hungary. The League, having this in mind, has pointed out that the great opportunity to Hungarians of realizing their dream was for them to place themselves determinedly behind the United States; for it would only be through the leadership of the United States that an independent Hungary could be rendered possible. (See page 18.)

I have also seen it stated that, in the course of an address which I made in December, 1915, I defended the Lusitania outrage upon the ground that the Lusitania was carrying munitions. This statement is false. Among the New York newspapers which gave credence to it was The Tribune. Yet, I find among my clippings, a clipping from The Tribune of December 8, 1915, which reported this very speech. This Tribune article is entitled "Hungarian Editor Denounces Plots. Conspiracies to Wreck Munitions Plants in United States Called Treason." In the course of this article, The Tribune quoted me as follows:

Deploring the recent attempts to destroy munitions plants by Teutonic agents and sympathizers. Alexander Konta, the Hungarian editor, pointed out the rights and duties of naturalized Hungarians in a speech in the Yorkville branch of the Public Library last night. * * *

The sinking of the Lusitania was characterized by Mr. Konta as worse than atrocity, it was a blunder committed with total lack of understanding of the American spirit, and lost the cause of the Central Powers, irretrievably, in this country.

Before reviewing, as rapidly as possible, a series of incidents in 1918 affecting me personally, I want to say to the Committee that I have carefully preserved all my letters and papers, and that I have freely offered them for inspection to various departments of government.

As early as February, 1915, an individual made an attack on me in the New York press and, while my lawyers advised me that the matter was of no consequence, I wrote at once to Senator Stone and Representative Flood offering to place all my records at their disposal.

In the early part of 1918, I learned that the Department of Justice, acting in connection with the Office of Military Intelligence in New York City, was conducting an investigation regarding my activities.

In response to a request from Lieut. W. L. Campbell of the Office of Military Intelligence, I went to that office in company with Mr. A. S. Brown, who has been my confidential manager for many years. At the interview which followed I stated to Lieut. Campbell that all my records, files, bank books, and business books, were at the disposal of his office and I invited him or his representative to come to my office or residence, without any previous notice, at any time, to inspect any documents they wished. In so doing I told them that I waived all my rights as a citizen.

Lieut. Campbell interrogated me fully in respect to Hans Tauscher and certain other individuals, and as to my personal and business relations with them. I sent him my scrap books covering the period from December, 1911, to date, and a considerable amount of correspondence, which he retained for some time for examination. Eventually, on March 14, 1918, Lieut. Campbell sent me a letter reading as follows:

MY DEAR MR. KONTA: I am returning, with thanks, your three scrap books, and letters, which you were kind enough to let us have.

Although we are not at liberty to give out any of our reports to Washington, I can assure you personally that my investigation showed a clean slate.

From time to time, points arise upon which I would be very glad if you could get us some data; also, if anything of interest similar to the matter of Hungarian churches, comes to your attention, would be obliged if you would pass it along to us.

Again thanking you for your co-operation and your kindness in assisting us in our investigation as much as possible, I remain

Very truly yours,

(signed) W. L. CAMPBELL,
1st Lieut. Sig. R. C., A. S.

From that time on my relations with the Office of Military Intelligence were very friendly and co-operative. I aided them in every way.

At another period, I was requested to appear before Deputy Attorney General Becker. I did so. I made a similar offer of all my records and gave him all the information which he requested.

On June 26, 1918, I received a letter from Major Nicholas Biddle of the Office of Military Intelligence, per Lieut. Campbell, saying that it had come to the attention of their office that in the latter part of March, 1915, I had prepared a confidential memorandum for Dr. Dernburg on the newspaper situation in New York, and saying that Major Biddle would be very much obliged if I would let him have a copy of the memorandum if I still had it. The letter assured me that it would be treated in the usual confidential manner of that office.

I called up Major Biddle immediately on the telephone and told him that I had a copy of such a letter and would bring it up myself.

I proceeded immediately to Major Biddle's office and was received by him in the presence of Captain Tiffany. I handed him my copy of the letter and explained to him the circumstances under which it was written.

In the latter part of March, 1915, I attended, by invitation, a dinner at the German Club in New York City. I was not a member of that Club and never have been a member. I was seated next to Dr. Dernburg. During the dinner he complained bitterly about his inability to place before the American public the German side of matters connected with the war. He stated that he thought a newspaper ought to be purchased for such purpose, and he said that unfortunately there were no funds at the disposal of the German officials for that purpose. He asked me whether, if funds could be obtained, I would act as broker in the matter, and with that end in view whether I would procure for him some data as to the financial standing of the various New York papers. A day or two later, I wrote him the report or letter which Mr. Palmer has made public. I had two motives in doing this, one to earn a commission, the other was to take advantage of an opportunity of obtaining a medium to combat prohibition sentiments. Dr. Dernburg did not acknowledge this letter, and I have never seen or heard from him since. I explained this to Major Biddle.

A month or so later, on July 10, 1918, I was requested over the 'phone to call upon Assistant United States District Attorney Harper.

I went at once to Mr. Harper's office and I was asked by him if I knew anything about the "Evening Mail" deal. I told him I did not.

He asked me if I knew Mr. Rumely. I told him I did not—that I had never met him. Also that I had never met Mr. Stoddard, and had never been inside the "Mail" office. Also that I had never had any connection direct or indirect with the paper.

Mr. Harper then asked me about the Dernburg letter. "Did I write the letter?" I replied in the affirmative.

He then asked me if I knew Dr. Albert. I answered that I did. I met him first in 1904 at the World's Fair at St. Louis. He then asked if I had had any correspondence with Dr. Albert. I answered that I had such correspondence. He asked me what it was. I told him to go to the 'phone and ask Mr. Brown, my confidential manager, to bring all files connected with Dr. Albert. Mr. Brown appeared with these files. I immediately handed them to Mr. Harper, without looking them over. I said, "Here are my Albert files, which you can keep."

Among this correspondence Mr. Harper found two letters which he asked me about.

One of these letters concerned a proposed prize-offer of $1,000 in connection with a statement that the German general staff never told a lie. The facts relating thereto are as follows: At a social gathering at Mr. Tauscher's house, Tauscher and Albert stated that the reports of the German general staff were always true and dependable, whereas the reports of the allies were not. I took issue with them and said "If you are so sure about this, why don't you offer a prize of $1,000 to anyone who can prove the contrary?" It was clear, as I pointed out to them, that if their statement was correct, the prize money would never have to be paid. Nothing ever came of my suggestion, and, when the facts are considered in connection with my letter to Dr. Albert, the full sense of the letter becomes clear.

Regarding the second letter, I did not know at the time what it referred to until I was able to go back to my files at the office to refresh my memory. I then found that it referred to a letter which my brother, Arnold Konta, of Budapest, had written me on January 12, 1915, asking if it would be possible to export wheat to Hungary. My brother also sent a memorandum of a statistical nature, which I have with me, of quantities of wheat then in Hungary. I then recalled that I had looked into this proposition, which was perfectly legitimate, to see if it could be carried out and began to inquire if steamers could be found. I discovered that everybody who was willing to go into a deal of this sort expected an enormous profit. Tauscher, with whom I spoke about it, thought Dr. Albert was the only man who could supply the financial support, and Tauscher promised to take the memorandum up with Albert. I quickly discovered that this proposition was not feasible and dropped the transaction.

I reasserted my desire to Mr. Harper to place all records at his disposal.

In respect to all my letters, it is perhaps but fair to me that I should say that I have been advised by my counsel and friends that the real source of the imputations made against me is my use of conventional continental phraseology. In other words, I ordinarily employ in my letters the somewhat exaggerated polite expressions which continentals expect, rather than the crisp business expressions to which we are accustomed in the United States.

Later, on August 12, 1918, I was telephoned to come up to the office of the Military Intelligence Department. It was about noon. I replied that I was very busy. They insisted I should come up immediately. "All right," said I. "If it must be, I will go up at once."

When I reached the office a gentleman who said he hailed from Boston, but whose name I do not recall, asked me if I could spare the whole afternoon. "Yes, if it must be," I replied.

We then went to luncheon, after which we drove up to the office of Mr. Garvan, Assistant to the Alien Property Custodian.

I was kept waiting in Mr. Garvan's office for an hour and a half. When I met Mr. Garvan, he asked me if I knew the Busch's. I told him what I knew about them.

He then produced the Dernburg letter. I told him all I knew about that letter.

Then the Boston gentleman asked me if I knew the maiden name of my mother-in-law.

Then Mr. Garvan insisted that I must tell him something about my private family affairs.

This I told him; I felt the question had nothing to do with the matter under consideration, yet I freely gave him the information he asked.

Mr. Garven ended the interview by saying:

Mr. Konta, we thought you knew something about certain matters, but we find you know nothing about them.

I heard nothing further about this matter until on September 19, 1918, over a month later, the Alien Property Custodian saw fit, in connection with his charges against the brewers and Mr. Arthur Brisbane, to publish the so-called Dernburg letter, as a discovery of his own.

What I have had to say up to this point concerns me personally, my American citizenship and my activity for our government in Hungarian affairs.

The question before your honorable Committee, as I understand it, is whether or not I had anything to do with the purchase of The Washington Times with moneys furnished by the brewers.

Upon that issue, I beg to state, in the first place, that I had nothing to do with it;—that I knew nothing about it.

My letter to Dernburg was written in March, 1915, two years before the United States entered the war, and the purchase of The Washington Times occurred in June, 1917, several months after the United States entered the war. There was no connection between the two.

I have never met Mr. Hearst in my life.

I have not seen, spoken to or communicated with Arthur Brisbane for over eight years.

I have read, in the press, the names of those who are said to have contributed to the fund with which The Washington Times was purchased.

George Ehret, $50,000. I have never met him.

C. Feigenspan, $25,000. I have never met him.

Julius Liebmann, $25,000. I have never met him.

J. C. G. Hupfel, $7,500. I think I met him once on the street, years ago.

Jacob Ruppert, $50,000. I do not know him. I think I met him once many years ago.

Joseph E. Uihlein, $50,000. I know him; but I met him last ten years ago.

Edward Lansberg, $15,000. I have never met him.

Reuter & Co., $15,000. I have never met Mr. Reuter.

A. J. Houghton, $10,000; William Hamm, $10,000. I have never met either of these gentlemen.

G. Pabst, $50,000. I know Mr. Pabst. I am connected with him by marriage. During the past eight years, I have met him only on rare occasions and mostly by accident.

Fred Miller Brewing Company, $15,000. I know Mr. Miller. The last time I met him, however, was about twelve years ago.

G. Schmidt & Sons, $5,000; F. A. Poth & Sons, $10,000; United States Brewers' Association, $30,000; Bergner & Engel, $10,000. I don't know any of these concerns.

I have never discussed with these persons or with any other persons the purchase of The Washington Times, or of any other newspaper.

You have requested me to produce letters or copies of letters from or to Dernberg, Albert, Fuehr, Brisbane and von Nuber. I never had any correspondence with Mr. Brisbane. I produce the only Dernberg letter. I produce my complete files of correspondence with Albert, Fuehr and von Nuber.

I have already explained the Albert letters. The Fuehr and von Nuber letters were social in character. So far as Mr. Fuehr is concerned, I met him a number of times socially at Mr. Taus.her's house. He was introduced to me as a historian of note who had just come from China, and I to him as the founder of the Modern Historic Records Association. I found him to be a man of considerable charm and one of the best read men that I have ever met. I took great pleasure in discussing matters of historical interest with him, particularly in their bearing upon the world war. Our correspondence was understood by me to relate solely to his historical research. If it has subsequently appeared that he had any other purpose, I knew nothing of it at that time and I know nothing of it now.
